CHUCRH MUST RECOGNIZE THE LABOR UNIONS.

—Says Rev. M Reese.

Let the Truth Prevail at All Times.

Rev. Theodore Irving Reese, rector of Trinity Episcopal church, and chairman of the state board of arbitration of Ohio, addressing the Brotherhood of St. John's Evangelical Prostestant church Wednesday night, declared that the labor movement was the biggest problem before the country today, and said it would not be solved 'until the church recognizes the fact that the spirit of Christ is in the movement."

Failure of the church to recognize the laboring men, Dr. Reese said, had caused a gap between the church and organised labor and had led the average working man to associate the church with capital. The blame for this condition, he said, rested upon the church.

"I belive in labor unions and if I were engaged in manual labor I certainly would be a union man," said Rev. Mr. Reese. "There is no question that laboring men can accomplish more with an organization than as individuals," he added.

"Before an adjustment of conditions can be made, I believe some arrangement must be devised whereby the workman shall not be so entirely dependent on his employer," continued Rev. M. Reese. "It may be a profit sharing plan, but certainly some method through which the workman will have an interest in the tools with which he works. The American workman does not care for gratitude, he wants justice."

Rev. Reverend Brother is a member of the State Board of Arbitration, and a paternal delegate to the Columbus Federation of Labor. This is no long distance verdict, its an expression caused which is the result of actual contact with the workers and their social conditions.

CHARGES LOCAL GREEKS USE THE PEONAGE SYSTEM.

There Is Something Rotten Somewhere.

That a trust, formed to import Greek boys to Columbus and other Ohio cities to work in shoeshing parlors, lunchrooms, pool rooms and moving picture shows is thought to have headquarters in Columbus, was developed late Tuesday afternoon when United States Immigration Inspector Jacob Brodie of Pittsburg filed suit in federal court against Gust, James and William Chekeres, Greek brothers in Columbus, charging them with violation of the government immigration laws.

This is an important issue with the workers. The man who cannot speak the language of the country, he wishes to exist in, generally becomes a victi of circumstnces. The CASE will be watched and WE shall watch your actions, Mr. Big Interests.

TWO LIABILITY BILLS TO BE CONSIDERED.

The Employer's Liability Commission.

Mr. Committe we await your verdict We dont want any legislation copied from Europe. We believe, that the United States is large enough, for any man to study the Labor problem and, furthermore we demand that your decisions be reached from plain facts, instead of figures of foreign statistician. We demand justice and not juggleery.

Workers remember that "eternal vagilance is the watchword of liberty."

SAYS LABEL IS COUNTERFEIT.

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.—A number of manufacturers of this city have counterfeited the union label, according to a statement made today to District Attorney Whitman by Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Gompers requested that the matter be taken before the grand jury and he supplied a list of accused firs.

Yes, the Union Label is all right, when it comes to make profit for the Master class.

When, it comes to paying the wages and giving the conditions, represented by the Union Label, Mr. Kirby Jr. denounces its use as being "Un American."

"SERVANTS LOVE THY MASTERS."

One of the unemployed applied for a "job in one of our local plants.

If "you" would vote for the man who has the money you would not be out of work, said the kindly employer.

What about Mr. Taft's "sunshine prosperity cigs," "Standpatism" and "Let-Weel-Enough-Aloneism?"

The Gold Brick, and Green Goods men, play the same game yet they tell us that law, is no respector of persons.

Work is a somethin introduced into life to keep people out of mischief. If Father Adam had had a job, and worked at it, he couldn't have satisfied his appetite with an apple.

Inconsistency is a leading characteristic of the American people. Collectively, the residents of a town or city are proud if on the census sheet and individually, they try to kill it on the tax duplicate.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF AN UNDESIRABLE.

Consistency plays a mighty minor role in the play that is being enacted enacted throughout the world today. We find diners in the restaurants and cafes putting vinegar on their lettuce to make it sour, then adding sugar to mke it sweet; we find men who have discovered that smoking hurts their throats, taking edmicine to cure their throats that they may smoke the more.

Which, possibly, is excusably inconsistant. It may not be criminally inconsistant because those oddities in human nature effect simply individuals.

Inconsistency, however, is a word altogether too weak, too feroceless to express that characteristic in human nature, which, on one hand seeks to better the world and the world's people, and, on the other hand, would cause people to kill each other because certain groups of human beings do not, as organizations, agree with each other.

If "eggs is eggs", then, to be logical, "murder are murder."

It is as much murder to kill people by the thousands as it is to kill them one at a time. That's consistent logic isn't it?

Just now any number of patriots for dishnue only, politicians of the pra[illegible]nal and criminal type, are clamoring for a greater navy, a larger standing army. Why? Simply because they fear that another nation will outdo the United States, in the manufacture and launching of million dollar man-killing war vessels; because they fear some other nation will fit out a few more soldiers.

Would! you believe a man, who carried a revolver in each hip pocket, two or three daggers in his belt, and a club in each hand, if he would tell you that he did it in order to prevent trouble with those whom he met?

Then, why, in the name of common sense, is one to take seriously the argument that preparation for war is the surest guarantee of peace?

War is just what Sherman said. Great navies and large standing armies are chips on nations' shoulders. They teach the child, who should learn lessons of peace, the lessons of strife. They create, instead of a love for fellowmen-at-large, an idolatry for heroes. They lose sight of the fact that men are equal, or should be, and single out individuals for respect and aggrandizement.

And still the children at this time are taught, in Sunday schools, in churches, from the lecture platform, in the public schools and from the lips of politicians, who indulge in sacred things for votes, that the spirit "Peace on Earth Good Will to Men" is the right spirit.

It is.

But—

Where's the consistency in the two lessons? Water and oil, it has been learned, may be mixed; these contrary principles, never.

They produce mental and moral indigestion. They curdle the milk of human kindness.

Rockerfeller's money is a disturbing medium. It bothers him to know how to get rid of it and it bothers college professors to know how to get hold of it.

Labor will never win its battle for justice until it takes advantage of the opportunities with which it is afforded. If employers from different parts of the country could afford to take their time and spend their money to attend the recent hearings in Columbus before the Ohio State Liability Commission, there should have been enough employes in attendance at the sessions to pack any hall in which the meetings were held. There are thousands of employes in Columbus. Those who attended could have been counted in scores.

A man is injured in a wreck. Among the first persons to reach him are the doctor and the claim agent. One tries to save his life and the other endeavors to explain to him that he isn't hurt. The first will have to be paid but he, at least in theory, will give value for money he collects. The latter comes on a business mission, purely. He represents privatd interests that mourn not because an employe or one for whose safety the interests are responsible is in misfortune but because his injury may lower dividends. It is the claim agent's business to get a settlement satisfactory to himself and to those whom he represents before the unfortunate one knows the extent of his misfortune.

Isn't it odd that men applaud when a firm shares dividends with its employe's. It is odd because many of the men who applaude, are afraid to believe that the common ownership of that firm's business would be a good thing.

M.LK GOES TO 8 CENTS; BLAME THE CITY.

Cream for the capitalist, Blue John for the Working Class.

There is a possibility that the price of milk for Columbus consumers will be raised to 8cents a quart by all milk distributors in the city. One distributing agency, the Moores & Rose Co., notified its patrons last Saturday night that the price would be raised to that figure on December 15.

Other distributors in the city stated Saturday that they had not yet decided to make the change.

Mr. Moores of the Moores & Rose Co. stated Saturday:

"The sanitary regulation imposed by the city health board, which provides that all milk shipped into the city must come up to a specified bacteriological standard, is largely responsible for our raising the price. We are not trying to form a milk combine to boost the price, but we haven't been making any money all winter at 7 cents a quart. This new price of 8 cents will probably remain until next spring."

This concern recently increased its capital stock evidently, thinking it more profitable to water the stock than the milk.

The raise of price of milk to 8 cents per quart is necessary to pay dividends on the watered stock. But the working class are easy, and we tumble for the game.

Don't you think that a municipal milk depot would be profitable to the mothers and babies of this City?

THE TALE OF A PAIR OF SHOES.

Two cases, whereby a question of the equity of the law is at stake, presents itself with the following facts:

Two years back an employee of the Pan Handle shops, was sentenced to one year in the penitentiary for the heinous crime of buying a pair of army shoes.

Recently we heard of a State Printing Graft, the press demanded that the criminals be brought to justice.

Recently the Supreme Protectorate of Hivator Attendant has declared the Graft indictments unconstitutional

There is an old maxim which runs "Birds of a feather, flock together."

CIGAR MAKERS.

Smoking gives men lots of pleasure. Those who smoke should demand the Blue Label. It stands for good quality and cleanliness in the manufacture. Don't forget that a member of the Cigar Maker's Union was hung by a mob of infuriated bosses, because the victim was in Tampa, Fla., to organise the workers so that they could obtain better social conditions.

MILWAUKEE FOR THE PEOPLE!

Milwaukee for the people, is the motto of the Socialist administration in Milwaukee, and under the influence of the city government the people of the city are having a fine awakening and are beginning to wonder why they did not do things for themselves in all the past years. Two notable things that have happened in Milwaukee recently are the municipal Sunday afternoon concerts and the municipal Saturday night dances. Both have been sucesses beyond expectations almost. Everybody is delighted and the old idea that a big city must be hopelessly vile and demoralizeng is passing out of people's head. A new hope is taking its place. And it is all to the glory of the Social-Democrats—formerly despised groundlings who have risen to power and put the people again on guard. When the Socialists get the municipal house put in order Milwaukee will be again a safe place for people to live in and to bring up children in.

Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast—it makes for civilization and individual ennoblement. A city cannot have too much of it. Wholesome recreation is as necessary to young people as fresh air and the right to laugh and smile at life. But if they must dance, or hold their parties or become acquainted in a sewer no one can hope that they will stay altogether clean. A fortunate fraction of the young people can always have parties and swell functions, and so on, but not so the children of the working class as a rule. And the department store, the factory and the shindy dance have seemed to be indissolubly bound up together. But the Socialists have scorned the fatality of such an idea.

And so midst the many things for the betterment of mankind and the government of the city that the Milwaukee Socialist administration has necessarily had its hands full of, the two things referred to above have been brouht to the fore.

Milwaukee has a big Auditorium building which was being used almost exclusively for swallow tail affairs, business shows, shyhigh-priced operas, etc., with a bewilderment of automobiles, limosines and autocabs shining round the building evening after evening, and the Socialists felt the wrong of it. They wanted it to be a house of the people, not a spoil of the wealthy.

A resolution went through the city council, a symphony orchestra was engaged, and a popular Sunday concert of the choicest music announced at a 10-cent admission. It won't pay, the croaker said, but they misjudged the people. There was a crowd in the big auditorium the first Sunday and for seven Sundays since the crowds have been growing larger until the building is taxed to capacity. Even the first Sunday the three thousand seats were practically filled.

So with the municipal dances. The Socialists found that there was a man in charge of playground work in Rochester that they wanted. Eventually the ygot him and it befell that an Association of Public Play and Social Education was organized to bring in various public spirited citizens. A municipal dance was planned to take place at the Auditorium, but at the last minute the aforesaid public spirted citizens got cold feet, and the plan nearly fell through. The Socialists administration was watchful, however, and came to the rescue. The first dance was held, and the success wan intaantaneous. The expenses were $125 and admission, at 20 cents each, including wardorbe, brought in $350! Just the people came who were wanted. It was in every way a success. And last Saturday evening the second municipal dance attracted such a crowd that three dance halls instead of two had to be provided, with separate dance music for each, AND ONE THOUSAND PEOPLE HAD TO BE TURNED AWAY! This coming Saturday evening the big Auditorium hall itself will be utilized, with its vast dance floor and tier on tier of seats around the amphitheater that will seat several thousand who may wish to look on as well as dance.

A rather amusing thing in connection with the municipal dance has been the fact that one Milwaukee paper, the Free Press, frightened at the popularity of the practical work of the Social-Democratic administration has published something like a half dozen editorials, all of a more or less hysterical nature, warning the people that the dance which it calls a great success is in no way connected with the administration, but that the credit belongs to the aforesaid public spirited citizens. On the other hand, several newspapers round the country, notably the New York Times, a copy of which is at my elbow as this is written, are printing editorials to scout the idea of a municipal dance because it would tend to level social ranks and mix up muslin shirtwaists and crepe e chine toilettes. Such a fear would meet only with smiles in Mulwaukee—the problem is not one of clothes but of people.

Milwaukee for the people. Milwaukee to LIVE in. Milwaukee is making good!

Whoever would place the dollar above manhood is a traitor to his country and a curse to the human race.

The poor politicians worked mighty hard for the people druing the recent campaign, and now the most of them who were elected will go to work for themselves.

The past twenty years have marked a wonderful progress in Socialism, and the measure most popular with the people today are those which are most Socialistic. The Post-office, Public School, etc., are good examples.

THE INTERCOLLEGIATE SOCIALIST SOCIETY

Annual Convention, Dec. 29 — 30.

The Christmas holiday will offer an event of considerable note and much interest to collegians in the form of the SECOND ANNUAL CONVENTION of the Intercollegiate Socialists Society, to be held in New York City on Thursday and Friday, December 29—30.

The New York Alumni Chapter will entertain the visiting delegates at a reception on Thursday evening, Dec. 29, in a quaint old studio at 90 Grove St., where Lincoln Steffens, the well-known publicist, will deliver an address of welcome. This occasion will afford the delegates an opportunity to meet many persons of prominence in the social and Socialist movements.

On Friday morning the Executive Session will take place in the Library of the Rand School of Social Science, 112 East 19th St. J. G. Phelps Stokes, President of the Society, will open the meetaing, at which reports from delegates of the various chapters will be heard and methods of organization and procedure discussed.

The Friday afternoon session, from 1—4 o'clock, will be devoted to an addres on "What Socialism Is," by John Spargo, author of "The Bitter Cry of the Children," "Socialism," etc., etc., to be followed by questions and general discussion.

The culminating feature of the Conference will be the dinner on Friday evening, 6:30 o'clock, at Xalil's Restaurant, 16 Park Place. The topic for the evening will be "THE PLACE OF COLLEGE MEN AND WOMEN IN THE SOCIALIST MOVEMENT." An enlightening treatment of the subject is ensured by the presence of the following list of speakers: Dr. Albert Sudekum, for eleven years Socialist member of the German Reichstag; Mrs. Florence Kelley, well-known in the field of labor Legislature; Upton Sinclair, Socialist author; Franklin H. Wentworth, speaker and writer; Miss Elisabeth Dutcher (Vassar, 1901), especially active in the Woman's Trade Union movement; and Walter Lippman (Harvard, 1909), formerly President of the Harvard Socialist Club. J. G. Phelps Stokes will preside.

Among the colleges where affiliated Chapters for the study of Socialism exist are: Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Cornell, Barnard, Wellesley, the City of New York, New York University Law School and the New York School of Dentistry; the Universities of Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, Washington and Oklahoma, Stanford University, Clark College, Kansas State Agricultural College, Marietta College Meadville Theological School and other institutions.

The Society was organized in 1905 "to promote an intelligent interest in Socialism among college men and women." Its headquarters are at Room 901, Wilden Building, 105, W. 40th St., N. Y. City, Telephone, Bryant 4696. Harry W. Laidler (Wesleyan, 1907) is the organizer. The officers and members of the Executive Committee are: J. G. Phelps Stokes, President; Upton Sinclair, 1st Vice-President; Miss Elsie Lag. Cole, 2nd Vice-President; Morris Hillquit, Treasurer; Algernon Lee, Secretary. Executive Committe: Mrs. Jessica G. Finch, Rene B. Hoguet, Miss Jessie Wallace Hughan Paul Kenpady, Harry W. Laidler, Ernest Poole, Miss Ida Rauh, Miss Mary R. Sandford and Miss Helen Phelps Stokes.

THOSE QUESTION MARKS.

The union strikers and their friends in Los Angeles asked for a perit to a parade. It was grantde on conditions most humiliating. The police forbade the display of banners with inscriptions like the following on them:

"Workers, unite," "Join the union and at the sae time better conditions," "They did it in Milwaukee; We can do it in Los Angeles," Capital orgainses to keep labor from orgainising," "Los Angeles for the workers in 1911," "Labor united industrially and politically is invinvible," "Unionism and Socialism a united force," "Join the union and demand the label."

There was nothing to do, under the circumstances, but submit to this tyranny at least for the moment. As a substitute for the police - censored transparences, the striking and locked out union men carried banners displaying nothing but big question marks on them. Judging from the ten thousand votes cast for the Socialist Party candidate, a few days after, a good many people in Los Angeles are beginning to understand what those question marks meant.

Socialism will make homes for the people instead of destroying them.

The whole theory and system of conservation of the national resources is a confession of the need of socialism. It is all for the purpose of protecting the present and coming generations from the rapacious greed of capitalism.

If it were true that the Socialists were opposed to marriage, but were in favor of everybody sloshing about with everybody else indiscriminately, three-fourths of the men would be in the party by the next Presidential campaign.

The Columbus Motor Car Transportation Company

Incorporated for $100,000.00 under the laws of the State of Ohio.

Its object is to install a Motor Bus Line in Columbus, that will surpass anything ever attempted before, in SPEED, SAFETY, RELIABILITY, ELEGANCE and COMFORT.

7 tickets for 25 cents to start, and cheaper as soon as practical is what is planned.

Recent tests made prove the MOTOR BUS to be the future means of CITY PASSENGER TRANSPORTATION.

The Columbus Motor Transportation Company will put it within the power of the citizens to furnish transportation for themselves, and at the same time show an earning on their investment.

With small capital we can establish a better passenger service, than the trolley car affords. The trolley, with their slipper tracks and dangerous overhead wires will disappear from the cities streets. The independant MOTOR CAR will take its place.

Opposed to Socialism

MI POLICIES.

By (Fair Fac's.)

Feller Citysenes:—En answer to the numerous appeals uf mi friends i agin tak up mi pen to rite en defense of the constitushun and "Mi Policies", agin Socialisum " which wont work."

Elected as i just wus bi the dimocrat party as a induvitshulist en a firm believer in "Mi Policies" and Jefferson principls, (which are dead) i hope our citisens will now prepare 'emselves on give me thr hearty support en putting "Mi Policies in active operashun and profe to the nashun thet Socialism," wont work."

Saying it miself, (it woud hev ben a difficult matter for our townsfolk to hev elected an Induvitshulist better qualified then miself, to go forth in this glourious struggle agin Socialishun, "which wont work," as i voted for Jackson (hoo is ded.)

Hol look back in the past, and think uv the "days uf the dadies", how prowdly marched in prad in the Jackson first Voters Club, escortin' Him from the depo to the speakers stand; en after the speakin', shook Hi bi the band, and how he admonished me the remark. "Opposer (thet wus befor i wus General) stick to the principals uf the dimocrat party even unto death.

"Mi Policies," agin Socialishun," which wont work", so termed bi our public press, because they wux originated bi me, after years uf careful study of the subject, are now being tried, thanks to your enlightened intelligence in electing me Mayor.

Es i hev givin' a great deel uf study to the subject et hand, it hes also givin, me great deal uf worry and uneasyness, es folks now a dass read and think to much bi 'mselves, this makes et rather difficult for them to see the practibility of "Mi Policies" put into active operashun, en the good thet will result frum them.

But friends, opposed to Socialism, "which wont work", knowing thet we are fightin' this terrible evil openly, thu "Mi policies" are riting me frum all over the nashun, asting how much progress we are making agin this dreadful evil e nasting for printed copies uf "Mi Policies" agin Socialisum" "which wont work", es they are somewhat alarmed over the late election returns en from general reports this great evil is making rapid progress.

Gladly, do i sent em advise just et hand, en printed copies uf "Mi Policies" agin Socialisum 'which wont work", soe they can put it down in its infancy. Friends this wood be a labor uv love ef they wood only sent stamps to cover reutrn postage, or insist thet the guvernment grant me the frankling privilege.

But we must sacrifice for the cause, for only in making Jefferson principals en Jackson ideas, (which are both ded), livin' issues; can we combat this rising evil Socialisum, "which wont work", uf which the ignorance is sumething appalling.

Beings i'm a dimocrat which voted for Jackson, (hoo is now ded) en Jefferson principles, (which are both ded); i'm well qualified to speak uf the ded past, en how we applied those principles, as sed forth in "Mi Policies".

Bo i sed at the teachers meeting at the skoolhouse the other evening, "I firmly believe in the principles uf the "Ded past", es i belive in theresurrection uf the ded." And one uf thers smart teachers hoo wants to vote, becus she sed, "We men he made such a poor job uf it," sed, "Yes I belive it, as you've been voting grave stones for the past twenty years." For a oment the truthfulness uf hec remarks floored me, but being murried en a practical man, i didn't answer back, but i belive thet woman needs watching, es she noes to much politikes.

In "Mi Policies", es originated bi me, we are nnow making rapid progress backwards, i hev now coined a slogan thet we intend to use, in the forth coming battle agin this coming evil, socialisum "which wont work", en under the railing cry uf "Back to the dass uf the dadies en indulitshulisum", we will cary the nation, en then agin put into living practice the principles uf Jefferson en Jackson, (hoo i voted for) 'en (which are both ded.)

But some uf mi friends contend thet this slogan is not enough to fight this evil with en say thet we must use more practikal methods, en i believe with them, en shall give our townsfolks a practikal illustrashun uf how we conducted things in dass of the dadies, the days wen we hado n trusts en no socialists. Those were the dass of the good old induvitshulists, the days uf Jefferson en Jackson, hoo i voted for ("en which are both ded").

But friends et hes ben a hard fight, en et times i 'we wavered en those principles so dear to me. Oh, et's ben a hard fight with the republikans eternally, holding office, therbi addeting the growth uf this collectivesim; en we the tru exponents uf the peoples cause. Democrasy en induvitshulism, standing et the other end of the ple counter-waiting.

Opportunities to betray the peoples cause embodied in the principles uf Jefferson and Jackson, (hoo i voted for) en (which are both ded), hes ben numerous. I say, sometimes i've wavered but wen i entered the election booth, feeling like a traitor et heart with the sacred ballot en mi hand; i wood for a moment gaze effecshunatly et our party emblem—the rooster, en then the sad face uf Jackson (hoo is now ded) wood come before me en i'd imagine thet he'd say, "Opposer stick to the principals uf Democrasy even unto death" en then i'd put mi mark beneath that noble foul, our glorius party emblem thet i've voted for, for so any years. En i'd feel relieved es mi conscious wood dictate to e "Saved agin from party treason."

In this coming campaign, Democrasy must save this nashun from this evil Socialisum "which wont work" en which es becoming a serious problem, es the hev elected a Mayor in Milwaukee becuse we departed from the teachings uf Jefferson en Jackson(hoo i voted for) en which are both ded; en bi keeping the republikans eternally in office. Just think on et.

This has grived me sorely, en God nos the suffering thet i've gone thru, en the agony, en thet et hes caused me, fearing thet the like might happen in our own town.

I ast you Feller Citysens to be with me en this grand en noble work in combating Socialisum "which wont work," en induvitshul Dimocrats, resuurecting the princtiples uf Jefferson en Jackson (hoo i voted for) en which are both ded.

I'm agin this Socialisum "which wont work", because et es unamerican, en wus imported frum urope bi the pauper labor the the steel trust en railroad agents hired, en shipped over here becuse americas labor wus so scarse en woodn't work cheap, soe the steel trust en railroad cood make bigger dividends en more prosperity for themselves.

Es furthermore et hes never ben tried bi eny other country en i "General Opposer" heva't got the time, beings i'm Mayor, to try et out to see whether et wood work.

En then i'm agin et because the republikans party es responsible for et, bi allowing et to be imported duty free Just think on et, Oh Feller Citysens, of the republikan party from Grant down cuif hev only seen this terrible foria importhesus, they cuild hev saved us from eis way, in heving put a tarif on it so high that et could not hev entered our shores, en uf et hed, only the rich cuid hev affreded et es luxorry. En for once they cuid hev hed i vote, en i "General Opposer", cuid hev layed mi weary hed down in pease, feeling assured uf Jackson forgiveness, en resting easy in the princi- uf Jefferson en Jackson, (hoo i voted for) en which are both ded.

It truly hed ben a long struggle en the cause of "individualism but I ast you to bear with me. En mi next letter i shell tak up en show one of "Mi Policies" in active operashun.

PROPERTY CLAUSE MAKES NEGRO ALIEN RACE.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 20. — This country is destined to have an alien race in its midst, in the opinion of leading Richmond lawyers, unless a decision rendered by Judge Goff in the Federal Court here is sustained by the higher courts.

Judge Goff held, in effect, that clauses which appear in many deeds precluding the conveyance of property to negroes invalid, the decision being rendered in the case of the People's Pleasure Park Company against John Worsman, of Philadelphia.

It is declared that the clause against the eventual sale of property to negroes will become general, and that if negroes are not permitted to buy property their present holdings will eventually revert to the white people.

The case will oubtless be taken to the United States Supreme Court for final settleent.

WHAT OF THE MODERN NEWSPAPER?

Today it subserves two mighty class interests—Capital and Labor.

The power of Capitalism is manifest in the great majority of the dailies and perioddicals of the country. By means of its mighty influence the producing class—the wage workers of the world have been led like dumb beasts to the Shambles.

The Capitalist press has infused the virus of its being into the working class until our civilization is sick unto death with crime, degradations and poverty.

Of late the capitalist press seeks to palliate its crime against society, by saying to the working class that "the interests of capital and labor are identical," endeavoring to forge their chains more securely.

In the divine plan of human redemption the scheme of evolution will solve the workingman's problem for a betterment here on the earth. The newspaper, too, will play its part in the great work of propoganda.

Already the Socialist press is swaying the multitude of workingmen. Hallelulahs of victory resound throughout the world.

The jail sentence of Fred D. Warren is the seal of freedom to 20-millions of wage slaves.

The Socialist press today is more than a match for Capitalism with all its boasted strength.

The Capitalist press is continually deceiving the people along industrial and economic lines of thought and constantly, beclouding issues, about which the public should be enlightened.

Note the following for a comprehensivn explanation of this thought by

CHARLES EDWARD RUSSELL
In "The Coming Nation."

Making Newspaper Opinion

In the last sixty days the railroads of the United States must have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in newspaper advertising.

Every nespaper reader must have noticed how all of a sudden the pages blossomed forth with huge advertisements of railroads that had not advertised before and had nothing to advertise now.

All the influential dailies in the larger cities were the recipients of these unprecedented favors. Apparently if a railroad company could think of nothing else to advertise it advertised its name.

What did all this sudden activity mean?

It meant that the railroads had a certain scheme they wish to carry out; that they desired the support of the newspapers for that scheme; that they understood quite well how completely the newspaper policy is controlled by the newspaper's advertising; that they acted directly and intelligently upon that knowledge.

With what result?

I did not myself see one newspaper that opposed the railroad scheme and I saw many that endorsed it; and that, I believe, represents the general condition.

In other words, you can now buy the average newspaper's opinions by buying its advertising space.

Is not this a grand fact in a country supposed to possess a free press, and with that free press to defend its other guaranteed rights?

And if you can buy newspaper support or newspaper silence for one scheme, why cannot you buy it for any scheme that has enough money behind it to pay for the requisite amount of advertising?

And when you read any opinion on any subject in any average newspaper how do you know whether it is the opinion of the journal's editor or an opinion purchased through the advertising columns?

And when you read an account of any event in any average newspaper, how do you know whether the event occured as related or whether the account has been procured or colored or distorted to suit the wishes of some person or persons that have purchased advertising space?

And under such conditions why do you pay the slightest heed at any time to anything you read on any subject under the heavens in any capitalist newspaper?

For the chances are much more than even that however innocent it may appear to be it has been doctored or colored or perverted in just the manner and for just the reason that I have described.

These are the facts about the American journalism of the day. I leave you to judge how much show reform lies among newspaper readers that are daily regaled with a menu of lies cadrefully prepared in behalf of the interests.

How the Scheme Succeeded.

As in the case I have just mentioned; for what was this scheme that [illegible]road Interests were trying to [illegible]ugh with the assistance of the [illegible]trolled by large ad[illegible]

[illegible]me to secure from the Inter-State Commerce Commission an authorization to increase freight rates.

And what will be the result of the scheme? They told me in Washington that the Commission would grant the railroad's request. On what ground? On the ground that there seemed to be no opposition on the part of the public.

That is why newspapers were throttled through their advertising columns.

Why the Increase Is Wanted.

Still the Commission, I was told, will not be unanimous on the subject. It will stand four to three, because three of the Commissioners understand exactly the game that is afoot.

So I was told. I hope it is true about the understanding of the three Commissioners because the game is the culmination of forty years of despicable tricks played on the public by the American railroad companies; this being the most despicable.

Why do the railroads wish to raise rates at this time when they are already making 7.8 per cent annual profits on their total capitalization, water, fraud, bunco and all? More than half of their capitalization is pure water and even on that they make from the present rates 7.3 per cent a year in profits. Why do they want more tribute?

This is why they want it.

The capitalization of the American railroads is now increasing at the rate of about one billion dollars a year.

This capitalization is for the most part issued by the insiders merely for their own benefit. By means of so-called "rights" they secure it at a low price and immediately sell it to the public at a high price, clearing from the process millions of profits.

The capitalization so issued consists of stocks and bonds.

On stocks and bonds there must be paid interest and dividends. Therefore, the more capitalization is issued the more the revenue must be increased to meet the increased interest and dividends.

The only way the revenue can be increased is by increasing the rates and thereby gouging more money from the people.

In other words, the ability of the insiders to continue the most pleasant and profitable practice of issuing stocks and bonds to themselves depends upon their ability to raise rates. And that is all there is to it.

Hence the advertising in the newspapers, hence the newspaper silence about the game, hence the loot, hence the inevitable results upon the public.

For, from this increase of freight rates there will come as surely as the sun shines another huge increase in the cost of living, and this increase will bear most heavily upon those least able to bear it, and from the whole thing a further decline in the standard of living of the working class upon which alone is based any true prosperity or true national health.

So far as the newspapers made any mention of the Warren case they universally spoke of it as a conviction for "the improper use of the mails."

Observe the ingeunity of this device. In the average mind the phrase at once creates an impression of some offense too bad to be spoken of. "Improper use of the mails"—that must mean something indecent. Probably the man had been guilty of sending obscence literature or worse. From the first suggestion the idea would probably grow until a considerable part of the community would be firmly of the opinion that Mr. Warren had been tryig to corrupt the morals of the young and had been caught and justly punished.

For it is to be remembered that the capitalist press has never published any explanation of the case, has never given any succinct account of the charges, nor of the trial, nor of the decision, but has steadily and consistently labored to spread the notion that Mr. Warren was an offender of the worst kind. No one reading these papers could ever suspect that the "improper use of the mails" in his case was an attempt to determine whether the rights guaranteed by the constitution of the country had been entirely broken down for the benefit of a circle of rich and powerful men determined to destroy three labor leaders.

Yet exactly this is the fact.

Always an Engine of Reaction.

It is always difficult in the cases to determine from the appearance of the printed dispatches exactly how far the work of distorting the news is done by the editors and how far by that hoary transgressor, the Associated Press. In this instance both seem to have done their worst. As a general rule you can rely with implicit confidence upon the Associated Press as an engine of the reactionary forces. Whether the news concerns the downfall of monarchy in Portugal or a revolution in Russia or the manoeuvers of the American railroads to gouge more tribute, the Associated Press is always the handy tool of the powers that be. The country had very grave cause to complain of it at the time of the Pearer assination and I cannot now recall one instance since in which the Associated Press has not sought to put the worst [illegible] upon the people's cause and the bes[illegible] the cause of the monarchs, rulers [illegible] exploiters.

There is in all the world no other power so tremendous as this, for every day it colors and directs the thoughts of many millions of people all about the civilized globe. To have it conducted with all this ardor on the side of reaction and age[illegible] something that should give us cause for serious reflection.

Press Reports of Mexican Revolt.

A very good illustration of its operation was afforded by the present revolt in Mexico. Working newspaper men have called my attention to the singular fact that after the first outbreak the news of the affair was most obviously doctored and censored. At one moment it was evident that the situation in Chihuahua, for example, was most menacing. Immediately thereafter came a flood of official and evidently fallacious denials, and from that time all the news that came was of one order.

To see what this means we have only to reflect that the most powerful influences of America have huge investments in Mexico, that these investments are endangered by the revolt, and that to these same influences the Associated Press always keeps very close in its news policy. That seems to make the mystery exceedingly clear.

The following article taken from the Christian Socialist of the 15th inst. sets forth so forcibly the conditions complained of that we reproduce the same and commend it to the careful consideration of our readers. It is not inapplicable to conditions in Columbus.

Thanksgiving and Christmas seasons are made hideous with beggary. The joy that one should be privileged to feel on these occasions is changed to sorrow and disgust for weeks before these days of should-be joy and feasting come.

This morning on the way to the city a 12-year old boy stood at the front of the car and called out in a frightful, singsong, nasal tone the story of the newsboys' poverty and toil and begged for money in his cap to them. Whether the money every reaches the newsboys' treasury or not, the boys who collect it appear needy enough, though they may be merely the agents of fraudelent men who obtain rich harvests in this way.

Yesterday a distressed looking crippled blind man stood in the front of the car and recited his tale of woe, and often on the street one sees a hideous old woman, or a pitiful cripple either begging or selling some trifle, which is but another form of beggary.

In the central part of the city the situation is far worse. On each of the four street corners at scores of the crossings stands one or more grotesquely dressed man or woman representing a Santa Claus, with receptacle for coin in the form of a goose chimney, a kettle, etc., begging for money to furnish a "free beging for money to furnish a "free Christmas dinner for the poor." On some cornersthere are others midway of the block. At one crossing there were six, and on one block there were nine. All these self-sacrificing, obliging and persistent beggars have to be paid for this "work", for it is no fun to stand there all day in the cold with impatient feet aching icily, trying to collect the coin with which to pay their salaries for weeks—and buy one dinner for a limited number of the poor! And this monstrous mockery of "Christian benevolence" goes on for weeks before the holidays.

We do not blame these pious beggars, especially as they show their sense of humiliation by masking themselves, for of course "the suffering poor" only need one or two meals a year, while these industrious collectors need their wages right along.

When one arrives at his office the relief is of short duration, for soon a black cloud with silver lining breaks into the room and a delegation from the Catholic "Sisters of St. So and So" have come to see how much he will give them for Christmas. They are fairly out of sight when the dapper, business-like representatives of "Associated Charities", which organisation is trying to raise two hundred thousand dollars to keep the poor of Chicago from starving and freezing to death during this "exceedingly properous" winter, come to urge their claims.

By this time if a man has any heart, he is unspeakably miserable and completely broke; and if he has any intelligence he is in a state of measureless disgust and desperate rebellion.

And "when the toils of the day are over" and the harrassed and bulldozed citizens returns to the "haven of rest called home," he is brought painfully and suddenly up face to face with the problem of how to get suitable presents for wife and the children and the friends, all of whom he would like to remeber royally, but whom he really can afford to remeber only in heart rather than in hard cash. And he almost wishes that either he or Christmas had not come to earth at all.

And, finally having run the gauntlet of beggars everywhere, and the claims of the dear ones near and far for three or four terrible, heart-breaking, desperate weeks, when he sits down to his holiday dinner of roast turkey, chicken, rabbit, beef, or whatever he has had money or credit enough left to provide if he is killed, horrible thought that he is but a selfish brute feasting in the presence of a city full of helpless, hopelessly suffering poor. And the thought chokes his appetite from his throat and makes him deadly sick-unless he hardens his heart as a true son of capitalism and says to himself. "Let the poor rot in their misery. I intend to enjoy myself."

And thus the horrors of the brutish, insane capitalist system sits upon one's stomach as a frightful nightmare and tortures one's soul like a grinning death's head at the feast, destroying the natural joy of the haoliday season and arousing a disgust and despar so deep that life seems not worth the living—unless there is a speedy escape from this dreadful social wilderness of crime and want.

And however, unwelcome and unpleasant the task may be, we Socialists propose to drive lazy ease and selfish enjoyment from the feast of brutish men and even intensify the horror of the truly generous until society in general realizes that robbers at the top inevitably mean paupers at the bottom and misery and crime everywhere.

No true man can be truly happy till all people are.

LET US ALL UNITE, RICH AND POOR, TO OVERTHROW THIS INSane UNHAPPY, BRUTISH, HELLISH SYSTEM.

This is our Christmas message in the name of him for whom there was "no room" when He was born, "no place to lay his His head" while living, and but a cruel cross on which to die; but who gave His life for the Truth of Justice and Good News to the Poor which shall at last make all people free.

THE KINSHIP OF CHRISTIANITY WITH SOCIALISM.

One of the so-called arguments against Socialism hertofore constantly met with, has been that the Socialist movement was anti-religious and opposed to organized Christianity. This argument has been taken seriously by many people who are unacquainted with the spirit of the movement. Among Socialists, the objection seems so baseless as nôt to require even passnotice. For the benefit of our non-Socialist friends, it may be well enough to say that the Socialist party does not deal with the question of one's religion, because, being a party of the broadest liberty, it leaves all matters of a religious character to the individual. It knows no church nor creed. It is broader than any sect because it recognizes the brotherhood of man throughout the world. Socialism viewed from any angle is the greatest movement of this or any other age. Looked at from the spiritual or religious standpoint, it is beautiful beyond description. The Socialists hunger and thirst after righteous conditions. Is that godlessness? The Socialists are the advocates of mercy. And shall they not then obtain mercy? The Socialists hate what is common, base and greedy. nd shall they not be God's children? Heretofore they have been despised and persecuted on all sides. nd shall God condemn them for this? They lay up for themselves no treasures on earth and declare war on money-getting. And shall they not belong to God? They do what God from the beginning has demanded of his witnesses: they open their whole hearts to the poor and the oppressed. And shall they be without God?

In truth there is nothing that shows up the present godlessness of Christendom so clearly as this reproach which is thrown in the faces of the Social Democrats. Too truthfully has it been said that Christianity, as now constituted, has lived its self-satisfied life from century to century without bothering itself about the poor, otherwise than to throw them the hard bread of alms. It hardly thinks of the commands of the Gospel on its every page to dispel the power of the evil and sin. It serves God with all possible anxiety for salvation, but it forgets from age to age that God recognises ture service only in conquering evil and in loving the poor and lowly. It dreams its sweet dreams over its dogams and ceremonies—and lo, were God awakes it, through the thunder of the social revolution, the first word that Christianity can murmur through its sleepy lips is—"godlessness!"

What! A movement that bears the seal of the living God so clearly on its forehead, that takes so earnestly and literally those ideas that are the commands of His word, that proclaims itself so unmistakeably the foe of His great foe, Mammon—this movement called godless by the champions of the Christian faith?

The old idea was that to make people good they should be kept in poverty. Socialism says that to be good men must be happy. Socialism would change material surroundings and make them far better than they are. Men are not bad from natural tendencies. As a rule they are only so when forced by circumstances from the correct path. Want, greed are at the base of nearly all crimes that are committed.

Socialism by removing want, destroys the incentive for crime and wrong doing. It will leave men free to follow the natural impulses of their natures and in this way it will promote true Christian growth.

JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON — HARRIET FORD — FREDERICK R. TOOMBS

JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON is a grandson of the famous editor, Joseph Medill, founder of the Chicago Tribune, and has had a meteoric career as a newspaper man, public official, socialist reformer and playwright. He resigned from Mayor Dunne's cabinet because of his radical economic ideas. He teaches socialism and also endeavors to practice it. One of his recent books "A Little Brother of the Rich," created a great deal of talk because it handled polite society in New York, Newport and Chicago without gloves.

MISS HARRIET FORD, who collaborate with Mr. Patterson in writing "The Fourth Estate," is herself a playwright of note. One of her successes was "A Gentleman of France," in which Kyrle Bellew starred.

FREDERICK R. TOOMBS is connected with the editorial staff of the American Press Association and is a member of the New York legislature. His knowledge of political as well as newspaper life qualifies him for the novelization of this remarkable play. He recently novelized the play entitled "A Gentleman from Mississipi," by Thomas A. Wise, which was also issued by the American Press Association.

THIS INTERESTING STORY WILL APPEAR IN SERIAL FORM, BEGINNING WITH NEXT WEEK'S ISSUE

THE AIMS AND PURPOSES OF THE SOCIALIST.

With this issue THE SOCIALIST makes its first appearance before the public and will hereafter be a factor in the advancement of the cause of Socialism. The need of this paper has been apparent to the Socialists in Columbus for some time, especially prior to the last election.

The Socialist will shere strictly to the principle and policies of international Socialism. It will from time to time endeavor to clearly set forth those principles and policies in order to clear up the misconceptions that still exist in the minds of the uninformed.

It will be a clean family paper, and in addition to giving the news concerning Socialism, it will give general news of interest, especially that which effects the laboring people. It will give the news and activities of labor unions.

There will be departments for women, for children etc., and a suitable story.

that do not effect the progress and welfare of humanity it will "hew

While it will avoid all personalities close to the line" in all matters that are necessary for the uplift of man and the betterment of living conditions. And for this purpose, facts wil be told regardless of temporary consecquences.

Socialism has no need for abuse or mudslinging, for its principles and purposes are founded upon facts and reason and the welfare of the people. If it were not so, it would, as it should, utterly fail.

The Socialist will, as steps toward its ultimate object, advocate such measures as will improve present conditions, especially of the poor and the working class.

It will therefore espouse the cause of labor unions, particularly in their demands for higher wages and shorter hours, the abolition of child labor, for better shop and working conditions, and safety appliances.

It will advocate the initiative and referendum and recall, local self government, giving municipalities the right to own and operate any concern that will ensure to the benefit of the public, such as street cars, commercial lighting and heating, telephones, gas plant, ice plant, milk depots, coal yards, etc.

It will advocate civic betterments, such as removing the slums and providing better housing conditions, more parks and amusements, pure foods, correct weights and measures. Each school house should be a social center, School children should be furnished with free school books published by the state, provide with proper medical attention and food when necessary.

The Socialist wil keep abreast of the Times and treat all subjects and conditions as they arise with the sole purpose of justice, equity and the ultimate establishment of Socialism.

Labor Page.

James Henderson, Editor.

There has come a time when it has become possible for the writer to voice the appeals of Labor in clear cut terms.

This page represents Labor organised and unorganised. It seeks to prove to the unorganised that as individuals, they are powerless, against the greed of organized capital.

It seeks to prove to the organised that the present journey of labor unions, along lines of trade autonomy has lost its usefulness.

To cope with the present situation we must build along industrial lines. Under this system, the injury of one member, would mean an injury to all

There are many things that the future will present for discovery. We shall not object to criticism, we court it and we expect to also have the right to criticise the irregularities of our present system.

This paper has no testimonials or perfume for diseased minds. The man who stands for something and has the courage to fight for honest principles, will be recognised. But the coward, who springs up with every popular clamor, we spurn to recognise or respect. Believing that labor should be heard, on all subjects that as Capital could not exist without labor. We claimor the right to have some say in the affairs of our future existence. Representation by leadership means that the sheep in front, eat all the grass before them, and those who follow them grow thin looking at their soil. Hence its up to the rank and File to express themselves in their own language. The day of trying to fill empty stomachs with flowery phrases, has passed.

This paper comes to life when some of our brethering are being persecuted.

Spain being asked to send an exhibit to the Philadelphia Centennial, sent the relics of the infamous inquisition.

We today face a return of these acts, when a conspiracy exists against the workers, for judicial authority permits solitary confinement without food refusal of rights to see friends, "Business men's juries" and the right of corporations to discharge a man before he is declared guilty. We intend to allow no man, woman or child, to be persecuted or prosecuted on the evidence of ex-convicts or their paid assassins.

We intend to publish facts, and expect to penetrate into secret places, and expose the treachery of those who exist by the "abuse of power."

The present office of this Department is located at 171 North 9th St., Columbus, Ohio. Should you become victim of this epidemic, of judicial ignorance, the residence number will be changed for a cell number. This will not deter the publication of this paper, for on looking up the rules of the Ohio Penitentiary on page (7) we find "Prisoners oif the First Grade Can Send letters every second and fourth Sundays.

If you believe that this paper will help the cause of humanity, subscribe for the same, and lift the staff above the clutches of those who held our very existence.

You who stand for honest principles have nothing to fear. We shall proclaim the pure unbiuided truth. Let her go, its up to you to see the crew.

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION.

The organised printing crafts stand for education of the public, to what the label stands for. Their methods of progress commends them to all fair-minded critics.

PATTERN MAKERS.

Myor Seidel of Milwaukee is a brother pattern maker. The Columbus brethern also stand for progressive principles. We wish the organization a prosperous New Pear.

BAKER'S UNION.

The results of their campaign are being realized, and the foundation stones of a permanent organization has been laid. Demand the Bakery Workers Label on your bread, and help those Brethern to obtain better conditions.

SHOE WORKERS UNITE.

Some of the Columbus shoe workers formed an organization to help their sick and disabled brethern, and also bury the dead.

Soe one, played Judas. The next next morning the officers of the association were discharged. The reason was this, act was styled "inefficency". If social conditions were what they they should be, in thi establishment, why fear an organization of your employes's Mr. Employer?

Some day the worm will turn, you may try to grind flesh and blood into dollars, but, we will retaliate at the ballot box, Mr. Herod.

Stand together brethern. Oppression always opens the gateway of social opportunity.

C. L. U. IS AGAINST WARREN'S SENTENCE.

Philadelphia Body Sees in It Intention to Disrupt Labor Movement.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 20. — The Central Labor Union has adopted a resolution protesting against the conviction of Fred D. Warren, editor of the Appeal to Reason, thus being the first central labor body to affirm its belief that Warren's sentence is a blow at the working class.

The union declared that Warren's prosecution is of a piece with the attempt on the part of the capitalist class to send Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone to the gallows, and that its chief aim is to disrupt the labor movement.

The resolution follows:

"Whereas the Court of Appeals has seen fit to confirm the sentence of Judge Pollock of the 5th district of Kansas, condemning Fred D. Warren, editor of the Appeal to Reason, to serve six months in jail and pay a fine of $1,500; and

"Whereas Fred D. Warren is guilty of no crime, has broken no law and has committed no offense except to throw the searchlight of public opinion upon the kidnapping of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone, officers of the Western Federation of Miners; and

"Whereas the conviction of Fred D. Warren amounts to nothing more than persecution upon the part of the same agents of wrong that authorized the kidnapping of these three workingmen and is part of a genral tendency to deprive the working people of their right of free press and the general political liberties upon which this republic rests; therefore, be it

"Resolve, That we, the officers and delegates of the Central Labor Union of Philadelphia and vicinity, enter our protest against the conviction of Fred D. Warren, affirm our belief that he is innocent of any breach of the law, and declare that his prosecution is of a piece with the attempt to railroad Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone to the gallows, and aims only to disrupt the labor movement."

JOHN SPARGO, NEW YORK.

The Socialist on last Thursday evening held a meeting at Schenck's Hall in this city, which was a revelation to Non-Socialists. The meeting was addressed by Comrade Spargo of New York, who delivered a fine addres on the subject of Socialism. Comrade Spargo has been in the work a long time, has travelled extensively abroad, and is familiar with the Socialist movement throughout the world. The address was a fine one, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. The Socialist movement has become a great power; and Non-Socilists would doe well to attend these meetings and in this manner obtain an understanding of its objects and aims. The eeting was a revelation in another respect. It showed plainly that the Socialists are ever on the alert. We venture to assert that neither of the old political parties could have held a meeting like this one. It was here for them during the last campaign to arouse any interest among the masses, and their meetings were marked by slim attendance. Hardly a "Corporal's Guard" would attend a meeting of either of the old parties at this time so soon after the campaign. But the meeting atSchenck's Hall was a large one, the Hall being filled. Besides, everyone present paid for the privilege of attending. Another significant fact was the audience itself. The writer was in a position to observe, and what impressed him most was the determined purpose plainly depicted in the faces of everyone present. It was inspiring. No longer can it be said that the Socialist movement is made of "anarchists and incendiaries". Such clap-trap and false assertions are considered seriously no longer. The movement is a great, living, vital force. Its purpose is to revolutionize the world through evolutionary methods, and to usher in a new civilization. Those who are not Socialists, and who do not understand this mighty movement, would do well to hear men like Spargo on Socialism.

Branch 225 of the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, will give a Christmas entertainment to their members and families on Thursday Evening, December 29th, 1910, at Kull's Hall, 79 East Mound street.

A Christmas tree, toys and candy will be provided for the enjoyment of the children by the members, and a good time is promised to all by the Committe, which consists of the following comrades: J. Erdei, M. Nowaki Jac. Junker, F. Metzger, Mrs. M. Vollman Mrs. S. Nick.

Four thousand garment workers have been on strike in Milwaukee for the past week. Strange to say, there has not been an incident that even the Capitalist press could distort into shape so it could call it a "riot" and mob violence. The particular reason for this satisfactory state of affairs is the fact that under the Socialist administration the police are actually developing into peace officers instead of inciters to riot in the interests of the employers as they so often are when capitalists' tools control the city government.

The Orientals are no doubt right in their belief in the oneness of all creatures; each a part of the other, all a part of the entire whole. Believing this, we cannot allow ourselves to be unkind or uncharitable to any human being, for the reason that such evil emotions wil but reeflect again unto our very selves.

The women whose influences for good is most potent and far reaching, are those who do not withdraw themselves into an exclusive circle of self righteous aloofness far away from their kind. They must be one with all mankind; they must be universal.

Pride is not a bad quality, unlike learning, a little pride is not a dangerous thing; but pride, alas, ruined the angels, and it should never be allowed to interfere with woman's helpful usefulness.

The women who are bringing about the highest standard of humanity's betterment, are those women who never forget the fact that people who breathe the same air are not meant to turn their backs on each other. If all women remembered this, than Christian charity would not be the rarity it is today.

Every human being has somewhere within the strange complexity of his nature, an individuality all his own, unlike that of any other human being's in the universe. True, slavish and unpretty environment may have misshapen and marred its beauty; man's inhumanity to man may well nigh have quenched its feeble light, yet the flame of real self-hood still burns, and will continue to burn forever and forever.

It is to this individuality that the womanly woman, who would do a woman's noblest work, must appeal. She should be no respector of person. What matter to her whether the covering of this personality be of this form or that? The womanly woman in her developing process, can and will make the form sublime, poetic and beautiful.

It has been said that a woman without some sort of religion is like a flame without heat, a rainbow without color and a flower without perfume. Let us name the religion that the womanly women we are discussing need. It is the helpful, comforting religion of Love.

Though she speaks with the tongues of men and angels, and have not charity—or love, for which charity is but another name—she is become as a sounding brass, or a tinkling symbal. And though she bestow all her goods to feed the poor, and though she gives her body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth her nothing.

The noble sacrifice of giving is ever the first instinct of a womanly woman's nature. Her happiness alone is found in serving the individual, the home, the race; and through her efforts shall all mankind be blest.

TO OUR WOMEN READERS EVERYWHERE—GREETING.

With this initial issue of our paper, we extend to you, one and all, a good, old-fashioned Socialist hand clasp; a hand clasp so fervent and well meaning, that we hope it will be able to connect our future relations into a golden chain of friendship; a chain whose brightness will but shine with clearer luster, and whose links will be but forged stronger as time goes on.

We wish you all the blessing of this happy season, and may your New Year be filled with good things, rich and abounding.

We desire to become well acquainted with you through our columns, and will strive to send to you only those messages of loving cheer that are helpful to you and calculated to serve your best interests.

We want your good wishes and hearty encouragement, your loyal sympathy and support. In turn, we will endeavor each week to give you something instructive and beneficial; and thus by the combined efforts, make for our mutual advancement and progress.

Our department will be exclusively devoted to women; her aims, the subjects in which she is most vitally interested, the happenings along the different lines of work in her various fields, the success with which she is meeting generally, and the good and welfare of womankind the world over.

We will endeavor to keep our portion of the paper cheerful, clean and entertaining, unmarred by any suggestion not the sign of virtue and purity, and to maintain ever a standard of excellence, that we trust will please and charm.

We hope to prosper and we kindly ask you to help us on our way. And since we are advertised by our loving friends, come over to us with all the friendship of your hearts. We can not have too many friends in this our new venture.

And again—
With heartiest thoughts we greet you
On our paper's opening day,
God grant that its joys may meet you
And help you along your way.

CHRISTMAS MEMORIES.

Come sit by my side, this glad Christmas tide
And talk of ye olden times.
We'll remember that other December,
With the sound of the Christmas chimes.

With our blood tingling and sleigh bells jingling,
We merrily sped along.
Though the air was chill, o'er valley and hill
Was echoed laughter and song.

The moon's silver light, the stars shining bright,
Was ever a night so fair?
Shadows extending, snow flakes descending
Like diamonds in the air.

But all too soon by the light of the moon
In the distance did appear,
The home of our freind where we would attend
The making of Christmas cheer.

From floor to rafter rang peals of laughter
And the strains of music sweet.
With smile and glance we joined in the dance
With quickly responding feet.

"Salute your partners, come on the corners,
Forward all and back again.
Swing on the corner, right hand to partner,
Balance and swing again."

Thus' did our feet to the music so
Go tripping over the floor.
After each measure, flushing with pleasure,
We always wished for more.

When it was over, sweetheart and lover
With hearts so happy and light.
Our faces beaming with love's sweet dreaming,
That beautiful Christmas night.

That night in December you'll remember,
Sitting there close by my side,
Our hearts glowing, with Love overflowing,
You whispered you'd be my bride.

CHRISTMAS GIVING.

Our highest Orpheus walked in Judea, nineteen hundred years ago, and his sphere melody, flowing in wild, native tones, took captive the ravished souls of men.

Carlyle.

Today, the souls of men are hungering as they were nineteen hundred years ago for the beautiful symphonies of sphere-melody, and the tender sweet music of humanity; the true peace on earth, and the good will of all men toward all men.

But ever in our hurrying race we are conscious of pause that we may question ourselves as to why the hunger in men's hearts for the music of this greatest Orpheus is not satisfied: why its melody is not today, at this Christmas season, blending in merry rynth with all life, as was its original purpose?

Sorowfully for answer the vision arises before our eyes. We see the ominous cloud of smoke from factory and mill: we hear the shriek of a million whistles, and above the din we catch the moan of the toiler as he slaves, a pitiful victim of the iron law of wage; and from these signs we read in the hand writing on the wall, the story of our brothers' wrongs.

The years for them have but spelled an awful tragedy, until—

"Plundered, profaned and disinherited
They cry protest to the Judges of the world—
A protest that is also prophecy."

And with them shall we too not raise our voice in protest? Can Christmas be Christmas to us so long as the spirit of its meaning has been distorts by the world's blind greed?

Can we in craven selfishness enjoy the blessings with which fortune has favored us while the yoke of slavery still galls upon our brothers' neck?

Let us change for once the order of our Christmas giving. Let us give to all humanity the Christmas-gift of our individual efforts to help in giving back to work dulled ears, so long deaf to the sweet sphere melody of love, the power to hear once again in ecstacy a-throb, the long lost strains of Him whose birth we celebrate, the melody as sung by the Man—God who walked in Judea.

"In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in His bosom that transfigures you and me;
As he died to make man holy, let us die to make men free, While God is marching on."

WOMANLY WOMEN.

The world today needs women — women who are womanly; women who are strong mentally, strong morally, and above all, women whose hearts beat in harmonious unison with the great heart of the whole human family. Only such women can save society from dissolution; only such women can thoroughly civilize mankind, and bring back to earth the lost Eden, glowing again as in the primeval sweetness of its first spring-tide.

The women who can most benefit the race are those whose broad minded, unselfish lives are lived daily in an atmosphere free from the sordid pettiness of prejudice, gossip, cant, hate, envy, superstition or fear; but fearlessly, in the knowledge that they have within themselves the Divine spark of endless possibilities, whereby the burden of their fellows may be lightened. It is not alone the receiver of good gifts who is benefitted in this great humanitarian cause. They who give and they who take are both doubly blest.

Take Comfort, Neighbor.

Mrs. Alma Powell Gives Femininity Dress Reform and Comfort.

MRS. ALMA WEBSTER POWELL IN HER NEW COSTUME.

Here is a case of pure love of her kind. Mrs. Alma Webster Powell makes an appeal to women to cast off the shackles of the bobble skirt and all absurdities of in mode and adopt the costume of common sense which she has designed for them. It is called a comfort costume and is made on princess lines that reach to the ankles and worn without corsets and with bloomers. To add style, without which no dress was ever a success, the material is handsome black velvet trimmed with hand embroidery of jet. For street wear boots and a military cape are added of black satin. In the house the frock is buttoned down to the feet.

The little hat pretty Mrs. Powell wears with the costume is made like the cap worn by officers in the Austrian army and can be fashioned by any woman for the modest sum of $1.

Every part of this attire from cap to twelve dollar boots is attractive, sane and simple in effect. Mrs. Powell in advocating this reform costume is entirely unselfish in her aim, for in doing so she gives up a wealth of Paris hats and gowns.

This costume if adopted by womankind will stamp out much sartorial envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness, as all costumes are made on the same style. It will remove class distinction, and the only base of distinction will be in the quality of the material used; otherwise Mrs. Rhinestein will be on an equal footing, so far as appearances are concerned, with Mrs. Desmond.

Mrs. Powell in her comparatively short life has played many parts. She is a singer of note; she is a suffragette and a law student—in fact, she is interested in everything that tends to public good, and her brain is a very active piece of machinery.

The inventor has adopted the dress herself, and she could wear no many smart gowns if she had the welfare of women less at heart.

The New Shoe Buckle.

Cut steel and rhinestone predominate in the shoe buckle for decorating the evening slipper this season. In the cut steel, which has a very refined appearance, the designs are very beautiful. The buckles made of this material seem to be the leading ones.

They are made oblong and large, and, though this is actually the choice among the metals, there are other sizes and other metals still available, for, though it is quite new, it does not exclude any of the others that with some are still popular.

Rhinestone buckles are favored next to steel, and there is a wide variety of these from which to make a choice.

TOMMY GOUGH IN ENGLISH.

When first the new boy came to school,
His name was not announced.
The children knew how it was spelled,
But not how 't was pronounced.

"'Tis easy to decide," quoth one;
"Of course it rhymes with rough
I'm positive, in my own mind,
That that boy's name is Gough."

"You may be right," a second said,
"'Tis possible, although
I rather think, if he was asked,
He'd say his name was Gough."

"Pooh, Pooh!" a loud voice called in scorn,
"With nonsense let's be through.
That I am right, you must allow;
We'll call the new boy Gough."

"That's as you please," replied a fourth,
While swinging on a bough;
"And yet I see no reason why
His name should not be Gough."

But here the boy himself appeared,
And said, with bashful cough:
"Say, fellows, can I play with you?
My name is Tommy Gough."

GAMES YOU CAN PLAY IN THE SNOW.

The Game of Potato Race can be very easily played in the winter with two piles of snowballs. At the distance of the field from each pile a basket is place. At the umpire's signal two players standing by the baskets dash for the snowballs, returning each with one which he drops in the basket. Only one snowball ay be caried at a time and the game is won by the child who gets all the balls from one pile in his basket first. The game may be varied by laying the snowballs in two long lines at distances of a yard apart. The players run for the end balls, returning with them and dropping them in the baskets. The game being won, as in the first instance, by the child who picks up all his balls first.

Another snowball game is played by a big circle of children and with one hard snowball. The ball is tossed rapidly from one child to another and in no regular order or expected direction, the fun of the game consisting in the unexpectedness with which it is thrown. Any player who is taken unawares and fails to catch the ball must leave the circle, and the game is won by the child who stays in the circle longest.

AN UNCONGENIAL TASK.

I have t' do a awful lot!
Somehow it seems t' be
That my ma's almost always got
A pile of work fer me;
But geel of all th' things I do
One's lots th' worst—an' I
Jest guess I never will git through
A-wipin' dishes dry!

Sis washes 'em an' ma she'll say,
Whenever we've begun,
"Before you put 'em all away,
You tell me that you're done."
Then ma she always goes an' takes
An' looks 'em over—then
If they don't suit her, why, she makes Me wipe 'em all again!

Gee whiz! I wisht I lived somewhere
Where people et without
No dishes 't all, an' didn't care!
Guess that would be about
Th' best thing a kid could git
T' please him good an' such;
'Cause folks they wouldn't care a bit
'Bout wipin' plates so much!

CHARITY.

In my dream I saw our beautiful world—our dear old "Mother Earth" dispensing her rich gifts to the human family. The inhabitants of the earth had each contributed his and her part in the annual seedtime and harvest. It was nearing the Christmas tide A. D. 1915.

The Evangel of "Peace on Earth and good will toward Men" was making glad the hearts of ALL the people. Yes, ALL the people of every tongue and kindred had labored to produce an abundance of all the "necessaries" and all the "luxuries" of life. Now was a time of rejoicing. The Fatherhood of God was made manifest in the Brotherhood of man—the Fatherhood in the beautiful gifts of nature, the Brotherhood in the equitable distribution of those gifts to the human family.

In my dream I saw none who were in need—no one who asked alms of the people. This was a revelation to me. I saw that no person paid rental to any landlord; no person paid interest on money; no one paid profit on any Commodity. Interest profit and rent were abolished. It was found that if all the workers labored 4 hours a day, by means of their modern machinery, they produced a sufficiency for all the people.

I saw that the people endeavored to product only enough of the necessaries and the luxuries of life for their own use — there was nothing produced for the purpose of exploitation—profit. It was with much admiration that I noted the people were not expending their labor in the building of battleships. I was also gratified to see that they had no armies and navies, but that all men were employed in some useful occupation. It was a pleasure to see all the people living in comfortable, modern homes. I did not see any children working in mines and factories, but all were in school preparing for the largest possible usefulness. I noted that the people made free use of all public utilities such as railways, telephones, telegraph, natural gas, electricity, et., without paying profit to some private concern. I failed to see the newspapers advertising any Commodities that were sold for profit.

I was told it was not a charitable act to sell anything for profit — that it was the very worst possible kind of thefts, and their constitution forbid any person taking from another any part of his earning without giving to him an equivalent in value. I found the incentives for crime was destroyed with the abolition of the Profit System. All persons were happy in the possession of the full product of their labor. The Christ spirit was effused throughout the lives of all the people.

The people had come out of the bondage of the Capitalistic Profit System into what they termed the Co-Operation Commonwealth, where true Charity, (love for humanity) is exemplified in its fullness. My soul was exceedingly happy. Then I was awakened by the cry of the big Newsies "Buy a State Journal for Sweet Charity's sake." Hence, I have discovered there are two kinds of Charity — a false Charity and a true Charity.

The false operates under the present Profit System. The true will be operated with the coming NEW dispensation—the ideal of my dream.

Good Aid For Beauty.

Do not go to bed tired and cramped and brain weary in a close room and lie in a huddled, tense heap, thinking for hours and tossing about. If you can't get relief to your lungs by fresh air before retiring insist upon plenty in the sleeping chamber. Undress and think and busy yourself in some trivial manner in a comfortable lounging robe. Do all your thinking before the light goes out, then go to sleep. Try to get the blood away from the head, not into it. To eat something light has this effect and induces sleep when reading would have the opposite effect. When you finally get ready for bed, draw some deep breathe of fresh air and lie down, not in a heap, but comfortably relaxed, a little on one side, preferably the right, so as to allow the heart free play.

A NEAR ANTHEM.

My country, beauteous land! I'll sing. If you will stand, a song to thee! My harp is rather coarse, my voice is somewhat hoarse, yet will I try to force some melody. Fair land that saw my birth, gem of the whole blamed earth, bark of my screeds! Tell tell me O, tell why, prices have soared so high that man can scarcely buy things that he needs. Things that a man must eat—lemons and prunes and meat—cost like Sam Hill; carpets and rugs and mats, neckties and shoes and hats, shirting to hide his slats, empty his till. All through the week I work like an unlaundered Turk for a few bucks; no odds how hard I try, of wealth I'm always shy; and when I travel I ride on the trucks. They say that half a plunk bought more and better junk in the old days, than will two hones or more, in the big modern store, since prices learned to soar five hundred ways. My country hear my word! You are a humming-bird, also a peach! Splandid in peace and war, thou most effulgent star—tell me why prices are clear out of Reach! — Walt Mason, in Emporium (Kan.) Gazette.

THE ARLINGTON STREET CAR.

Citizens of Arlington, composed of auto owners, street car stock holders and street car riders, held a very enthusastic meeting on the lawn of the Arlington club. Snow was about three inches deep, but this did not deter the meeting, endorsing ringing resolutions commending the street railroad company for its excellence of service furnished the citizens of Arlington, who are compelled to use the cars.

A few dessenters that are never satisfied, were present and aired their views but these things occur in most every meeting held for the public good.

Bill Jones, one of the original "first time car ever came over the tracks riders," voiced his sentiments against the new palace coaches imported from the Westerville line, where they had seen service for the past 15 years. He stated that little "Bobtail" No. 13, one of the original horse cars that later was turned into a motor car and that the citizens of Arlington had learned to love as a brother, from the fact that in winter the citizens would pack it better which conduced to so much more warmth, should be forthwith returned to its regular run or he would buy an auto.

Pete Smith who always "Pays as he enters" complained bitterly that one of the cars on its first initial run was heated excessively the other morning. S. R. R. stockholders immediately made note of this and demanded the number of the car. But Pete had forgotten it.

Joe Winter's it developed, has been using the street cars for an alarm clock. The first car out you could hear coming a mile away, on account of its flat wheels and Joe would hop out of bed and put the coffee to boiling and catch the car on its way back to town. But for some reason this car was taken off its run and one making less noise, taking its place. This caused Joe to oversleep, missing his breakfast and being docked an hour at his work. Joe wants this car put back or he will have to invest in an alarm clock.

Before the vote on the resolution, debate waxed warm. The car riders contended that the Auto street car stock holders should not have a right to vote on this resolution as they used their autos and never rode the cars. But the stockholders proved conclusively that they as public spirited citizens were just as much interested in the service given as the car riders.

Poor service economically run, they contended made for better dividends with which they could buy more autos, thereby relieving partly a condition that might lead to over crowded cars.

Upon counting the votes it was found that the resolution had been carried by one vote. Bill Jones, Pete Smith, and Joe Winters carried favor by voting with the street car stockholders in favor of the resolution.

Al Woods then made a motion that we make it unanimous which was duly seconded and carried. Al was later taken to task for this but he stated that we would have to humor the stockholders or the service might become worse. Al may be right.

But taking it all in all it was a pleasure to see working men and auto owners hobnobing together in a common cause and much good may come of it.

A TRIBUTE TO DEBS ON HIS FIFTY-FIFTH BIRTHDAY.

By Max Ehrman, in Terre Haute Saturday Spectator.

Often have I sat by the evening lamp and read of the martyrs of old times—lovers of truth and of men, scornful of comfort and good repute. Often I stretched my hand across the past to take theirs and whispered solace to their souls. But they are dead and writhe no more from mortal blows. Their names are graven high in the house of fame; and my whispers fell silent on their soundless ears. Now would I celebrate a living lover of men. There he goes. See the tall figure, bent shoulders — this jailbird presidential candidate — thrice presidential candidate of these United States. Also excoal shoveler — this lover of men, hater of shams, advocate of comfort for all who work. Have you heard him speak to the people? The sounds of hell are in his voice, and his face is lit with the red fires of hell. His eyes are not blinded by custom, and fashoo is no sword against his words. He builds revolutionary fires that burn the rubbish of sanctioned cruelty. Has he talked to you upon the street, or within a house—his house or yours? The voice of a woman is his, and a heart as tender. Has he called you a fool? Likely you are, one, placid toiler, working and not thinking. Tall figure with bent shoulders, I know your tender heart and your strong will —you are generously loved and generously hated. I have seen you gather strength in the night, playful like a child, dreaming of a better day and a sweeter life for the children of men. I have seen you stand erect with a light in your face when all men turned their back and night had enshrouded your cross. Never stood man more erect, the target of established malice. Your crime was that you sought to make the dreams of poets a fact among men. I have seen the scars that the teeth of greed have left upon your flesh. But I have never seen you cringe. I do not wait for history to celebrate you. I celebrate you before the history is written that will celebrate you, before the tomb has canonized you and it has become the fashion to sing your praise—you crier in the wilderness for justice and the love of men.

CHILD LABOR.

There are 1,700,000 child laborers in the United States.

That is a huge army of children to be working in the vitiated atmosphere of mines, factories and stores, instead of storing up knowledge in the schools and growing into healthy men and women through play in the open air.

Child labor is anunmitigated curse to the working class of this and every other country. It not only robs the children of their childhood, but it spells greater misery and degradation to all who toil.

There are now a large number of occupations in which a child can do almost as much in a day as a man. And the child is employed in preference to the man because it can be secured for considerably less money.

Now, where children are employed most freely, there the wages of adults are lowest.

Cause and effect are quite clear. Children are not put out to work because are wages are low, but wages are low because children are allowed to work.

See the difference?

If in a community where child labor laws are rigidly enforced those laws would suddenly be relaxed or repealed and a large number of children induced to enter the workshops of Mammon at a tender age, then the labor market would be flooded with cheap labor, many grown-ups would lose their jobs and wages would sink to a lower level.

Conversely, where children are withdrawn from employment, the adults, freed from competition, can command higher wages. In fact, the income of the average family will slightly increase, notwithstanding the loss of the children's earnings.

The workers, therefore, should never oppose the prohibition of child labor or the enactment of compulsory school laws. It is not they, but the employers, who lose.

The employers must pay higher wages to the parents when their children no longer help eke out the family existence. The parents will have more work, too, because the jobs are not taken by boys and girls.

Employers oppose child labor legislation because it will reduce their profits. Working people should see it because it will raise their wages and give their child a fair start in life.

THE BANKING SYSTEM.

The banking system of all countries are essentially the same. All governments have the sole and exclusive right to "coin money and fix the value thereof" in theory, but in practice they have DELEGATED this POWER to a CLASS—the bankers.

Our national government issues interest-bearing bonds, then allows national banks to deposit these bonds in the national treasury, issuing to the banker the face value of the bonds in national bank notes. These notes the government guarantees.

PRACTICALLY, national bonds are purchased by the very notes (national bank notes) which the government issues upon said bonds.

The whole proposition is such an obvious piece of class legislation that no intelligent person will defend it.

Some exceedingly interesting CONTRADICTIONS have grown out of the system. For instance: The total amount of money in the United States is $34.93 per capita, but the amount on DEPOSIT IN THE BANKS IS $215.27. In other words, there is more than six times as much MONEY deposited in the banks than there is in existence. This is not all. Of the $34.93, about $15 is in active circulation among the people in actual money, making the deposits thirteen times greater than all the money available for banking.

Again: The loans made by the banks to the people were on September 1 $9,994,000,000, or six times more than all the money in existence, not in the pockets and tills of the people.

Lawson several years ago startled the world with exposures of high finance. He coined the term "made dollars." About four out of every five dollars handled by the bankers are "made," i. e., have no existence except in the "mind" of a gullible, ignorant public.

The humor of it all is that the "people" pay INTEREST TO THE BANNER ON THESE IMAGINARY DOLLARS. We hear much "patriotic" talk, especially about Fourth of July and election time, but our "patriots" are not ashamed to work a confidence game on old Uncle Samuel, whom they induce to "borrow" from them, paying them interest, and then handing the loan back to them without canceling the interest-bearing obligation.

The whole banking system is unscientific and absurd, but it insures to the benefit of a class of strong, influential citizens, and cannot be abolished without abolishing capitalism. It is based upon the anti-social principle of letting private persons, or corporations, perform a social function (the exchange of tokens of value) for the especial benefit of these persons or corporations and the consequent loss to the balance of the people.

Socialism will inaugurate a scientific system. It will make labor the measure or standard of value and money a pure medium of exchange.

SOCIALISM

is the next natural stage in the evolution of the human society; a system wherein the mills, mines, factories, railroads and other means of producing wealth shall be the property of the whole people; wherein business shall be on the co-operative plan and men work together for a common purpose, the good of all, not a few. What is your definition of Capitalism?

A panic; what is it? A panic means that the working class has been to industrious. They worked so hard that they piled up too much food, too much clothing and every other kind of wealth, and then they found that in the midst of such abundance they had to eat less and be poorly clad. Think that over about three months, then sing "Three Cheers for the Red, White and Blue," then shout yourself hoarse about the glory of the constitution, and then wonder why you don't get fat on such a diet.

"These agitators who say things about our constitution should be arrested," is a familar shout of some of the patriots who vote the old party tickets. Some of them even advise hanging. And not one of these patriots ever read the constitution!

Some men get $1 a day working. Others at $100 a day and don't work at all. And the strange part of the thing is that the fellow who got $1 earned $10. But stranger still the $1 man voted for the $100 chap on election day.

Wake up! WAKE UP! You don't have to have gatling guns, dynamite or the provisions of the Dick Military bill to arouse you, do you?

THE MODERN NEWSPAPER.

The press today is the most potent educational factor in all the world. Kingdoms, monarchies and Republics, Tenets, Constitutions and Manifestos all are shaped and moulded by its power.

If its energizing influence comes from a fountain of humane fealty it will crystalize good government that has a care for each and every one of its subjects. But if the fountain be poisoned by the sting of Capitalism, then, will there be crime, misery and poverty.

It may become a blessing or it may be a curse to civilization.

THE WORKER AND THE LAW.

(From the Denver Tribune.)

Pat O'Brien, twenty-eight years old, father of four children, poor and a day laborer, was working in a certain stone quarry.

Pat's foreman, walking too near the edge of the quarry, dislodged a shelf of rock and Pat was crushed by the falling stone and made a cripple for life. He is no longer able to earn even a scanty living for his family.

Members of Pat's lodge took him too see a lawyer. They thought he should be able to get large damages from the company which employed him and in whose service he was injured. Pat told his simple story. The lawyer shook his head.

"You have no chance," he said. "The stone that crushed you was dislodged by the foreman of your gang. That's the law of the fellow servant. In this state the employer is not liable for damages when one of his workmen is hurt through the carelessness of a fellow workman."

"But I told the mucker!" burst out poor Pat, "that those rocks were loose and would fall if he went too near the edge."

"Oh! that makes it all the worse," replied the lawyer. "The law says that knowing the rocks were loose you should have refused to work in a position of danger. That's the law of the assumption of risk. You haven't got a leg to stand on. I'm sorry."

"That's true enough, what you say about the leg," said Pat, picking up his crutch. "And so I should have throwed up my job, huh—and me with four babies. And I made it all the worse, did I, by telling that heavy-footed slob of a boss to be careful about them loose rocks? So that's the law, is it? To h— with the law, then, say I!"

The Law—with a capital L—in the United States, at least, has for a long time conserved itself far too much with the rights of property and far too little with the rigts of man. Which accounts, to some extent, for the quite general lack of confidence in the legal profession and even in the courts which now prevails.

Every year in the United States, according to the official estimate of the Federal Bureau of Labor, between 30,000 and 35,000 workmen are killed outright in industrial accidents, while 2,000,000 more are maimed or injured more or less seriously.

Out of this army—and there have been few armies with a longer or more terrible list of casualties—only one in eight ever get damages. The few that do are compelled to divide with the lawyers who prosecute their claims.

Comrade H. H. Thomas, State Secretary of Wisconsin, reports: "The Garment Workers are on strike in Milwaukee. And in passing it may be said, if any class of Milwaukee workers have reason to strike, it is these slaves of the sweat-shop.

"The chief of police is a holdover from the Rose Democratic administration. He is intensely hostile to the Social Democratic administration, knowing that his days are numbered with the end of his term of office. To him Mayor Seidel wrote this illuminating letter:

"Mr. John T. Janssen, Chief of Police, Milwaukee, Wis.:

Dear Sir:

Complaints have been made here that disemployed citizens have recently been subjected to abusive epithets and rough handling by policemen.

"Whatever may be the basis of these complaints, I want it understood that no man on the police force has the right to interfere with a citizen who is not violating the law.

"I expect you as chief of police to make clear to the members of your department that so long as a citizen is within his legal rights he should not be manhandled or insulted. Officers tolerating such tactics and patrolmen practicing them will be accountable.

"Hoping that reports referred to will on investigation prove to be exaggerated, I am,

Respectfully,
Emil Seidel, Mayor."

"Alderman Melms, president of the Milwaukee Common Council, also addressed the striking garment workers and assured them of all proper protection. "No policemen's clubs are to be used on the strikers in Milwaukee as they have been in Chicago," said Comrade Melms.

"But you should have heard the capitalist papers howl! This is "violent partisanship" and "cheap politics" and what not. "Who", asks the Milwaukee Sentinel, "are the real friends" of warking people." The men who furnish them employment and wages, or those lickspittle politicians who ask for their votes? Unfortunately for the Sentinel and the capitalist politicians behind it, the Milwaukee working people understand pretty well who are their "real friends", as was demonstrated by the recent Milwaukee Socialist victory."

It has been demonstrated that the trusts are a good thing for the owners and a lot of sapheads continue to vote that it is better for a few to own them and pile up immense fortunes for themselves than it is for many to own them. Socialism admits the economy of production as proved by the trusts, but insist that the people are entitled to the profits rather than the few.

A Story of the Year 1985

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

It was at the beginning of the present century that one of the gatherers of those colossal fortunes quite common at the time founded an institution for original scientific investigation. Soon after the corps of scientists employed there began their work they made the discovery that living parts of a body might be substituted for decaying parts of another body. For instance, a knee might be replaced by a knee taken from a different person, serving the purpose of a new knee. From this starting point the experimenters proceeded step by step till there was no part of the human body that they could not supply.

Nearly half a century elapsed, however, before these gentlemen succeeded in replacing all the parts in a single human body by similar parts from other bodies.

The first perfect combination man was completed at the institute last year. There was not an organ or a part of an organ in him that had not been taken from another person. The man whose parts had been all removed and replaced had been named Peter Sykes, a criminal condemned for murder. He was given the choice of being executed or turned over to the professors to lose his identity by becoming another person. He shuddered at the immolition of his own personality, but consented rather than die the death of a felon.

The case was the first that was successful in producing an altogether new being. The operators who made it, rather, combined him considered that their first duty toward him was to name him. They chose the Latin word omnium, meaning "of all"—that is, Mr. Omnium was made up of all kinds of persons. It was expected by the unscientific laity that he might be opposed to giving up the name of Sykes, but as there was nothing of Sykes left in him he made no objection whatever. Indeed, he did not remember ever having been Sykes. The life Sykes had led was not in him at all.

Since Omnium was entirely experimental, the professors who had manufactured him gave orders that he was not to be permitted—at least for some time—to leave the institution. But a certain part of his brain and his right hand had been taken from a burglar. The consequence was that though locked in by a guard he found no trouble in picking the lock with such implements as he found lying about and walked forth into the world the first man born of a great many mothers and just as many fathers.

As might have been expected, this fragmentary though entire individual followed the strongest of all the natural laws—the law which unites the sexes. His component parts had been taken from persons between twenty and thirty. His average age was therefore twenty-five, a time of life when a man's fancy turns to love. He had been well dressed by the professors, and as they feared he might get out into the world without funds they had placed a roll of bills in his pocket. Feeling hungry, he went into a restaurant, where he ate a good meal and took a desperate fancy to the cashier, who was a very attractive young woman of twenty. Having scraped an acquaintance with her, he invited her to go to the theater with him that evening, an invitation she accepted.

It should be noted here that Omnium on entering the world as a combination man obeyed the two most important natural laws. The first thing he did was to satisfy his hunger, the second to make love.

Miss Mabel Thompson, the young lady to whom Omnium paid his addresses, found him a very pleasing person. Instead of having a few characteristic traits he had a hundred. The first clashing of idiosyncrasies she noticed was between those of a spendthrift and a miser, a portion of whose brains had been engrafted within his cranium. Instead of engaging seats at the theater he took a whole box. This was embarrassing to Miss Thompson, who was a very modest person. What was her surprise when after the play he took her to supper and ordered one herring for the two.

This episode, though neither of them knew it, showed from the first that, though it was possible to produce a perfect physical combination man, the matter of those elements that are to be classed as mental opened up a new field for the scientists. It demonstrated that to place in the same skull two such discordant elements as the brains of a miser and a spendthrift is to make a bad combination.

But Miss Thompson was doomed to further surprise and disappointment. While going home after the apology for a supper—half a herring for each of them—suddenly the strokes of a bell fell upon their ears. At the first stroke Omnium stopped stock still. There were three strokes, then nine. On the ninth stroke a hook and ladder truck passed. Omnium left the lady standing on the sidewalk, dashed to the truck, stood on the footboard and was whirled away.

Can it be wondered that the poor girl was astonished, disappointed, in the man who had so recently come to her to kindle those hopes of marriage and home which are born in every woman? Omnium called upon her the next day and was coldly received. Had the two heard a remark of Professor Sweigler when Omnium was being put together they would have understood the strange action. "This is a portion of the brain," the professor had said, "of Sam Tucker, the most daring fireman in the department. He has taken twenty medals for bravery at fires." And the professor inserted some gray matter in the cranium before him.

Omnium explained to Miss Thompson that when he heard the fire alarm and saw the truck dash by he felt an unconquerable impulse to get on the truck and go to the fire. He regretted leaving her alone, but could not help it. Whereupon she forgave him.

Reconciliations are always dangerous, and it proved so in this instance. Omnium told her that he loved her, clasped her in his arms and begged her to marry him.

Her answer was that, first, he must make known who he was; second, his means, and if these were satisfactory to her she would consent to a trial engagement.

Omnium after a few moments' thought told her that he would prepare a statement for her embodying the information she asked for. The truth is he knew nothing about himself and thought it necessary to do a job of thinking on the matter. He left her, promising to bring the facts the next evening. He had hired a room and went there from Miss Thompson. Throwing himself into an easy chair, he began to think.

The first person he remembered being was Evan Drake. He recalled working in a counting room as a man of that name. Then being addressed as Dr. Harwood came glimmering in his brain. Corporal Horgan was the next identity he felt, and this gave way to Julius, a colored man.

"Great heavens," he exclaimed, "is there negro blood in my veins?"

He examined his nails and the palms of his hands, but could see no traces of such an inheritance. This comforted him.

How it happened Omnium himself could never explain. He remembered jotting down the names as they occurred to him of persons he seemed to have been, and he recalled addressing a note to Miss Thompson beginning, "The information as to myself promised you is"— Then followed the name Omnium, after which he had written the word alias, adding six other names. He had evidently got confused at a consciousness of having been so many different persons and did not know what he was doing, for the next morning Miss Thompson received the list of his names through the mail.

"What is it?" asked a friend who was with her at the time, seeing her turn pale.

"Don't ask me!" moaned the poor girl.

"Do tell me."

"My lover confesses to six aliases. He's a crook."

Miss Thompson's friend after laboring with her for hours finally induced her to promise that she would never see her lover again and that she would send his note to the police.

The escape of Omnium from the institute occasioned consternation among the professors who had constructed him. They could not know what he would do and feared some trouble would result from his being at liberty for which they would be held responsible. One morning Dr. Tunshutter, Ph. D., while looking at the morning paper noticed that a man had been arrested with half a dozen aliases to his name. He was a puzzle to the police. Neither the name Omnium nor any of the aliases except that of a murderer who had been sentenced to be executed and of whose execution there was no record was known to the authorities. No one knew what to do with him.

Dr. Tunshutter threw down his paper, called a carriage and drove at once to the office of the superintendent of police. To his request that Omnium be returned at once to the institute the superintendent said that the return must be made legally and asked for the man's identity.

"How can I tell you that?" cried the professor. "There are parts of more than fifty people in him."

"Do you mean that you can't give me his legal name?"

"He has none."

"Is he white or black?"

"I can't say; there is a faint trace of black in him."

"He is a man, isn't he?"

"Not entirely. There are cartilages of several dogs, the skins of two cats, and much sewing was done with catgut."

"For heaven's sake, take him away!" cried the superintendent. "I wouldn't have the responsibility of either holding or giving up such a monster for the world. I'll turn him loose, and you must have some one from your confounded institute here to take him. If he gets loose again he'll get into court, and it will require a United States supreme justice to establish his legal status."

Omnium was released from custody that afternoon and caged by the keepers of the institute. He managed to get hold of a lawyer, and his case came up before the court. Seven attorneys, three judges and a large number of jurymen lost their minds in the struggle to establish his legal identity. While these efforts were being made he one day became very much excited and fell dead. The professors made a postmortem examination and found some of the catgut with which the lobes of the brain had been sewed had decayed.

Then a law was passed forbidding the construction of any more combination men.

THE QUESTION BOX.

I am aware that there are other incentives to endeavor besides the hope of personal gain but is not this most powerful? Under Socialism this incentive would not exist, or, if so, not to any effective degree?

T. E. C.

We agree as to the powerful incentive of personal gain, of which Socialists are as well aware as yourself. But upon what authority or process of reasoning do you assume that Socialism would destroy the desire of each for personal gain?

Would not all men, women and children under the proposed system feel the same desire for food to eat, clothing to wear, books to read and other things to satisfy their material and mental wants, tastes the same as they do today? Would the provisions of a way for each to get these good things by means of honest labor destroy the desire for them? Would one who today is possessed of a taste for music and the wish to have a piano be robbed of that taste and that desire by becoming a member of a society where he might earn that piano by the application of his labor and thus secure the material means of gratifying that taste?

You seem to be laboring under the delusion that Socialists would open soup houses and gratify the animal necessities of man with no demand for effort on his part. If that is your idea of Socialism, you would do well to get a standard work on the subject and see what a mistaken conception you have of the movement and its teachings.

* * * *

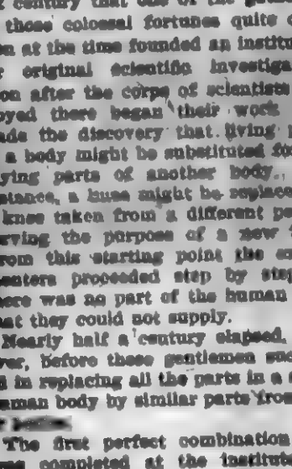
To what extent does the Socialist party advocate the government ownership and control of property?

E. L. S.

The Socialist party avocates the collective ownership of all things collectively used. Enemies of the movement often state that Socialism advocates the common ownership of all property, but such statements are without warrant, and the result of ignorance or prompted by a desire to deceive.

Socialists beleive in the collective ownership of all things that are collectively used and in the private ownership of the things that are privately used. Mines, factories, railroads, telephones, and all industries wherein a number of workers co-operate in production cannot safely be entrusted to private ownership, as such private ownership is the condition that enables the owner to exploit the workers.

But homes, furniture, clothing and the many things of that nature which are privately used should be the personal property of the user; provided, of course that he has rendered to society service equal to that required for their production.



The object of the collective ownership is, first, to prevent the taking of the laborer's product which priate ownership of public necessities makes possible, and, second, to secure to each worker the full equivalent of what his labor socially produces.

Whatever value the worker's labor produces is his private property, and it is the intent of Socialism to make him secure in his right.

Under the present, or Capitalist, system the landlord takes part of the worker's product in the form of rent, the money lender takes a part in the form of interest and everybody with whom he has a dealing gets a part, usually the balance, in the form or profit. The fact that he makes more wealth than his wages will buy, proves that he is exploited, or in plain language, robbed.

The object of Socialism is to put an end to this process of taking from the workers part of his private property, which he has produced by his own efforts.

The collective ownership of land, machinery and tools are all to this purpose. Socialism is not to abolish private property, but to make private property possible to those who have the only right to it—the workers who produce it.

The SOCIALIST

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER OF, BY AND FOR THE WORKERS

VOL. 1. No. 2. COLUMBUS, OHIO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1910. PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR.

The Philosophy of An Undesirable.

THUS FAR two freaks of nature have been discovered in Adams county. Out of the list of nearly 1000 men who have been called before the special grand jury, selected to investigate the election frauds which have been rendering a normally rotten political situation more putrified, two men have been found who are willing to stand trial. The second came to light last Monday. He is a negro. Others, just to expedite the work of the jury and courts, of course, have pleaded guilty to selling votes as soon as their names were called. It is interesting to note that Democrats and Republicans are listed among the names of erring ones and that, in the face of the wholesale buying and selling of votes, the Socialist vote exeprienced a substantial increase in Adams county

DEMOCRAT AND REPUBLICAN votes sold in Adams county as high as $26. The average voter, the man of modest needs, managed to get $8 for his. Which dearly beloved, may be considered as a warm tip to some of the luere-thirsty souls in Franklin and other counties. Dame Grundy has it that straight votes in other counties than Adams sold as low as $1.50.

RAISING CHICKENS may not be as Profitable as raising checks but one doesn't have to retire from society when his vocation is discovered.

ANOTHER HERO FALLEN, another idol shattered even the friends of Judge A. Z. Blair, who is handing out sentences to Adam's county vote sellers (and a few vote buyers) and suspending them, say that, while with furrowed brow, he is admonishing the erring ones not to do it again, he has one eye on possible chances to take the lecture platform as a reformer and tell the applauding ones throughout the county, "how he did it."

that, when the fool thing busts, you can walk back; to the airship's advantage it may be said that, if the affar collapses, it doesn't take so long to make the return trip.

LABORING MEN ARE clamoring for a state employer's liability law which would give them financial aid when they are suffering loss of time through accidents; teachers as those in Ohio did at their recent session in Columbus, are crying for pensions from the state; policemen and firemen, in many cities, at present receive pensions; the federal government's employes, under the civil service act, receive pensions. By these present protected ones or would be pensioned ones, the scheme of temporary and permanent insurance is considered practical. Would they be interested to know that, under government ownership of business and institutions, the scheme they favor could be better worked?

EVEN WALKING a high wire has its advantage. The "professor" is not compelled to doge the omni present and fatal hatpin.

JUSTICE UNDER the present system may not be a misnomer but in many instances, suffers a miscariage. Witness the arrival last Tuesday of two men at the penitentiary, each charged with burglary and larceny but having been convicted in different counties. One commenced a term of 20 years, the other a term of one year. The circumstances under which they committed their crimes may have been different, but, granting they were, it would seem, for the sake of preventing possible error in sentence, the classification of their crimes should have been different.

PRIOR TO THE RECENT state election, politicians strained their lungs and wasted wind in shouting sentiments in reference to "the people." One of the parties, logically, came into power. Is it "the people" now?

Sounds more like "the party."

Still more like

"Our crowd."

THERE ARE two kinds of tickers. One is called an alarm clock. The other proves alarming if the tape is against you.

As the captains of industry have nothing to do with industry except to absorb its products, why should they not be retired on a salary of nothing, the amount they earn?

Society has paid for every railroad in the United States through land grants and subsidies, but the nation does not own them. The Work people do all the work of production, even to the managing of the big industries, but they do not reap the profits from them. We live, not for ourselves, but for our masters. All to our shame!

It is also expected that many objections and misrepresentations will be urged against Socialism by those who profit and graft upon the necessitics of the people, but it remained for a newspaper published in Central Ohio, to base its chief objection on the fact that Socialism will abolish the need for charity, and thus destroy the beautiful system and institutions for dispensing charities.

Wouldn't it be a terrible calamity if poverty, misery and degradation were abolished, and justice were established among men so that every person, having equal opportunities, could arise to the fullest heighth of his manhood and live the complete life without the degrading dependence of charity?

Any movement that asks for a change in government or conditions must have for its purpose the betterment of the status of humanity, in order to demand or receive the support of the people. It is conceded that this is the aim and purpose of socialism. Why, then, does it fail to receive the support of all honest people? The desire to profit by an injustice to others will account for the opposition by the tyrants of capitalism, and ignorance or lack of moral courage will account for many others.

It is often-urged that Socialism is beautiful in theory, high in purpose and aspirations, and convincing in logic, but it won't work in practice. It does not take a wise man nor a scholar to see the absurdity or inconsistency of this fallacy, for whatever is correct in theory must necessarily be correct in practice. Otherwise it could not be correct in theory.

Our Bigness.

You, and I, and the rest of us are one each of something like 91,972,266 persons, or we were when the enumeration was made. Thrusting aside as of no consequences the possible claim of Mr. Roosevelt that he did it, there are several large considerations that obtrude themselves.

There are more than 90,000,000 of persons who are not competent to [illegible] of lawyers.

They are not competent to govern their means of locomotion. So they have delegated, to a crowd of swindlers, the street railroads and the steam railroads of the country.

They are not competent to regulate their food supply. So they have delegated to a lot of transportation sharps, food speculators, middlemen and others, the fixing of prices.

They are not competent to regulate the conditions of labor. So those who produce are beaten, spied upon and coerced. In worst possible conditions full control of this matter.

They are not competent to regulate policing regulatons. So those who produce are beaten, spid upon and coerced. In this connection it is intersting to note that while the capitalist class has countless spies and "agents" among the workers, there is no record and never has been a record of a working class "spy" sitting in with the capitalists. There are many instances of capitalist spies in trades union meetings. There has never been the record of a working class spy sitting in at a director's meeting.

But we do not need it. We shall win honestly.

These more than 90,000,000 of people are not competent to run their own legal affairs. So they submissively delegate all power to a few men, who are without exception representatives of the capitalist class. As a result labor, the bulk of the more than $20,000,000 of inhabitants, is flouted, scorned and wronged.

One of the most wonderful things in all records of court cases, in all decisions, is that they "leaned" to capitalism, that is, that they are in favor of the smallest class in the country.

The hopeful element in all this big mass of inhabitants is the Socialist element. The Socialist mean business. They are going to change things from top to bottom.

Instead of stealing from the man who produces they are going to give to the man who produces.

Instead of holding work in scorn, they are going to hold idleness is scorn.

Instead of holding criminal appropriation in reverence, they are going to hold productivity in reverence.

Instead of making courts a heartless, soulless weapon against labor, they are going to make courts an equitable tribunal for the settlement of affairs between men and men. Never yet have they been that. But they will be.

Instead of graft they are going to see that ALL, which is the poor, contemptible public of the present, receive decent, fair, honest treatment. That will eliminate graft.

Instead of making the government a weapon for the capitalist class, they will make it an operating means for the whole people.

A few thousand people of the present 91,000,000 now rule. All are going to rule, and the rule will be for all. But such a state of affairs can come only under a Socialist government, of affairs can come only under a Socialist government.

That is the thing for which we fight, the thing for which we suffer. But we shall get it. The recent vote proved it.

IS Our Street Car Service Inadequate?

Street car service is one of the most important necessities of any city. The growth and progress of every city depends on its street car service. We belive you will agree with us that the street car service in COLUMBUS, under its present ownership, is not what it should be, for the best interest of our city and its patrons.

Here are some of the reasons why, under private ownership, we can't have good street car service:

The present street car company, with its extra load of watered stocks and bonds, that they are paying dividends and interest on, is the main reason why they don't give us better service.

The watered stock has no value back of it, except the franchise which was given to the company by certain aldermen who were elected to look after the interest of the people of Columbus, but failed to do so by giving awny our streets to a private company for private profit.

The company has sold a large mnount of the stock and bonds to Eastern capitalists, who don't care what kind of service they give us, so they get their dividends and interest, that must come first.

If the present company can give us seven and eight tickets for twenty-five cents and universal transfers, with its present service, and pay dividends on millions of dollars of watered stock and bonds, what could be done if the city of Columbus owned its own street car system and run it for the benefit of all the people instead of a few.

Under the present system of paying dividends and interest on watered stocks and bonds, they can't give us good cars or enough cars or pay living wages to their employes, therefore they give us poor cars, poor service, and on top of all, pack us in the cars like sardines. They would not put as many hogs in a car as they do people. Why? Because the hogs would kill each other. You have had the above experience; you have [illegible] and many times that were a strap-hanger [illegible] in so tight that you could not get out [illegible] dition and service, for thousandr of poor men, women and children, who have worked hard all day and are paying for something they don't get, a seat.

You also had the experience of walking for many weeks during our last strike, which would be impossible under municipal ownership. Do you want this kind of street car service to continue? If not, then join the Socialist party, which is the only party whose principles and platform stands for public ownership of all public service utilities.

Working men and women, consider the above question, and if you agree with us, go among your friends and make converts to Socialism. Speak in season and out of season, in public and in private, agitate the problems.

The labor problem is a workingman's problem, of him and by him as well as for him. The capitalist will not solve it for you. The workingman must do it for himself.

Legislation is the main point around which better conditions must center. Instead of begging and trusting to others to legislate for them, the laborers themselves must be represented in congress, state legislatures and city councils. Enter the political field in the manner of an evangelist, not to gratify ambition, commercial or political, but to exercise a trust which has been given for the advancement of the human race. Let the workingman regard every human being as a kinsman and work together for the common brotherhood of mankind. Let them be friends and exponents of the most complete equality to which humanity can attain.

Let them be faithful workers in the cause of human advancement and strive to better the conditions of the poor and friendless, so as to secure to the great mass of their fellows the just reward of toil.

To merge all minds into this channel cannot fail to result in the good of the whole.

Race with your fellow man, but do not run a foul race; do not treacherously disable your comrade. Run with all your might on the path of right to reach the goal of independence and progress, and thus keep forever at the head of truly Socialistic ideas.

Why should those who do the world's work be poor, and they who do nothing but work others be fabulously rich?

There is already a strong sentiment which is continually growing stronger, for the public ownership of all public utilities. By this is usually meant the railroads, street car lines, telegraphs, telephones, etc.

Strictly speaking, public utilities are those that serve the public necessities. Now what is more necessary than food and clothing and homes? These we must have, while we could get along without riding on cars or using the telegraph or telephone. Then why not public ownership in the means for producing those necessities, with equal opportunities for all?

In "The Fourth Estate" the effectiveness of newspapers in fearlessly exposing political and judicial corruption and the safeguard they are to the public are interestingly and convincingly set forth. A young, earnest newspaper writer and editor is the central figure, and his battles with a dishonest United States judge against big odds and against the cunningly underhanded machinations of the lawyer lobbyist Dupuy form one of the most valuable as well as most entertaining pieces of fiction of the day. That the false judge's daughter, the reigning beauty in the fashionable life of a leading city, should play a sensational part in this gripping story of strong honest man and of strong dishonest men, fighting each other in a war of dollars, evidences the romantic possibilities of the narrative. This is a story of today's America, a fact story torn out of life's book, dealing with the most vital issues that confront every one of us. Romance and humor vie with stirring action for supremacy in this instructive and fascinating novel, which teaches that the path of duty is the path to love and happiness and that in success, nobly won, lie rewards of greater and more lasting value than in a triumph ignobly and more easily gained.

CHAPTER I.

> Burke said there were three estates in parliament, but in the reporters' gallery yonder there sat a Fourth Estate more important far than they all.—Carlyle.

THE silence in the managing editor's room of the Daily Advance was abruptly broken by the entrance of Rose McHenry through a private door. His eighteen years of active newspaper work in a career extending from cub reporterhood to his present important office had drilled into him the necessity, even the habit, of constant action, quick thought, keen and accurate perception and readiness for emergencies. He hastily threw off his coat, glanced at several papers laid on his desk while he was out at dinner and seated himself in his managerial chair. He wrote a few rapid words on a pad of paper at his right hand as he pushed a button with his left to summon an office boy.

"Any one here while I was gone?" McHenry queried sharply as the boy entered.

"Yes, sir. Woman whose boy was pinched wants to keep it out of th' paper. Been outside two hours. She's sittin' outside an' bawls an' bawls an' bawls."

"Tell her we're printing a newspaper and I've left for the night."

"Then there was a few phone calls. We handled 'em all 'cept th' last. He was a man named Nolan, an' he wanted ter see you."

McHenry immediately became interested.

"What'd you tell him?" he asked, rising.

"That you was to th' theayter."

The managing editor picked up a Congressional Directory and shied it forcibly at the lad.

"Well, next time, young man, you tell him I've just stepped down to the night editor's room. Nolan; remember his name—Nolan. He's the new owner."

"What'd you tell him?"

"Cheese it, another owner. Nobody keeps us long, do they?"

"No," responded McHenry laconically. "Like certain other luxuries, nobody keeps us long. We're too expensive, Durkin."

The boy grinned and hurried away to summon the night editor at McHenry's command and to dispose of the "bawling" woman.

McHenry seated himself and turned to the ever ready telephone at the right hand corner of his desk:

"Hello, Miss Stowe! Get me Mr. Nolan—Mr. Michael Nolan—on the wire right away."

As the managing editor hung up the receiver Moore, the night editor, entered carrying a bundle of galley proofs in his left hand, a schedule in his right.

"Well, Moore, what have you got for part 1?" asked McHenry.

The night editor repeated rapidly in a dead flat monotonous voice:

"Thirty-five columns of ads. Telegraph editor's hollering for twenty columns. He just got a couple of nice flashes—one from Pittsburg about a man eloping with his daughter-in-law; very fine people. Another first class murder from St. Louis. Local has twenty-six scheduled, sports are very heavy, bowling, fights, checkers, and Kentucky's shut down on racing; they want two pages. We've got a tip that Morgan has the asthma. Steel will probably open soft on Monday."

McHenry took down the telephone receiver and held it expectantly at his ear. He took the proofs from Moore's hand and began looking them over. They contained important articles which had been set up, but which he had not previously seen.

"Hello, there's a live one," he suddenly exclaimed, glancing over one of the sheets. "Bill, I'd like to run that one. Senator Deering dead yet?"

McHenry turned to the telephone.

"No, not yet."

The managing editor was disgusted. The telephone rang.

"Hello! Who's this?" cried McHenry savagely. But his voice changed abruptly to its most sugary tones.

"Oh, Mr. Nolan, this is Mr. McHenry. Yes; why, the boy said I'd gone to the theater. He's new to newspaper offices. Yes, indeed. He doesn't know — newspaper men have little time for theaters—no, indeed—ha, ha!. I was downstairs in the press room all the time—yes, indeed; trouble with the roller on cylinder 5 of the color press, and I happen to have a bit of a mechanical turn of mind—yes, indeed. Anything I can do for you, sir? Hope we may have the pleasure of showing you over the office—your office—pretty soon. Yes, sir. Tonight? Yes, any time. We're always here. Yes, sir. Thank you."

He hung up the receiver and reverted to his natural voice. "It's the new boss, Moore. 'S coming down tonight."

"I wonder if that means more changes?" observed the night editor as he filled his pipe.

McHenry sighed.

"Ain't a man who gets into this business a sucker?"

The night editor smiled grimly.

"Wonder what kind of a joke is this Nolan anyway?" he asked.

The night editor's brow wrinkled.

"All I know is that he's a Colorado miner with a hill of ore all his own." He glanced over the night editor's schedule. "What is this T—T—golf or politics?"

"Taft—both; golf 2 down—conference with Aldrich."

McHenry snorted.

"Gosh, the White House is dead since Teddy left!" He pointed to the schedule. "What's this? 'Baltimore, one column.'"

"Double divorce. They exchanged partners."

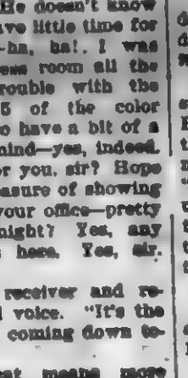
"Good people?"

"Not much."

"Fifty words 'll be enough. Dead heavy—stupid paper," grunted the managing editor.

McHenry rang for the boy, Durkin, and on his belated arrival sent him to summon the city editor. "What you got?" saluted McHenry as the editor arrived.

Downs, the city editor, went straight to the point.



"Are you going to use that follow up story about Judge Bartelmy throwing the Lansing Iron company into a receivership?" he queried.

"I dunno. Any kicks on this morning's story?"

"I should say yes — telephone going all day."

McHenry turned and pounded the desk with his fist.

"If they kicked on that they'd get our jobs on this." He pointed at the proof of the new Bartelmy story which he had taken from Moore. "All the same, the judicial ermine is getting rather soiled these days. It makes me sore to think of what they're pulling off on the federal bench. He's bad all through, that Bartelmy. Whose story is it—Brand's?"

"Double divorce. They exchanged partners."

"Yep," responded the city editor.

"By heaven, he is a newspaper man."

"That's why he won't last in this office," put in Moore sarcastically.

"Yep," supplemented the city editor.

McHenry's face took on a resigned expression as he said: "Well, we'll have to pass it up." He paused. "It's likely to be libelous."

He laid aside the proof sheet and resumed his perusal of the schedule of articles intended to be used in the next morning's paper.

"How about divorces?" McHenry asked suddenly, raising his head to the city editor.

"The Sarrup divorce is up again. Two new corespondents named." He pointed them out among the photos.

McHenry drew a few lines on one of the photos and rang for the boy. "Bring me an artist, Durkin," he ordered. The artist soon appeared.

"Here," spoke up the managing editor, "take these corespondents and run 'em with the two you had yesterday, but fix those up different. Put a hat on one and the other in low neck, and put Sarrup himself in the middle with a dado of hearts around." McHenry changed his mind. "No; make it a big question mark of cupids and the caption 'Which of These Women Does This Man Love?' Yes, and frame in his wife too. Three columns."

"Yes, sir," responded the artist, starting away with the photos.

But McHenry called him back.

"Hey!" he cried. "Make that 'Which of These Beautiful Women Does This Man Love?'"

The artist, bowed in acquiescence and escaped.

McHenry took up another photograph.

"Ha, what a beauty!" he said enthusiastically. "What's she been doing?"

"She is Judith Bartelmy, the judge's daughter. She gave a reception today," answered Downs, the city editor.

"High society all there as usual, I suppose?" mused McHenry. "The Bartelmys are an old family, and they've held on to some of their money. Here, Downs," he went on, "play her up for two—no, three columns. Maybe it will square it with the judge for what we did to him in the paper this morning. You explain to an artist."

"All right."

"The new boss, Nolan, is coming down to look us over tonight," added McHenry.

"Wonder where we'll all be working next week?" was the city editor's reply over his shoulder as he quickly made his exit.

The boy came in and laid a card on the managing editor's desk.

"Miss Judith Bartelmy!" exclaimed McHenry as he glanced at it. "Well, what do you think of that, Moore?"

"It's a kick sure, and"—

"By the way," interjected McHenry deliberately, "this girl, Judith Bartelmy, isn't she engaged to Wheeler Brand?"

"Seems to me I've heard something of the sort," assented Moore vaguely.

"Well, same here, and Brand wrote that story this morning showing up her father, the judge, as a trickster of the worst, most dangerous sort. Now the girl comes to this office—probably to defend her dad. Say, Moore"—the managing editor was becoming excited—"things are getting warm around here. Brand certainly had his nerve with him to hand such a roast to his prospective father-in-law."

McHenry turned abruptly to one side and reached for his coat, which he quickly donned.

"Show her in," he called to the boy.

Moore hastily retreated from the room as Judith Bartelmy entered, leaving the judge's daughter alone with the managing editor. McHenry had long flattered himself that he had met many attractive women in his time, but as he rose to meet Judith Bartelmy and surveyed this fashionably gowned young woman he made a mental note that she surpassed them all. Her blond features were of distinctly patrician cast. Her blue eyes had the magnetic qualities so envied by the many less fortunate women, and the pure whiteness of her finely curved chin and neck was advantageously revealed by the low cut collar of her princess gown of wine colored silk which clung to a figure that celebrated artists had pronounced unusual in its symmetry.

"I desire to complain about the article attacking my father this morning," the girl began.

"Yes?" answered McHenry.

"I wish an apology for it."

"Is this a message from your father?"

"That's not the point. This is the first time in his life that any one has ventured to question his honor. The article is false, and I think your paper should apologize for it immediately."

"Before saying as to that," returned the managing editor, "I should have to refer the matter to the new proprietor, Mr. Nolan. You know it is not customary for a newspaper to take back what it says."

The judge's daughter raised her eyebrows in surprise as she drew close to McHenry's desk, where he had resumed his seat.

"I should think you'd have a good many lawsuits," she suggested.

"Oh, no; not many. We go up to the line, but we try not to step over it." He picked up several newspapers from his desk. "For instance"—scanning the papers—"I don't think your father will feel inclined to sue us." He rose as if to end the interview.

Judith, however, was not to be thus disposed of.

"I don't want to detain you," she remarked, "but I should like to ask you who was responsible for that article." She seated herself in a chair which McHenry indicated.

"We never tell the name of our writers," answered the managing editor.

Her father had diplomatically suggested to her that Wheeler Brand might have written the story. This she found difficult to believe. But she must be convinced, and one of her motives in visiting the newspaper had been to ask him—to ask him to tell her that he was not the author of the new attack on her father. She must see him and learn the truth from his lips alone.

"Is Mr. Brand in the office now?" she asked.

"Yes, I think so."

"Would it be possible for me to see him?"

"Why, yes, if you wish. I'll send for him."

McHenry summoned the boy and told him to "ask Mr. Brand to come in."

"We've noticed"—she hesitated—"all his friends have noticed that he's becoming very radical lately." Judith rose from the chair and stepped nervously toward the editor's desk.

"Oh," he laughed, "they all get that when they're young, like the measles."

"And that's something they all get over, isn't it?" she asked eagerly.

"Yes," responded McHenry, stirring as though to leave the room.

Judith stepped squarely in front of his desk.

"But I don't want to disturb you. Can't I go to his office?"

"He hasn't got any office, and they're all bunched in the local room in their shirt sleeves smoking. You wouldn't like it. We haven't a reception room." McHenry laughed as he spoke.

In his shirt sleeves, rolled to his elbows, with quick steps and squared shoulders, Wheeler Brand, one of the ablest men on the city staff of the Advance, strode into the office of the managing editor through the door leading from the city and telegraph rooms.

"Yes, sir," he greeted McHenry. Then he stopped short both in his steps and in his speech. He had caught sight of the managing editor's visitor. "Why, Judith!" he gasped. "What in heaven's name are you doing here? I"— At this point words failed him, and he stood staring at her, with his breast heaving violently as the result of his surprise.

The girl was also deeply disturbed in spite of her previous knowledge that she was to be confronted by the man she loved.

McHenry thought that the moment had arrived when his presence was no longer necessary.

"Miss Bartelmy has asked to see you for a few minutes," he said, rising and starting toward a door. "You may talk here." A handful of proof sheets rustled in his grasp as he disappeared.

Wheeler Brand started toward the girl.

"Is there anything the matter?" he queried anxiously.

She hesitated before answering. Then she spoke determinedly.

"Yes; two things. First, you did not come to my reception this afternoon; secondly, there is that article about father this morning."

"I couldn't get off from the office to attend the reception, and I am awfully sorry," he protested. "But as for the story about your father—well, did he send you here?"

"No," he didn't send me. But I couldn't help seeing how disturbed he was, and"—

"Then he knew you were coming?"

"Why, yes." Judith was trying hard to understand what he meant by coming out her father's knowledge of her present mission, one which was to be decidedly unpleasant.

Wheeler was plainly impressed, and unfavorably so, at the girl's reply.

"Oh!" he ejaculated disappointedly.

The quickly thinking girl detected the significant tone of the newspaper writer's reply and hastened to explain.

"I heard my father say at dinner that he feared there would be another attack tomorrow," she said, "and I hoped through you to prevent its publication and to make the Advance apologize for what it said this morning. I don't see how your paper dares to publish such things."

"But, Judith," he answered, "we couldn't dodge a story as big as that. We had to print it. That's what we're here for."

But she was still insistent.

"Oh, of course, print the story, but I mean the insinuation all through. Why, by using such unfair means newspapers can bring discredit on any one. Mr. McHenry refused to apologize. He wouldn't even tell me who wrote it. Do you know?"

Brand gave a violent start. At first, in her present mood, he hardly dared answer the girl. With a determined effort he pulled himself together and answered her question.

"Yes, I know who wrote it."

"Who?" Judith leaned toward him, gazing intently into his eyes.

"I wrote it," he announced.

Judith started back aghast.

"You, Wheeler? Why?" she cried hysterically.

"I had no choice." He struggled to maintain his grip on himself.

"You had no choice?"

"Judith, when this Lansing Iron case first broke loose," Brand responded firmly, "I saw straight off that it was one of the slickest—well, that there was a big story in it. I didn't know your father was involved in this at first. I just followed the path, and when I saw where it was leading me I wanted to turn back because of you, but I couldn't." He stopped for a moment, then went on: "No, no. I could not stop—not—even—for—you!"

"But it isn't loyal of you," was her response. "It wasn't like you—to attack him suddenly in this way. It's almost as if you struck him from behind. And do you not see, Wheeler, that you are hurting me as much as you injure him? I am his daughter, Wheeler, and if you ruin my father you will ruin me."

"I wrote it, Judith," he announced.

She covered her face with her hands, and her bosom heaved convulsively in her anguish.

Incorporated for $100,000.00 under the laws of the State of Ohio.

Its object is to install a Motor Bus Line in Columbus, that will surpass anything ever attempted before, in SPEED, SAFETY, RELIABILITY, ELEGANCE and COMFORT.

7 tickets for 25 cents to start, and cheaper as soon as practical is what is planned.

Recent tests made prove the MOTOR BUS to be the future means of CITY PASSENGER TRANSPORTATION.

The Columbus Motor Transportation Company will put it within the power of the citizens to furnish transportation for themselves, and at the same time show an earning on their investment.

With small capital we can establish a better passenger service, than the trolley car affords. The trolley, with their slippery tracks and dangerous overhead wires will disappear from the city streets. The independant MOTOR CAR will take its place.

"You Can Jail Men, But You Cannot Jail Principles."

"In the year 1906 three workingmen leaders of a great labor union, were kidnaped and illegally and violently taken from the State of Colorado to the State of Idaho and placed on trial, charged with the murder of ex-Gov. Steunenberg. (After trial all three were found not guilty of the crime and acquitted.) The applicaiton for a writ of habeas corpus which would restore their elemental rights was denied by the United States Supreme Court, Justice McKenna only dissenting. The Supreme Court decided that the law provided no relief for kidnaped workingmen.

"Thereupon Fred D. Warren, editor of the Appeal to Reason, sent through the mails an offer of $1,000 for the 'kidnaping' of ex-Governor Taylor of Kentucky, who was at the time admittedly a fugitive from justice.

"The Obvious intention of this offer, frankly stated by Warren at the time, was to provide the workers with a concrete proof of the class Bias of the Supreme Court, his belief being that in the case of a rich and powerful man the Supreme Court would decide differently than it had done in the case of the three workingmen.

"For this Warren was convicted by the United States District Court and sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labor and a fine of :1,500, notwithstanding that it was proved that before sending the matter complained of through the mails he had consulted the local postmaster, who informed him that the matter was admissible to the mails, and that similar offers are commonly circulated through the mails.

"This sentence has now been affirmed by the United states Circuit Court of Appeals and Fred D. Warren must go to jail.

"Now, this case does not stand alone.. It is but one of a multitude of decisions rendered by our courts in recent years, characterized by a spirit of bitter h stility toward the working class, of which the numerous injunctions in strike and boycott cases are glaring examples.

"In views of these facts, be it resolved: That the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party of America hereby express its emphatic protest against the growing abuse of the judicial power in the interest of the capitalist class, and against this latest severe, unjust and vindictive sentence, which is in marked contradiction to the democratic institutions of the country.

"That we call upon the comrades everywhere to arrrange for mass meetings,, all over the country to protest against the growing menance to the working class through the subservience of the courts to the capitalistic class, and against this latest despotic outbreak of capitalist venom and revenge."

Origin of Some Words.

The lemon, it is said, takes its name from the city of Lima.

Loadstone is a corrupt translation of Lydius lapus, the stone of Lydia.

The word money reminds us that the coinage of the Romans was struck at the temple of Juno Moneta, the goddess of counsel.

"Dollar" is from the German thaler, which is derived from Thal, the valley of Joachim, in Bohemia, where the silver works were situated that made this coin.

The word "panic" has a curious origin. According to Herodotus, the god Pan was supposed to have assisted the Greeks at the battle of Marathon, 490 B. C., striking such a terror into the Persian host that they fled to their ships in perfect dismay. From that time the Greek word panikon was used to describe unreasonable or sudden and overpowering fear.

Some resolutions too.
There's room for 'provement—'deed there is—
In lots of things you do.

You can learn to be more neat.
It's really a disgrace
The way you spill your sawdust round
And dirty up your face.

You can quite make up your mind
Not to cry and pout
Just because your wig is gone
And one eye is losted out.

I hope you'll be much gooder now
And try and mend your ways.
It's such a 'sponsibility
To have a child to raise!

HAVE A CARE.

Speak sweetly to the good landlord,
And don't complain a bit,
Or else he'll take his real estate
And go abroad with it.

Be decent to the railroad king,
Nor rail against his cars,
Or else he'll take his rights of wy
And export them to Mars.

Approach the upright banker man
With words of milk and honey,
Or else, in righteous anger he'll
Refuse to take your money.

Please let the trust magnate alone,
Nor seek to regulate,
O else he'll take his trust far off
Unto another state.

And to the infant industry
Contribute al you can,
Or else they'll take it in their arms
And run it in Japan.

ONE-SIDED PROSPERITY.

During the year ending June 30 the railroads have earned nearly a billion dollars. It was the most highly profitable twelve months they ever experienced. Some other concerns, like the Steel Trust, the Standard Oil Company and the big banks also raked in enormous amounts of profits. In agriculture, too, there was a bumper crop and from it farmers—to a small extent—and traders and speculators to a great extent received returns. With such a crop and with such evidences of activity in transportation, in the exchange of money and in the earnings of the big companies, there should be general wealth and joy and prosperity.

But there is another side to the question. All the charities organizations are calling loudly and insistently for more funds. They say that the number of people who went dinnerless on Christmas Day, the number of children who went giftless, was far greater than ever before. Besides the regular organizations individuals, for advertising purposes, are also active and seek large sums of money to provide food for the hungry and toys and clothing for the children.

These two are facts, and when contrasted lead to the conclusion that big crops and great activity in production intensify and increase poverty. Because the corn, cotton and wheat fields have yielded liberally thousands must starve, because cattle and sheep have been plentiful thousands must go without meat, without shoes and without adequate clothing. The more bountiful the returns from the earth the more certain it is that a large body of our people will suffer want through no fault of their own.

As soon as the elevators are filled, and soon as the winter vegetables are housed, as soon as the hides and the wool are stored, as soon as the lumber is sawed and stacked, Capitalism stands between them and consumer. Capitalism, with all the storehouses bursting, becomes the specter of starvation.

But the capitalist class did not produce these things. The farmers and members of the working class, those who perform useful labor, produced them. Mr. Morgan, most of the time, was in Europe buying rare books he cannot read and cornering the art market. Mr. Carnegie was traveling between his estates in Scotland and his plantations in America. Mr. Rockefeller was playing golf. Other eminent and respectable capitalists were recuperating from the arduous task of taking in profits they did nothing to produce.

Now there has come a sagging in production. Countless men are out of work. For the work they did they have nothing to show. But the capitalists have plenty to show for the work they did not do. The profits of the railroads and other concerns make it manifest. The calls of the charities organizations make manifest also the pathetic, perilous condition of many workers.

It is horible that things should be so. It is absurd that they should be tolerated. But while the workers have no control of the means of production things will continue to be so, and there can be no change until the workers drive out the expropriators.

THE GREAT WAR SCARE.

The governor of the State of Washington has wired the Columbus Dispatch the interpretation of a nightmare from which he has just awakened. During his aberation of mind the governor saw the Jap navy landing five thousand troops on the Pacific coast and at the points of bayonets they forced all the people to make their exit eastward over the Rocky mountains, thus leaving Mr. Jap in peaceable possession of Uncle Sam's garden spot along the Pacific coast.

We imagine the governor got his "Christmas goodies" a little too rich (along with a number of newspaper editors) and he overloaded his digestive organs until this aparition came to relieve his cataleptic condition.

This "War Scare" is caused by a germ that works on certain brain cells and is known in our modern parliance as "Graftitis", and when the contagion becomes widespread it often reproduces brainstorms and its eruptions break out on the pages of our daily newspapers such as observed in this instance of the governor of Washington and the Columbus Dispatch.

The Socialist will prescribe a tonic for the governor and the Dispatch, and if they fail to profit by it we will worry no more about their mental conditions.

Namely, we would have all "War Scare" patients take note that there is no nation today on the face of the earth that can muster an army of her subjects who will obey an edict of a Czar, Emperor, King or President to enter another's country for the purpose of exploitation on behalf of her magnates. The working class who are always called upon to do the fighting are on to the game. They have learned that all the wars in the past for the purpose of exploitation have been fought by themselves to appease the greed of the exploiters.

If governor Hay will take the time to tone up his system on this truth as expressed above, he need have no more apprehension of these terrible nightmares.

Why should those who do the world's work be poor, and they, who do nothing but work others be fabulously rich?

As the captains of industry have nothing to do with industry except to absorbe its product, why should they not retire on a salary of nothing, the amount they earn?

The street railway employes stand in the car vestibules these cold days and chill to the bone, so that the company may save the expense of heating, and, in turn, pay them a dollar extra on Christmas—a token of "Good will toward men." How do you harmonise these two principles?

Society has paid for every railroad in the United States through land grants and subsidies, but the nation does not own them. The working people do all the work of production, even to the managing of the big industries, but they do not reap the profits from them. We live, not for ourselves, but for our masters. All to our shame!

The next time you pass down High street observe some of the prices that are marked on goods displayed by merchants in their show windows. Especially note the furniture display, since so much of their goods are made simply of wood. These goods are sold at a profit above first cost of production of 100 to 700 and some over 1000 per cent.

The derby hat you see avertised in the window for $3.50 costs less than 50 cents to produce. The same with the $3.50 shoe you buy. Who made these goods? The laboring class. Who uses the greater proportion of them? The working class. What is the logical conclusion?

It is always expected that many objections and misrepresentations will be urged against Socialism by those who profit and graft upon the necessities of the people, but it remained for a newspaper published in central Ohio, to base its chief objections on the fact that Socialism will abolish the need for charity, and thus destroy the beautiful system and institutions for dispensing charities.

Wouldn't it be a terrible calamity if poverty, misery and degradation were abolished, and justice were established among men so that every person, having equal opportunities, could arise to the fullest height of his manhood and live the complete life without the degrading dependance of charity?

Any movement [illegible] asks for a change in government or conditions, must have for its purpose the betterment of the status of humanity, in order to demand or receive the support of the people. It is conceded that this is the aim and purpose of Socialism Why, then, does it fail to receive the support of all honest people? The desire to profit by an injustice to others, will account for the opposition by the tyrants of capitalism; and ignorance or lack of moral courage will account for many others.

It is often urged that Socialism is beautiful in theory, high in purpose and aspiration, and convincing in logic, but it won't work in practice. It does not take a wise man nor a scholar to see the absurdity or inconsistency of this fallacy, for whatever is corect in theory must necessarily be correct in practice. Otherwise it could not be corect in theory.

Under a late ruling of the Supreme Court of Ohio municipalities may issue bonds to the amount of 2 per cent of the tax duplicate. The tax duplicate for 1910 is $101,588,930, 2 per cent of which is $2,127,14.46. At 4 per cent interest it costs us over $235,000 interest annually, or about $690 a day, to carry these bonds. The banks prosper under this ruling. The people will suffer.

In the midst of life we are in debt—about $167 per capita to the Banks alone.

The capitalist politicians are always telling the workers that it is a great advantage to be born poor. They are very unnatural parents. They want none of these advantages for their own children.

Our little urban neighbor, Lancaster, has worked out a business problem that Columbus should take note of, namely, by her management of the municipal gas plant she has cleared over $33,000 in ten months, with a fixed price of 15 cents per thousand cubic feet. This shows what Columbus could do for her people if she would only exercise a thimbleful of common sense.

Our incoming legislature should repeal the "tax penalty" law, or at least that part of it which taxes the penalty of 15 per cent on taxes not paid the first half year. The first half of the 1910 taxes are now due, and if not paid by a certain date, the county treasurer assesses a penalty of 15 per cent. And to add to this injustice, some appointee is given an additional ten per cent to collect it. This should not be. The people should demand its repeal. The legal rate of 6 per cent should be added and no more. Straighten up, men. Get officialdom off your backs. You have been bending under their oppressions too long.

Officialdom is responsible for another arbitrary law, namely, that which give county and city officials the privilege of closing their offices every Saturday at noon, thus locking up all public records.

They have no right to deprive the public of the use of public records any time during business hours, and the people should demand the repeal of this law.

Investigations conducted by the New Jersey State Bureau of Labor shows that in the last twelve years the wages of factory and workshop employes have advanced 22.3 per cent, while the cost of the principal articles of food has increased 40.96 per cent. This, of course, means that the real wages of labor have fallen, that the standard of labor have fallen, that the standard of and approaching ever more that of the "pauper labor" of Europe. But let us console ourselves with the fact that, during the same period of time, the strength of our navy has been steadily increasing, so that now our Dreadnought tonnage is almost as great as that of Great Britain.

THE WRESTLING GAME.

The "Mysterious conductor" gave the citizens of Franklin County a great wrestling match. The unfair rulings rulings of the umpire had much to do with the rendering of the much discused decision.

In many proceeding contests a second degree hammer-lock found few openings.

Two hundred dollars has been posted for a return match. The match to be under the rules of "Assault and Battery". DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES."

All men should be equal before the LAW.

The city inspector has arrested several persons, for useing fraudelent weights and measures. We realize that all scales need adjusting now and then, "Mr. Inspector," DON'T forget the scales of JUSTICE.

"THESE ARE MY JEWELS."

Earl Pender, one of the Columbus Street Car STRIKE-BREAKERS, was brought to the penitentiary to serve a life sentence, for the murder of a poor old harmless woman. The cause of death was resistance to being robbed, while driving home with her husband from market. The aged farmer has never recovered from the sad shock. Earl Pender may expect to receive a letter fro hmim who "went south" recently. Deploring the fact, that Pender was compeled to stand trial in Cleveland, instead of Columbus.

"A sleight-of-hand performer generally is a good juggler."

THE MODERN COMEDY OF ERRORS.

A drama was enacted in this City recently. The stage settings were unique, especially the mourning dress worn by one of the cast. The pose and mannerism that were exhibited thru the various acts, was in keeping with the plot, and in harmony with its environments.

"NOT GUILTY" was a great "PLAY." indeed.

Next Fall the greatest melodrama of the day, will be presented in Columbus. It will be called "THE WRATH OF THE PEOPLE."

"Actions always speak louder than words.

THE FREE EMPLOYMENT BUREAU

Material hope signifies something "to go to".

The man out of work descends to despondency, when the last hope fades Picture in your mind, the spectacle of some frail piece of humanity, marooned on a drifting iceberg in an open sea. This is the condition mentally of the man out of work, in a city without friends.

The doctor who enters the home of his patient with a sad face seldom effects a cure. The lamp of hope is filled with the oil of consolation. Someone must hold the lamp.

Hence those in charge of these industrial exchanges learn to judge men by conditions. The present incumbent of the Columbus office Superintendent W. F. Hauck, should be congratulated on results achieved thru hard work. It would be hard to find a more valuable servant for this line of public service.

"AND THERE CAME A BIG WIND."

"Oh! ye modern Herods gaze upon the shattered fragments of youy would be idol, Caesar, with all his power and splendor, would have faded to insignificence, had he "the king of the winds ascended to his ambitions legislative throne.

Rejoice! "oh ye people, for the reincarnation of the spirit of King Herod, has been deprived the power of checking the tide of human progress.

Send in your news we will do the rest.

The safety valve that prevents bloody revolutions, is FREE SPEECH. Let the public schools become social centers. Because you are a BIG MAN don't sit on the safety vale.

WELCOME—"YE OF THE SANDS."

The Columbus and vicinity Conference Board of the International Molders Union will meet at Columbus on January 1st, in their 33nd semi-annual convention.

Some years ago the International Union, recognised the merit of the district organization idea, to more expeditiously carry on the constantly increasing volume of business of the International organization. The Columbus and vicinity conference Board organised with 6 local Unions of molders As the years roled on, it has extended its influence until at the coming convention the major number of the local unions of molders in Ohio, as well as the cities bordering upon the Ohio river in West Virginia will be represented During the early part of the year the members generally in the jobbing and machinery branch of the trade enjoyed a substantial advance on the minimum wage rate. At the recent annual conference between the representatives of the Stove Founders National Defense Association and the International Molder's Union an additional 5 per cent on molding prices was agreed to on stove work, making the percentage 20 instead of 15 on the dollar.

At the recent convention of the A. F. of L. held in the city of St. Louis, a question of jurisdiction over Brass Molders was amicably settled through friendly conference between the Representatives of the Metal Polishers, Buffers, Brass and Silver Workers Union, and the International Molders Union, which gives to the Molders Union jurisdiction over all Brass molders.

While the trade conditions are slow at present the molder has long since learned the lesson that through organization is essential to this well being.

This convention will bring to our city one of the greatest students of the labor problem, John P. Frey, editor of the Iron Molders Journal. Mr. Frey, is one of the contributing writers to the U. S. Bureau of Labor.

TRUST YOUR FUTURE DESTINY TO WISE MEN—NEVER.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.,—The Secretary of the Navy has struck a blow at the eight-hour day by ordering all construction of machinery for the "New York," the big battleship building in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, to be transferred to open shops at Schenectady.

Schenectady is a ten-hour shop.

The Brooklyn Navy Yard is an eight hour shop.

Machinist now working in the Brooklyn Navy Yard have sent a strong protest to their union officials in Washington asking that action be taken to stop von Meyer in his continuous attempts at union-wrecking.

Under von Meyer's plans the Brooklyn Navy Yard will become merely a station in which machinery made in other shops—always ten-hour shops—is assembled.

DIPLOMATIC BEGGARS.

The man or women who use their official position to extort a part of the earnings of poor helpless working girls to provide their masters a present, ARE COWARDS OF THE FIRST WATER. Its bad enough to have a firm appeal for funds to fight labor legislation outside of the works, but this providing of fur caps and rugs etc., by "the widows mite" system is a method rotten to the core.

The defeat of "SMITH" of Marion for speaker was a big victory for Labor.

Talking of "smiths" we mention two of the nuisance class: jaw smiths and jokesmiths. There are other "Myths."

James B. Reynolds will be in the State Senate with Wm. Green. We may expect some beneficial results from this august body.

The Legislature will soon convene. Many of our watchmen are on the field. This will be an important session for LABOR. The opposition are already arraying their forces, collecting funds and counting the "shekels."

SYSTEMATIC SOCIALIST CAMPAIGN AMONG WOMEN.

(Woman's National Committee, 180 Washington St., Chicago.

The Woman's National Committee of the Socialist Patry is preparing for an active campaign among the women throughout the United States.

They have prepared a series of twelve monthly programs, which will serve either as a lesson for home study, or for a public, propaganda entertainment.

These programs consist primarily of a brief lecture, especially prepared for this work by Anna A. Maley, Woman's National Organizer. About this lecture as a center are grouped songs, recitations, and readings, selected from the best Socialist literature. Each month leading Socialist writers will contribute articles upon the subject under discussion, and these will be printed in the Socialist papers.

To assist in this educational work among women, the Woman's National Committee has prepared special leaflets for free distribution, not only at these public entertainments, but from house to house. Each of these leaflets appeals to a distinct portion of the working-class women. One leaflet appeals directly to the girl in the workshop and factory, another to the teacher; another to the housewife, the domestic servant, the woman on the farm, and so on. In this way, hundreds of thousands of women will be reached during the next year.

The subject of the January program is Universal Peace. The leaflet for this month's distribution is entitled, "To the Working Woman". All of the programs will be printed in the Progressive Woman, the official organ of the Woman's National Committee.

Every Socialist local is vitally interested in this special campaign among the women. The National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party is sending out thousands of notices to the party membership, calling their attention to this activity among the women, and urging their hearty support.

EXTRACTS FROM THE REPORT

Of the Woman's National Committee.

Chicago, Dec. 12, 1910.

To the National Executive Committee.

The Woman's National Committee has been seriously at work devising the most simple, direct plans for accomplishing the greatest possible results from its work in the year 1911. The plans are prepared along two lines, the distribution of literature, and the giving of monthly programs. Each line will be discussed briefly.

1—The Distribution of Literature. As our party literature is a large extent is written in a style that does not at first appeal to the average woman, the Woman's National Committee has prepared the following leaflets: Woman, Comrade and Equal, A Word to Working Women, Reply to Anti-Suffragists, Why You Should Be a Socialist, The Crimes of Capitalism, Underfed School Children, Work Among Women, The Worker and the Machine, Boytown Railroad, Cheap Motherhood in America, and an Appeal to Working Women. It is now preparing the following: Woman as a Housewife, The Enfranchisement of Women, Woman Upon the Farm, Industrial Education Among Women, Women as Domestic Servants, Woman as a Teacher, Propaganda and Organization among Foreign Women.

Through these leaflets we are reaching the women in every walk of life. Regular distributing days have been selected, though as far as possible it is desirable that these days coincide with the distributing dayh of the local. In January, we shall distribute a leflet apealing especially to the working girls in the factory, store, etc. In February, a Suffrage leaflet shall be distributed. This is the month for the special Woman's Day demonstration, and we hope that the National Executive Committee will again issue the call for its observance. In March we shall distribute a leaflet to teachers, and so on through the months of the year.

We wish to recommend that the locals supply themselves with these leaflets fr free distribution at all meetings. Also that all National Organizers be requested to carry these leaflets for free distribution, the Woman's National Committee furnishing them free of charge. We further recommend that the National Organizers be requested to carry sub cards for our official organ, the Progressive Woman, and that every effort be made to increase its circulation.

2—Monthly Programs. The second line of work is to be in the nature of monthly programs, prepared by the Woman's National Committee. These programs will consist primarily of lessons upon subjects already selected by the committee. That these lessons may be possessed of continuity of thought and insured of sympathetic, systematic treatment, their prepartion has been placed in the hands of one person. Comrade Anna A. Maley has consented to do this.

Songs and recitations will be grouped about the lessons as a center, so that a first class evening's entertainment will be possible. This program shall be printed each month in the Progressive Woman.

To assist us in developing each subject from many standpoints, the General Correspondent will ask some of our foremost Socialist writers to furnish us with short articles upon them and shall see that they are published in all of the leading Socialist papers.

Through these programs we hope to educate men, women, and children to an understanding of the fundamental principles of Socialism. We hope to develop capable women wokers into organizers and lecturers. The programs being published in the Progressive Woman, we hope thereby to increase the circulation, the sub cards being sold at each meeting.

The above plans will apply to all sections of the United States. Through the regular, systematic distribution of literature, and the increased circulation of our papers, especially the Progressive Woman, through the public entertainments arranged about a study lesson as a monthly program, and through the intelligent co-operation of all of our National Organizers, we belive that the results of our next year's work will be most gratifying.

Certain locals are calling for special work for children. To supply this demand, the committee requested Comrade Bertha Mailly of New York, and Comrade Livingston of Chicago, to prepare something for this line of work. Comrade Mailly sent in her report a few days ago, though it has not yet been acted upon by the Woman's National Committee. It is sufficient to state that this line of work is being developed.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE POSITION OF WOMEN.

"With equal, moral and mental capacity women now have education equal to that enjoyed by men. Where is the deficiency which bars our way to the full exercise of our social and political efficiency?"

—Julia Ward Howe.

Ohio has the distinction of being the birth place of co-education. Oberlin college was the first in the world to open its doors to women as well as men. This happened in 1833. Thus it is almost within the memory of women yet living that it was considered unwomanly to be educated. In the good old days a woman's duty consisted in looking pretty, patching and scrubbing. Not only was learing for women considered unwomanly and unnecessary, but almost impossible. How, reasoned the men of a century ago, could the frail and delicate brain of a girl be able to grasp the idea of a Virgil, or struggle thru a problem in Algebra? The futility of attempting to educate girls was PROVED. Mark the words, by a learned scientist, who calculated the average weight of a woman's brain to be less than that of a man's. Men the learned scientist died, other learned scientist weighed his brain. Alas, they found it weighed less than the average, he had declared for women. In Boston, the fountain of culture and progress, the school board after urgent pleas from the girls of the city, finally conceded them the privilege of occupying the seats in the high schools during the summer. If the boys did not want them! And this was less than a century ago! After all civilization has made considerable advance, even the women are not yet considered safe guardians of their own children, or safe enough to vote to change the law which takes the co-guardianship away from them. Girls are now given educations whenever boys are as a matter of course.

But as we laugh at the peculiarly distored ideas the world held about women a few short years ago, so will our immediate descendants laugh at OUR ideas. Our educational principles have grown, nor so our political principles. We have overcome ancient prejudice sufficiently to believe in educating women but we have not become civilized enough to permit women to use their education in VOTING

As it was once unwomanly for a woman to know calculus and Greek, so is it now unwomanly for her to know tariff and taxes. Perhaps, however, we are a little more civilized than this Knowledge is now a respectable womanly attribute. The wrong comes thru the use of that knowledge POLITICALLY. At present a woman may learn all about economics and politics at college, but to retain her womanly dignity, let rarely exhibit this knowledge and never in a spirit of ACTUAL INTEREST. Oh, no! Our government and its laws are rotten and dirty let the women of the land remain quietly at home and knit. A woman may know what text books say about supply and demand and panics, but she is too impractical to use her knowledge safely. Let her remain modestly at home and make a dollar a day provide five with food and clothing. What if she does have more ability and education than the colored janitor across the way, she is only a woman and her sentiments would run away with her. Oh, no indeed she cannot vote! Let her support the missions, churches and charities, her sentiments might be against graft and boodle! A woman is to be shielded and protected, the evils of our government would corrupt her if she were to attempt to purify conditions by voting. How amusing. It will be to our descendants that our wise and practical men never feared that the corruption of government and politics which their regime had bred and fostered was not a too contaminating influence for women to rear their children.

The Socialist Party presents the startling spectacle of a political organization recognizing women as the equal of men. We have heard a great deal about all men being created equal from our Democratic and Republican friends at electin time, but the Socialist Party is the first and only party to include women in this classic phrase. The Republicans and Democrats still place women in the men's-pretty-play thing-class with the little-brain not strong enough to study mathematics. The privileges and responsibilities of suffrage have been conferred upon woman in five states in the country. It is one of the important and fundamental doctrines of Socialism that all women everywhere should participate equally with men in government. Socialists, believe with Lincoln that all should share the privileges of government who assist in bearing its burdens by no means excepting women."

The reason is evident. The Socialist Party in an organization working for the emancipation of the toilers of the nation. Of these over 6,500,000 are women. The ballot is the only protection possessed by a workingman, does not the working woman need the same shield and word? That the right of suffrage will soon be enjoyed by women as a matter of right is as certain as the continuance of equal education for both sexes is positive. In the words of Hon. John D. Long: "I have no more doubt of the ultimate voting of women than I have of the progress of the human soul, or than I have that, when that time comes, a more enlightened age will look back on our discrimination against one of the sexes in this respect as a relic of barbarism, a slavely melting glacier of barbarism and prejudice."

Ella June Purcell.

WOMEN, WHERE DO YOU STAND?

At the Warren protest meeting recently held at Girard, Kansas, Mrs. May Wood-Simons, well known as a speaker and writer by Socialists in America and Europe, said:

"We should not forget that side by side with Mr. Warren in his struggle stands his wife and has stood his family, who have aided and encouraged him in all his fight. Out of Girard must go a protest so loud and strong that the outside world will say surely this man stood for the right, for those who are his fellow citizens believe in him. It is for a great principle for which he stands. You must decide sometime when you will stand in this great struggle, and I would have you stand, not only with Warren and his family, but also for the cause of righteousness for which they stand."

Women, where do you stand today in this great cause of righteousness? If today you can not intelligently answer the question, go away by yourselves and ponder well over the situation, for tomorrow you must answer.

Your place is in the front ranks where women comrades are enthusiastically allying themselves with the men comrades in the work who labor so faithfully, patiently and unceasingly to bring about the ultimate triumph of the glorious principle of Socialism.

Down through the ages women have ever heard and harkened to the piteous call of woe, responding with all the rich wealth of soul devotion known to their natures. In the Socialist movement she should shine a veritable pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night. Her light should be a beacon of inspiration whose gleams will reach out and kindle the hearts of all people to a realization of their duty to their fellow men. In all the centuries no cry of woe has sounded with more terrible force. Shall it fall in vain on women's ears, deafened by the glitter of mammon's god? Or will they, true to all traditions of their kind, lend their help, no matter how humble, in leading the work slave out from his captivity into the light of freedom?

"Love thy neighbor as thyself." Can any portion of this command be carried out, when in beholding our neighbor's suffering, we raise not a finger to assuage his wrongs?

Remember, "so long as we love, we serve." When we love all mankind, then we will desire to render to all mankind the only true service, the service of love, love "that seeketh no evil", but rather the greatest ultimate good, the doing unto others as we would ourselves be done by.

"That sunrise effect is all wrong," said the stage manager of a New York musical show. "What's the difference?" replied the scene painter. "Nobody who goes to a musical comedy in this town knows what sunrise looks like."—Washington Star.

Milady's Mirror

"If a woman were so situated that she might have either a brush for cleansing her teeth or dental floss and a mouth rinse which would you consider she should choose?" was asked a well known dentist, and there was not a moment's hesitation in his answer.

"Floss and the rinse," he declared. "Dear me, if I could impress upon my patients the truth of this my income would decrease almost immediately.

"You see," he continued, "few persons apply a brush as it should be, and even when it is employed to the utmost it cannot remove all particles from between the teeth as thoroughly as would a piece of dental floss. If more persons would realize that minute pieces of food decay and create acids, and these constantly acting on the enamel cause cavities to appear, they would remove food particles after every meal and then use a mouth wash to disinfect the teeth and preserve the enamel.

"A brush is hardly more than a buffer for polishing the surface.

"Polishing the surface is necessary, of course. But when a toothbrush has been used in this fashion it should be held and drawn down on the upper jaw so that the bristles start at the tops of the teeth, finishing at the edges. This operation is reversed on the lower jaw by bringing the brush up. By this process many particles will come out.

"Following such treatment a piece of dental or soft silk embroidery floss should be passed between the teeth, and finally the mouth should be rinsed. Brush, floss and rinsing make the ideal care. Failing that, I should say use floss and a rinse.

"A mouth wash that is pleasant and effective is made by putting half a teaspoonful of spirits of camphor into a wineglassful of water.

"Another is made from one ounce each of tincture of myrrh and compound tincture of cinchona, diluted when used with twice this quantity of water.

"These are inexpensive and, if kept bottled on the washstand, can be used easily."

For Your Hands.

A cooked potato is excellent as a means of cleaning and whitening the hands. The potato should be cut in half and rubbed over the backs and fingers after they have been soaked for a minute or two in warm water. Potato should be used in this manner instead of soap.

If the hands have become very much stained with ink, they should be rubbed with lemon juice. Should this fail to remove the stains, a good plan is that of adding a little pearl ash to water and dipping the hands in the solution, rubbing them well with a piece of flannel until the marks have disappeared. Care must be taken to avoid washing them with soap for some time afterward or the spots will [illegible]

Nursery Window.

Open the nursery window to its widest extent and the door also directly the children leave the nursery, so that a thorough draft may blow through it. Nothing so quickly purifies the room as this method. When the children are in the room the air can often be freshened if the door is opened and swung quickly backward and forward

CHRISTMAS GHOSTS.

With my secret sorrow, alone at last!
The tears from my heart rise sad, incessant;
And I sit with the ghost of a Christmas past—
For I havn't heard the ghst of a Chritmas present.

6,000 PATIENTS

Women Help 4,000 Dogs, 100 Birds 1 Goat and 1 Man.

In the first year of its existence the New York Women's League for Animals has treated six thousands animals at the Free Clinic and Dispensary at 326 Lafayette street. The officers of the league, of which Mrs. Jas. Speyer is president, will recommend in a report soon to be issued that a hospital be established in which horses can be cared for.

Of the 6,000 patients treated 4,000 were dogs. The miscellaneous list included about 100 birds, one man and one goat. Last summer fly nets were given to drivers and there were stations where horses could drink. The league's request that drivers discard whips was complied with in a good many cases. Arrangements have been made with 130 drug stores on the East and West Sides for free telephone service and postcards on which the society can call for injured or sick animals.

Daddy's lost the job he had a-drivin'
on the line,
An' so he's took to carryin' a advertisin'-sign;
All 'at he's a-makin' now is fifty cents a day,
Walkin' up an' down, an' givin' little bills away.

Daddy he tells mammy 'at it won't be long afore
He fin's smudder job at sumpin 'at 'll pay him more;
An' Bess an' me's a-hopin' 'at he'll git soon, a-cause
It's pretty nearly 'bout the time to look for the Santy-Klaws.

I'm mos' eight years old, an' Bess is littler 'an me,
An' Mammy's been a-promisin' 'at we could have a tree
Big as what the Dolans had las' year
Chris-mus,
An' there's seven little Dolans, an'
there's on'y two of us!

But Mammy now is worried 'bout the rent a-comin' on,
An' we don't drink no more coffee, an'
the bag o' flour's gone;
An' the coal 'at's in the closet is a-gittin' down so fast
We sif's the cinders over twice to try an' make it last.

So it don't much look as if a tree's
a-goin' to be had,
An' we've stopped a-askin' Mammy
'cause it on'y makes her mad,
An' we both have made it up to stop
aplaygin' Daddy too
Fur centsus to buy candy with, jus' like we used to do

But we keep a hopin' to ourse'ls it won't be allus so,
An' a-prayin' an' a-prayin', though we
we don't let Mamma know,
If there's a job to spare, 'at Daddy 'll git it right away—
Sumpin' 'at 'll bring him more 'an fifty cents a day"

Are any of the children who read this column interested in birds? If so, this clipping from a magazine may contain some information which is news to most of you:

In California the woodpecker stores acorns away although he never eats them. He bores several holes differing slightly in size, at the fall of the year, invariably in a pine tree. Then he finds an acorn, which he adjusts to one of the holes prepared for its reception. But he does not eat the acorn for as a rule he is not a vegetarian. His object in storing away the acorns exhibits foresight and a knowledge of results more akin to reason than to instinct. The succeeding winter the acorn remains intact, but becoming saturated, is predisposed to decay, when it is attacked by maggots, which seem to delight in this special food. It is then that the woodpecker reaps the harvest his wisdom has provided, at a time, when, the groundbeing covered with snow, he would experience a difficulty otherwise in obtaining suitable or palatable food.

Here is a poem supposed to be written by a little boy after spending the Christmas holidays at Grandmamma's. He is evidently a more fortunate little boy than the little tenement children mentioned above.

MASTER JACK'S SONG.

You may talk about your groves
Where you wander with your loves
You may talk about your moonlit waves that fall and flow;
Something fairer far than these
I can show you if you please;
'Tis the charming little cupboard
where the jam-pots grow.

CHORUS.

Where the jam-pots grow?
Where the jam-pots grow?
Where the jelly jolly, jelly jolly jam-pots grow.
The fairest spot to me,
On the land or on the sea,
Is the charming little cupboard where the jam-pots grow.

There the golden peaches shine
In their syrup clear and fine,
And the raspberries are blushing with a dusky glow;
And the cherry and the plum
Seem to beckon you to come to the charming little cupboard where the jam-pots grow
CHORUS (as above)

There the sprightly pickles stand,
With the catsoup close at hand,
And the mormalades and jellies in a goodby row
While the quinces ruddy fire
Would an anchorite inspire
To seek the little cupboard where the jam-pots grow.
CHORUS (as above)

Never tell one of your bowers
That are full of bugs and flowers!
Never tell me of your meadows where the breezes blow"
But sing me if you will,
Of the house beneath the hill,
And the darling little cupboard where
the jam-pots grow.
CHORUS (as above)

—Laura E. Richards.

For the Children

A Stanch Little Ship With a Big History.

An event of unusual historic interest recently took place in New York harbor. It was the decorating of the two masted schooner Polly with a memorial tablet telling of her valorous deeds in the war of 1812. The Polly was built in 1806 and is therefore 105 years old. She is sixty-one feet long, of old fashioned model and is still engaged in trade. The little schooner retains her original planking of three inch oak, and her eight inch ribs are as sound as when placed in her over a century ago. Under command of Captain Jud-thain Upham the Polly sailed from Salem on Dec. 7, 1812, on the lookout for British merchantmen. Two days later she captured an English full rigged ship. In all she took eleven prizes. Once she fell a victim to superior force and was taken prisoner by the British frigate Phoebe. A few days later she was recaptured by a United States man-of-war and thus was spared for the honor which lately came to her.

New Year's Customs.

In some countries, notably in Great Britain and in some cities in the United States, the new year is welcomed in by festivities on the eve of the day. In Scotland, for instance, it is customary to celebrate New Year's eve with some festivity, which is prolonged until past midnight. At the stroke of 12 every one present wishes each other a "Happy New Year." The custom is also common in many parts of Germany, where the salutation is "Prosit Neu Jahr."

Similar to this custom are the religious "watch meetings" held in some of the churches in this country on New Year's eve. In England on New Year's eve in some houses a curious custom of superstition is observed. At the stroke of 12 which ushers in the new year the party, already waiting on the stairs, begin to ascend the stairway backward, taking a step at each stroke. Every step successfully mounted means a happy month, every stumble a reverse. Of course it is one of those playful superstitions which are not taken seriously.

A Trick Game.

Have, say, 100 toothpicks and agree with some one to take alternately from the heap any number not exceeding ten. The trick is to have the last toothpick or toothpicks whatever your adversary may do. For this remember the numbers 1, 12, 23, 34, and so on increasing by 11 each time. Supposing you have the first draw, you take one pick only, and your opponent can never have a chance, for if he draws as many as possible at one time (ten) you take another one, making the total 12. Say now he draws eight picks, you take three, and so on, making whatever number he takes into 11. When you have got to 89 you will see that the other player has no chance. Two persons who know how this is done cannot play at it, because the first player must infallibly win. Supposing one who does not understand it to have the first draw, he will be sure to make a mistake somewhere in the game and enable you to attain one of the before-named numbers (12, 23, 34, etc.), whenever are quite safe to win.

FRANK POLYGAMY.

"For tomorrow's official ceremony invitations have been issued to two hundred of the leading residents of the district, who, with their wives, will number, it is expected, nearly five hundred, which is the full capacity of the hall."—Exeter Express and Echo.

The Public Recreation Movement.

Civic Playgrounds mean public support and public control. No other social and educational movement has ever shown the profound significance that this does and we are only at the beginning of a movement already nearly universal.

Play is not a fit object for charitable support, because it is not for any special class of children. No child can resist the play spirit and become a well-rounded social being. Play is a part of the life itself. It is necessary, if the child shall live. It makes him to all appearance no better off educationally or financially; it is instinctive, having been handed down through unnumbered ages and, fortunate for our citizenship, the play instinct has taken on a new lease of life, and the sidewalk where the boys shoot craps and pitch pennies, the alleys and stables where they play cards and read dime novels and carry on all kinds of immoral practices, are fast being superceded by playgrounds and recreation centers. The knowledge of what games to play and how to play them, is being taught by trained workers, correlated with activities which bridge the gap between the play period of the child and the economic period of the adult.

Records show that juvenile delinquency increases as our schools close. Statistics also show that there is a great gap between the ages of 10 years and 25 years. That the greatest number are in school at 10 years of age, that the greatest number are at work at 25 years of age and that 75 per cent of our criminals are such because of idleness, between those ages, this being the period when most boys and girls are started in careers of crime. The cause is almost universally attributed to lack of proper recreational facilities to the whole people. If we do not furnish the facilities, personal enterprise will do so, and furnish attractions that will appeal to the idle and curious because it is their money that is wanted.

Community feeling must be aroused, and social leadership of the young must be provided. History informs us that the downfall of governments has been due to unsocial tendencies more than to lack of education of the people. Students of social problems have observed this and today every effort is being put forth to correct the tendency in this country. Playgrounds, social centers, recreation centers, and many other public provisions are being supplied.

Jacob Riis says:—

"As for the man who can sit in his church and turn deaf ear to the cry of children slaving in workshop and tenement when they ught to be out at play, he is neither a Christian or a good citizen. He is not a Christian, for his soul knows no mercy, and he is a traitor to his country, for more precious than the wealth of its forests and mountains and fields is the citizenship which child labor deprives. The boy and girl—they are its wealth; they are the republic itself in the day that is to come." No more significant demonstration can be given to this movement than these few figures as to what communities all over the United States are doing.

There are 320 towns in the United States that have from 5000 to 6000 inhabitants. Seventy-four of these towns maintaing playgrounds are in the north central section of the United States. The average number of playgrounds in each of these towns is three. The average amount spent each year is $700,000. Out of 56 cities with a population of 20,000 to 28,000, 33 have supervised playgrounds. The average number of playgrounds in 12 of these cities is three. The average number of trained supervisors employed by each of those cities is seven. The nine cities reporting the amount of money spended for the year spend an average of $4340.00 each. Malden, Mass., Hoboken, N. J., and Wilkesbare, Pa., support their playgrounds through public taxation. Four cities maintain their recreation work through means of private subscriptions, and the remainder of the 17 have a combination of city appropriation and private philanthrophy.

There are 33 cities in the United States having a population over 100,000. Every one of these municipalities has esthlished and is maintaing public playgrounds for children. Fifteen of these cities provide social centers all the year aroud.

The playground and social center movement in Columbus is being watched by those outside with interest, as it is not considered as a movement of unstable growth in this city. The playground movement, fostered by the different voluntary organizations, has become a part of the community. The social center movement, and this movement can hardly be departed, brought about by the wise insight into the needs of this city by a few untiring workers, will ultimately bring the parent and child into more intimate relationship. Then that sense of trust and affection which is highly essential to good citizenship, will be largely attained through the development of Columbus of a greater social consiousness than it has experienced heretofore.

The Movement in Columbus.

As is well known, the Federation of Women's Clubs started the first playground in Columbus about nine years ago, and they have continued their interest in the work up the present time, when four grounds are placed to their credit. Later the U. C. T. Women's Club came to the rescue of the city and added another ground, and still later the Young Ladies' Playground Association was formed to supplement the efforts of the Federation and for years they have maintained three grounds. No one can fail to honor the dilligence and sacrifice which these good women have contributed to the city's welfare. In the year 1907, the City itself began to assume a responsibility in this regard and has every year since that time maintained a Civic field for bathing and general outdoor athletics at the junction of the rivers. This field was as bare, however, of apparatus as some of the bathers were of clothes, but nevertheless the results were not small for the city. It is hoped to bring conditions up the standard next year.

In the same year that the city opened the Civic Field, it began to be impressed upon our citizens that the idle and ill-directed time of many of our youth was not limited to six months in the summer. The power of directed play for the development of an efficient citizenship must be employed the year around. The results in physical health, mental strength and moral developments to be found in gymnastics, athletics and recreation, must be reaped the whole year through. It further appeared that not the youth only, but all our citizenship, adult, as well as youth, were entitled to such pleasure and enjoyable stimulus as might be afforded at small expense in the several recreation centers. So another society this time largely composed of men and backed by men's organizations, was formed to maintain winter recreation centers. Two centers were maintained during the last years.

Two chief defects were observable in all these laudable efforts. First, they had too much aspect of charities, whereas they were really democratic institutions; the universal need of recreation could and should be provided by all the people out of their own funds. Second, they were independent of each other, and could not secure the maximum results since no one of the several organizations could afford to employ permanently an expert director of its work. Naturally, too, there was constant danger of friction between the societies, and danger of duplication of some activities and neglect of some localities. It was therefore a matter of satisfaction to all the societies and to the generous public when it was possible for these societies to pool issues, with the following objects in view:

1—To give efficiency to these activities by employing one competent trained man to direct the work of all these societies.

2—To raise the money needed for the Director's salary.

3—So far as possible to prevent duplication of demands upon the time and purse of the generous public. It was hoped to prevent more than one call per year upon the donors of funds, or to eliminate such calls entirely by 4—Persuading the city authorities to provide city funds for this great public necessity.

To attain these objects a Committee on Co-Operation was organized consisting of four representatives of the School Extension Society as follows: Supt. of Schools, J. A. Shawan; Dr. F. A. McKenzie, of the Ohio State University; Rabbi Jos. S. Kornfeld, Temple B'Nai Israel; W. D. McKinney, Chamber of Commerce; The Federation of Women's Clubs, represented by Mrs. L. C. Laylin, President, and Mrs. A. P. Morris, The Young Ladies' Playground Association, represented by Miss Hanen Roberts and Miss Madge McCarthy; the United Commercial Traveler's Woman's Club, represented by Mrs. L. A. Steward, President, and the College Women's Club, represented by Mrs. C. S. Derby.

This new unity of supervision with a rapidly growing and widespread belief in playgrounds and general public recreation was the fact which justified the City Council in creating a Department of Public Recreation, and thus becoming responsible for its future maintenance and administration.

Note.

The next paper will be a statement of the work accomplished during the past year and the proposed work for the coming year.

Quadrennial Appraisement.

What a disappointment, farce, and fraud this has been. The Chamber of Commerce, no doubt, meant to have different results, and the taxpayers of Columbus expected better work for the large sums of money expended for it. The public has been taught a costly lesson, which it should profit from. The work of appraising the real estate of Columbus could be contracted for with responsible and capable real estate men of this city for at least 50 per cent. of what it has cost already under the past inefficient, lazy, and good-for-nothing board. For $25,000 a contract could be effected, to be paid when the work was satisfactorily performed. It may not be generally understood that the defunct board did not personally examine any of the real estate of the city, either buildings or grounds, but it is nevertheless true. They remained in their rooms, and depended wholly on the reports of incompetent persons. If the Cleveland company wins their $5,000 claim, the members of the late board of appraisers should be compelled to settle the claim. It should not be paid by the taxpayers.

Under the new law real estate was supposed to be appraised at about its true value. It is not an easy matter to do that in every instance; but there should be no excuse for the many flagrant violations of the trust reposed, such as has been practiced in this city, where buildings are placed at from 10 to 40 per cent. of their present value in some instances in the business centers; while in some of the residential districts, especially the humble homes of the working classes, there has been a decided advance over the contract price for the same. We know of an instance out on Franklin avenue where there are four houses of the same character and size and same space of ground where there is a difference of 25 per cent. in values made by the board. We also know of a fine corner residence on Broad street that is placed on the duplicate at a lower figure than an 8-room house on Champion avenue that is not worth 40 per cent. of the Broad street house, and the same can be said of properties on Miami avenue and elsewhere.

Mr. Herbst, president of the board of review, is right in his contention for a thorough revision of the buildings. He establishes his sincerity in the matter when he cites his own case, where a building of his is piced at $400, while he has an insurance of more than $2000 on it. The board of review had better take this matter up and equalize the valuations and do justice. The people should not stand for anything short of that, and should not be deceived by what has been said editorily by one of our daily papers and held by some officials that the next quadriennial apparisement would be better. The talk these same officials indulge in, that we are better off than other cities in the state, does not go down, and will not do, and neither is it true, especially as regards buildings. If the same percentage of valuation of the humble homes was placed on the more costly ones, an increase of $30,000,000 would be added to the $170,000,000. And it will require that much of an increase before you can have a tax rate of $1.25, much less $1.00, as claimed by some. Those persons who are depending on a very great increase in the personal property returns for taxation will be disappointed, no doubt, at least this year, on account of the great inequality of the appraisements returned.

Mr. Herbst, president of the board of review, has furnished the following appraisements on some High street properties, showing the values of them in 1908 under a basis of 60 per cent. of the true value, and the present rate. It is worth studying. The majority of these properties are as good, or better, than they were ten years ago. The average business man takes a pride in keeping his place of business in a neat, presentable manner and will not allow it to run down, and therefore it is but just and reasonable to consider the buildings as valuable now as they were in 1900; and besides the cost of construction is 25 per cent. greater:

CITIZEN TAXPAYER.

Here are a few wellknown High street buildings appraised at less than they were 10 years ago when the appraisement was made on a basis of 60 per cent. of the true value. President Herbst read a list of these appraisements before the Columbus real estate board in support of his argument that the real estate duplicate should be increased.

In the list that follows the first figures after each building represents the $1900 appraisement at 60 per cent. of the true value. The second figures give the recent appraisement, which the law says should have been at the true value.

Echos From the Spargo Meeting

I am sure that you are ready to agree to this proposition: If you are to oppose Socialism, if you are to fight it, you will need to understand it, that you may fight it intelligently. In order that you may oppose Socialism effectively, it will be necessary for you to understand the fundamental principles of the movement itself.

If, on the other hand, you are to take your place in this great army, if you are to become active workers for Socialism, you will likewise have to know what the movement is, what it represents, and why they are what they are. In a word, it is necessary to understand Socialism in order to either advocate or oppose it. I come to you in the spirit of the old prophets, crying to you, come, let us reason together. The movement of Socialism is so vital to the world that you cannot do otherwise than reason carefully all of its claims.

At the International Socialist congress at Copenhagen, I notice that our German comrades came as of yore, telling of nothing sensational, of nothing very remarkable except the quiet steady progress toward the goal they have set to reach in Germany. The Socialist party has by actual test the largest membership of any party in Germany, and with whomever I discussed the political situation, I got invariably this impression that they believe in the next election our German comrades will win by a tremendous margin, and that Germany will pass under the control of Socialist government.

Invariably I found that the men and women who are doing big things in Germany are allied with the Socialist party.

In Austrial again one finds very much the same situation. In Austria the movement touches not merely the politics of the country; it touches the intellectual and even the domestic life of the nation.

In France, since the great Dreyfus case, it has not been possible to elect a cabinet without having men in that cabinet who call themselves Socialists.

I remember the movement in England in its early days when Wm. Morris used to say that you could put all the Socialists in England in a four-wheeled cab, and then they wouldn't have money enough between them to pay the cab-man. I remember when six or seven of us met in a cellar and issued a manifesto to the people of Great Britain on the subject of the unemployed. Some how that manifesto found its way to Mr. Gladstone's desk. Mr. Gladstone was at that time Prime Minister. He read the leaflet and threw it away with contempt, saying: "Socialism can never take root in England, it is a foreign idea out of Germany."

And when the movement first reached the attention of Bismarck, he declared it could never flourish in Germany because it was an English idea.

The Socialist movement is a world movement. The world is its theater. It is taking not one country or another for its battle-field; but wherever men and women are facing the problem of wealth and poverty, we find this international Socialist party.

I was humiliated in Copenhagen when I had to confess that in America we had not succeeded in electing a single representative to our national parliament. But our party's representative has at last entered the national congress and I am sure at the next election you will send others to bear him company. But we have elected something infinitely better, infinitely bigger than our single representative. We have elected the idea of Socialism into the hearts of Millions of people.

Socialism should be considered under four heads: first, Socialism as a criticism of existing society; second, Socialism as a theory of social evolution; third, Socialism as a vision, ideal, goal to be attained; fourth, as a movement making for the attainment of that goal.

People sometimes reproach us and say that in preaching this class struggle, we create class hatred: that the class war is a thing of our own making. I say the war is no more a war of our making than the rain which fals from the skies is of our making. What we insist on is that the Socialist party is the only party in the world today that is proclaiming that the war ought to stop, and the Socialist movement is the only movement that is making for the end of that class conflict.

It is at least to the credit of the Socialists that its heart is always set toward progress. We do not believe with Thomas Carlyle that the destiny of mankind is downward. We do not believe that the golden age of the world was yesterday. On the contrary, we believe that the golden age is tomorow, in the future: that the best days are the days that are to be, and that the worst days are the days that are behind us. We believe that the destiny of mankind is upward, onward, Godward, if you like. That man is moving upward ever toward the light is clearly marked in the footprints in the sands of time which tell of that great, heroic, faithful, patient struggle that he has endured with the best. And we know that the best warrant for our party of a golden age to come, is the long journey man has come and the progress he has made.

Let us try, if we can, to measure some of that progress, and see whether we can catch its significance and understand how the progress has been made. We go back to the beginning of things, way back beyond recorded history. We see there man, natural man, little like the man of today. He is a brother to the brute, kin to the ape, and there we see him living a brute life, little superior to the brutes around him. In order to get a living for himself, armed with stick and stone, he must struggle constantly with the beast. In that struggle with the beast to which his life is devoted, there is no respite, no leisure, no chance to stand erect, no chance to think for a single moment.

Watch him in the struggle and you will see that he gradually gains on the beast. Later he can stand erect. It doesn't take all of his life now to earn bread for himself. And now that he stands erect he begins to ask himself about the universe in which he finds himself. He looks into the sky and it is to him only a terrible mystery. He looks out upon the ocean, and again it is the same terrible mystery. He sees the lightening and his heart is stricken with fear. He is now in the world but master of very little of it.

Take man today, and the lowest man in our civilization is as far removed from the prehistoric man of the natural type as that man was removed from the ape.

Today, man has the universe at his command. The lightening no longer strikes terror to his heart. He goes down into the depths of the earth and wrenches from nature the secret treasures of her heart. In a word, the universe is man's kingdom. His scope has been enormously enlarged. His kingdom has extended, until today the great problem of production has been mastered. There is today no reason under the sun for the hunger of any human being. Man has mastered the great problem of production, but alas, man has not mastered himself. He has not mastered the problem of his relation to his fellow man. Man has mastered the problem of how to produce wealth: he has not mastered the problem of its distribution, and that problem of how to distribute the wealth of the world, so that all men born into this world shall enjoy an equal chance to share all of the resources of civilization.

I claim as a Socialist that equality of opportunity for every child born into the world. That is the only equality that the Socialist care anything about. You can not deny that claim for equality of oportunity, without denying human justice. You can not deny that claim of equal opportunity without denying social justice and without denying your world vision of human brotherhood which has inspired man's best and noblest thoughts and deeds. You can not have social justice until there is an equality of opportunity.

We must say to the world, you shall not rob our children of their childhood. We have sworn by the holiest altars that we will not halt, we will not rest until we have broken down every power that stands between the right of the child and its full share to all of the glories of all of the centuries.

I sometimes have pensive moments and in those moments I wish that I might be given omnipotent power for a brief season. I wish it were possible that I might become the spirit of Socialism incarnate. Then I would go to the homeless, the ragged, the rejected, the outcast, the despised and say to them: "I am the spirit of Socialism. I am come to you that you might have life and have it more abundantly. Here is food, here are clothes, here are homes, here is work, a chance to earn your living in the sweat of your brow. They are all yours, take them, and not all the powers of mammon can take them away from you."

It has just been discovered that at least one of Tolstoy's books is on the London County Council's forbidden list. The book which has incurred the wrath of our wise city fathers contains twenty-three folk stories, among which is an adapted Russian legend, "The Empty Drum", which is frankly antimilitary, and which has circulated among the peasants of the Volga districts, expressing their dislike of war. For this reason it was not considered fit reading for the young people of England, and has been ostracised ever since.

ECHOS FROM THE SPARGO MEETING.

This book, if allowed to circulate, might have a tendency to injure the growth and progress of the Boy Scout movement. Little wonder it was been banished.

The commissioner of public instruction of the state of New Hampshire has made a demand upon the legislature of that state that legislation be enacted looking to prevent the employment of girls in the cotton factories between the hours of 6 p. m. and 6 a. m. for the reason that the immorality of this class of employes is alleged to be unspeakable.

Ex.

Under Socialism it will not be necessary for girls to spend the beautiful flower of their youth amid the foul environment of the factory. The immoralities of the employes comes from the poor, degenerate human nature, made so by a heritage of work hardened ancestors which has been handed down to them and from which they have been given no chance to escape. When we give to human beings a little time for development, we will have a race of strong individuals; strong mentally, morally and physically.

Recently a young girl came from Ireland to Columbus and obtained a position in one of our leading stores. One of the clerks in speaking of her to another clerk mentioned the fact that she had the map of Ireland all over her face. The unfortunate remark was overheard by the girl, who turning around asked: "Madam, which side of my face is the Atlantic on?"

THE QUESTION BOX.

Why do Socialist assert that labor produces all wealth when Capital and ability are also necessary in the production of Commodities? How can labor produce wealth without land or tools, or without a directing intelligence?

C. D. L., Mt. Vernon, O.

Labor produces all wealth because it has the ability, and uses it in a productive way, and because labor has prepared the land and made the tools with which it labors. The most important ability of all abilities is the ability to produce. The laborer has his ability and uses it. It is a part of his labor power.

All this talk about ability is merely an effort to obscure the real issue between the laborer, who has the ability to both make and consume, but makes more than he consumes, and the capitalist, who has the ability to both make and consume, but consumes more than he makes. No ability is of any consequence unless put to use. The producer uses his ability to make things, the Capitalist does not use his ability to make things, but exercises another kind of ability to take the things that the laborer has made.

Ability amounts to nothing more than being able to do something. A burglar is able to get into your house in the night and carry off things to which he has no moral, legal or economic right. It is his ability to manipulate a jimmy and dark lantern without disturbing your slumber that makes his business profitable to him, and unprofitable to you. The Capitalist is possessed of a similar ability, by which he extracts surplus profits from you, when you are awake, with your eyes wide open. The Capitalist "does you" because he is able to do it; because he possesses the ability of "touching" you, like the burglar, without your knowing it.

But it takes more than mere muscular ability to be a productive laborer. The simplest form of labor requires some quantity of brain energy as well as of muscular energy. In the most of the productive occupations the laborer uses both mental and physical ability. Mechanics at the bench exert more physical energy than mental. The foreman of the shop may use his head more than his hand, but if his thought and directing intelligence is a necessary part of the production process, he is a laborer as much as the unskilled apprentice who swings a sledge. Each uses his ability to a productive end.

There are some capitalists who possess and exercise some of this productive directing ability, and to the extent they do they are productive workers; but as capitalism developes, the real capitalist functions, we exercised less and less in the necessary work of production. Instead of personally directing the work, he hires that work done by laborers, who possess more of this kind of ability than he does.

His ability is then directed toward getting railroad rebates, destroying competitors, and, by various means, so far as he is able, securing a monopoly of whatever production he is developing. This kind of ability is what makes big capitalists, but has nothing to do with producing the goods.

Directing intelligence, or ability, is for sale and can be bought as well as obedient service. The real capitalist buys both, and, in the larger industries knows little or nothing about the skill or technical knowledge possessed by his superintendents, foremen and workingmen.

The workers, as a class, not only use the machines, but they make the machines. The Capitalist makes nothing but profit, and makes this only by paying those who work for him less than their labor creates. Were he to pay the laborer in his shops all, or the equivalent of all that their labor creates, there would be nothing for him, and capitalists are not in business for nothing.

You will therefore see that the wealth used by the capitalist was not created by him, but was created by labor.

The mills and the machinery have all been made by workingmen because they had the ability, and because they exercised it. The kind of ability the workers possess is necessary in producing things to eat, wear and protect human beings from the elements. It is the ability of the working class applied to nature that sustains and developes human life. The ability of the Capitalist is of no social significance, and contributes only to his taking for his private use what the actual workers have made.

Socialists do not assert that laborers can produce wealth without either land, tools or directing intelligence; but they do assert that laborers have brought the land into cultivation and made it productive; that laborers have made the tools, including the complicated tools called machines, and that the directing intelligence in production is supplied by labor and by laborers of the working class to a far greater extent than by employers.

The result of all this is that the working class is sufficient unto itself. It has the necessary ability and exercises it in producing both the things immediately consumed by society and the machinery by which such things are made. All the wealth that the capitalists own and use in the capitalist process of making more profits out of the working class, was produced by laborers, and to the extent that the owners have at times helped in directing industry they have themselves been laborers.

Those few middle-class owners of industries in which they themselves labor to a greater or less extent are back numbers. They are becoming less numerous and have disappeared to such an extent that they no longer figure as a factor in the problem. But the real capitalist, who owns and hires, is here to be maintained in luxury, while as useless as the drone that wise working bees throw out of the hives as soon as they become a burden.

The ability of the Harrimans, Rockefellers, Goulds and Lawsons is not the kind of ability that feeds, clothes, shelters, instructs and entertains the world. Their ability is the kind that hogs the earth for the benefit of themselves and to the misery of those who produce their wealth. Their ability is of the kind that has in the past organized industry in harmony with wholesale methods, but is now busy putting the middle class out of business. Such people are mere parasites, and will so remain until those who are producing the world's goods become wise enough to establish an industrial system in which all who have the ability will have to do their share toward the production of the necessaries or quit consuming what others have produced.

The motto of Socialism is: "From each according to his ability; to each according to his deed." In other words let each do what he can and will, and let him have the equivalent of what his own labor produced. This is fair, just, sane, and a scientific solution of the problem of production and distribution. Under such an arrangement each owrker's ability will count for himself and not for a privately owning monopolist.

BECOMING HUMILITY.

Reports from Washington describing the spirit in which the leading Democrats have received their recent victory, indicate that their spirit is of one exalted of triumph, but of humility and "anxiety to show that the great trust reposed in them is deserved." That is very nice, and was to be expected from the Democrats. They wish to show that they can serve But you can safely wager your last dollar that they do not intend to serve the working class. They do not see that they were sent to Washington for any such purpose, and in this conclusion they are right.

As far as service to capitalism is concerned the Republicans committed no great blunder. They were faithful, ready and obsequious. But the Democrats do not lag behind in these virtues and after all these years as the second party they will probably be even more fulsome in manifesting them "They want to deserve the great trust reposed in them." They will, all right. If anything, the leading Democrats of this country are far more reactionary than the leading Republicans, and most of them lack the audacity that has charaterized many of the leading Republicans.

In fact, many of the Democrats are perfect Uriah Heeps of politics, humble, cringing, fawning to the interests. A few flout the interests, but they serve none the less faithfully for all that.

But the Democrats have no plan of legislation. They have no intention of facing any of the big problems that confront the country. They only "seek to deserve trust," so that they will get some more trust and be continued in office for the purpose of carrying out the plans of the interests.

It is a most contemptible attitude, and besides being contemptible it is cowardly and vicious. But it is typical of the Democracy.

"GENERAL OPPOSER" the mayor Opposed to Socialism.

By (Fair Fac's.)

Feller Citysens—Et has et last ben mi privelige to put one uf "Mi Policies", into active operashun, sense mi last letter.

The excident that happened at the Water Works, wus a bummerang in disguise an so favorable to the principles, uf "Mi Policies", as Jefferson an Jackson, (hoo I voted for) an which are both ded, thet I as Mayor an leading Citysan, uf our town, to wuns called a special meeting of our city council an leadiang townsmn, to diacuse, an et wuns put into active operashun wun of the principles uf "Mi Policies" an Induvitshulism"; sin this policy uf collectivism, "thet didn't work" becuse one uf the large Water Pumps at the Water Works broke down.

Just think on et, most our entire town wus shut off from water, an complaints from our leading citysens cume thick an fast. Et wus a turre-objict lesson to our fellow townsmen, an showed up the fallacy uf this collectivenessum "which didn't work," better than pen cood tell.

Es I sed in meeting, "Fellow Townsmen, kin we as Induvitshulists allow a common Water Pump to break down without warning an make fools uf us, an leave us at the mercy an no water?

Expresions agin this Water Pump, furnishing water to all our townsfolks collectively, an "which didn't work" were freely made; an some uf our leading Citysens hoo hed never express themselves; dame out openly in favor uf "Mi Policies," agin this water collectivism.

Es Zeke Williams, our councilman on pump maker sed, "Such an outrage as this wus unheard uf in the dass uf the daddies, the dass uf Induvitshulism, the dass uf Jefferson an Jackson," (hoo I voted for) an "which are both ded;" an thet it wus about time, thet we at wuns git back to the dass uf the dadies, an furnish water as we did then — namely bi the Town Pump method.

Zeke furthermore showed up how this collectivenisum; emboyed on the city furaishing water to our townfolks, hed almost ruined his business making pumps, and now, thet the pumps hed broke down, thet it wus a warning frum God agin this idea, which is Soshulism an which proved, "thet it woodn't work," an thet he stood ready to wuns, to furnish all thepumps needed to take the place uf the Water Pumps "which didn't work."

Zeke gave me his personal sheck for one dolar, with which to buy postage stamps, to be used in the mailing of "Mi Policies" an a more genral education as to their priticiples.

After a thourough discussion uf the failure uf the Water Works Pump, an "Mi Policies"., the City Council empowered me to act to wuns, an put some of mi principles into operashun, an gladly I did so.

I to wuns notified our Water Works Superinten, to et wuns shut down the Water Works, as we did not care for Water Pumps thet supplied water collectively, an "which didn't work", an which might agin make fools uf our townfolks.

Then I called a special meeting uf our most prominent townsmen, to help an give assistence to put down this evil collectivism. "which didn't work", an gladly did they respond at 5 dollars a day.

Zeke Williams; hoo now wus a firm believer in "Mi Policies"; as he hed sold more pumps in two hours then he hed in the last twenty years; to wuns took five uf our most prominent Citysens to the public square, where the old town pump hed stood, an which hedn't seen service in the last twenty years.

He to wuns put them to cleaning out the old well; an it wus a pleasure to see our most prominent townsfolks, working in the cause uf Induvitshulism agin this evil collectivism, "which didn't work"; while Zeke's men brought over a newly painted greek pump.

Bill Taylor, our most esteemed printer, to wuns hed printed thousands uf little hand bills, notyfying our Citysens uf the new order uf things as set forth in "Mi Policies", an how every man wood now hev his own well in his back yard.

Even befor the pump hed ben plaod bi Zeke an his volunteers, at 5 dollars a day; men, women an children cood be seen wending their way to the public square, carrying water pails; while Zero Jones drove up with his wagon, containing six cider barrels with the top heads knocked out.

Zero showed numerous orders for water, at 5c a gallon, to be delivered to our most prominent townsfolks. He hed never believed much in "Mi Policies", but now he wus an ardent supporter in them, an the ideas uf Induvitshulism, an water at 5c a gallon; agin the colectivus idea of Water Pumps, delivering water at 5c per 100 gallons.

Everything wus moving along nicely, as Citysens were congratulatin me on the successful operashun of one "Mi Policies." Evening hed cum on still ther wus thousands af our Citysens hoo hed not yet ben supplied with water, waiting; while Zero wus filing his cider barels.

Et wood hev done Jefferson an Jackson's (hoo I voted for) an which are both ded; hearts good, to see those principles uf Induvitshulismn that they stood for, put into active operashun thro "Mi Policies".

Es I sed, everything wus moving along nicely; Zero hed just filled his last barrel, amid the murmings uf those hoo hed waited patiently, wen the town pump run dry

The murmings then grew into a demand uf Zero thet he divide up his water, with those thet hed waited, as they felt thet he hed more then his share. Just think on it! Fellow Townsmen, wanted Zero to divide up his water — his property — thet he hed worked for. Uf course they did not no thet Zero wus going to sell this water to our most prominent Townsfolks, or they wood not hev made those unreasonable demands uf dividing up, thet are so unamerican.

Zero being an Induvitshulist, an a firm believer in "Mi Policies," refused ther extorshunate demands; an called upon me as Mayor an leadin Citysen uf our town, to assist him in upholding his Constitushunal rights, an which I gladly did, an clim on the wagon, to make an address on "Mi Policies", an the sacred rights of property.

But I fearned the unreasonables uf a mob. I hed hardly spoke, commenting Zero as an enterprising Citysen an Induvitshulist, one thet our town ought-er feel prowd uf; wen some uf our Citysens in the rear uf the crowd, an hoo cood not hear me, shooted: "Git off the water wagon." "We want water." "Take et away frum thet hog." meanieg Zero, an like expresions. Es I liked to hev died with mortification wensomething happened, as I tried to admonish them in the sacred rights uf property as garrenteed bi the Constitushion.

Part of the crowd clum on the wagon, an caught me "General Opposer," the Mayor, an leading citysen uf our town, about the waist, an threw me head fornist onto one uf those barrels; an then they treated Zero likewise. This wus anarkey uf the worst kind an I wood hev die, of I hedn't knocked out one uf the bungs; thet drained the barrel slowly.

En the mean time Citysens were passing up ther pails, while other Citysens filled them up with Zero water; think on et, an passed them back agin, amid the lafter uf the multirides.

Es I worked mi way outem uf thet barrel an come to myself, I saw some uf our most prominent Citysens with axes; destroying thet beautiful green pump. Think on et; destroying property thet the town hedn't payed for; an then a delegation uf our most prominent womenfolks clum on the wagon an notyfied me, "General Opposer," the Mayor, to furthwith hev the big Water Pumps started, thet furnish water colectively an run ther water wash power machines; or they wood souse me in the well, with all of mi cracy notions. Think on et, wus disgraced, but I did so to wuns, being married on a pratikal man.

Things wood hev ben different, an "Mi Policies wood hev proven a success, of Zero hedn't acted a hog, an natur hed supplied the water. I cood hev written differently.

Zeke Williams has sued some of our most prominent Citysens fur breach of contract, as they refused to accept the pumps that the hed ordered. He also stopped payment on that 1 dollar check thet he hed give me, to assist in the education uf the masses in favor of "Mi Policies."

Oh! this has ben a weary struggle in the principles uf Jefferson an Jackson, (hoo I voted for) an "which are are both ded," but we shell carry on this fight uf Induvitshulismn, agin Soshulismn, "which wont work," until victory as preached on our banner.

Verily this is a hard fight, an the peoples cause.

ON THE RAGGED EDGE.

This little cold snap should not have been sufficient to cause any great degree of discomfort. Well-fed, well-clothed human beings possessed of even a fair home should not have suffered. But no sooner had the cold set in than the terrible misery in which so many persons live was brought to light again and emphasized. Several persons died of the cold. They did not have decent clothing to cover them, they were without sufficient food and they had no place to go.

It was not a case of one or two persons accidentally being frozen to death Many died of the cold. Numberless others endured agony because of the cold. All the free lodging houses were overcrowded and some men committed petty misdemeanors in order to have themselves arrested. They preferred rather to go to prison than die in the streets.

But this is surface misery. If one looks for it there is little difficulty in finding it. Beneath it there is a more extensive class of people who are always trembling on the verge.

They possess a little more than the outcasts have. A sudden increase in coldness of the weather does not kill them outright. But it does add to their terrible, constant misery, and a continued cold soon kills them.

They have not enough to eat, though they have enough to drag on in a condition of semi-starvation. They have some sort of habitation. But it is neither comfortable nor decent. They are always at the mercy of the weather, the same as they are at the mercy of the retail storekeeper.

When cold increases their suffering increases. When prices of food go up, though what they had before was not really sufficient, they are forced to get along with still less. Misery, semi-starvation, acute suffering and the fear of further suffering are with them all the time.

Those who live in this condition are numerous. Usually no notice is taken of them until death is almost on them. They work and toil, but in return they are not permitted to live decently. They are among the toilers and the producers, but they suffer in performing their work and suffer aside from their work.

The extent to which misery exists in this great, rich city is vividly shown by what happens as soon as cold weather sets in. Charity organizations are overrun. But the returns from the charity organizations, much as they tell, do not tell all. For there are people who suffer to the point of death rather than apply for charity.

The idea has been carefully fostered that there is something degrading in accepting it, that a man lowers himself by doing so. "It is more blessed to give than to receive" has been adroitly twisted so as to keep away as many victims of capitalism as possible. Men were not made needlessly to suffer and the suffering that exists because of the weather is both needless and criminal.

Charity cannot put a stop to it, though charity can prevent a person from dying of cold in the street or starving to death in an alley. But such relief, which should be unhesitatingly accepted with no false show of gratitude, is one of the things the necessity for which should be forever ended. It can be ended as soon as the workers decide to end it, and the only way is for the owners themselves to assume control of the means of production.

Making of a Man.

A tired mother who had been occupied all day with an active and very troublesome boy as she sat down in the evening and thought of the numberless details in which her strength had gone said, "After all, it is a day toward the making of a man."

The Socialist

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER OF, BY AND FOR THE WORKERS

Volume 1. No. 3 COLUMBUS, OHIO, SATURDAY JANUARY 7, 1911. PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR.

The Philosophy of An Undesirable.

POLITICS and pugilism commence with the same letter and are productive of the same condition—sidestepping. One form of sidestepping calls for head work, the other footwork. One is called policy—the other art.

GOVERNOR HARMON'S message is a rare specimen of political sidestepping. It rings with expressions of economy and thrift. It sounds well, but the thrifty man or woman, who thinks while he reads and looks for things which are not discernible, after reading the message, sighs a perfectly excusable sigh and, laying down the paper, from which he read the mess of verbiage, wonder if Harmon didn't, by mistake, leave out part of his message.

AFTER waiting for a day or two, the bewildered one, comes to the realization that several things have been left out "on purpose."

WAS there anything in the message about a public utilities bill? Was the subject discussed? Was any great light thrown on the subject which was so much discussed during the last session of the legislature?

WAS there anything in the message about the proposed bill granting workmen and their families compensation in case of injury or death? To be sure, Harmon showed the right spirit in assuring the commission expense money, but he didn't finish what he started. It wasn't up to him to give his opinion as to the form bill should take—that is the province of the commission which he appointed and the legislature which will pass or reject the bill—but cognisance of the great subject should have been taken in the message. What is a message for? To give suggestion for one thing, and again to stimulate interest and to put ginger in the minds and hearts of those who are looking after the people's business.

EVEN successful bankers have chekered careers.

OLD jokes are liked best. The near-comedian at Keith's theater this week, who has a record of stage service nearly as old as his funnyisms, got a hearty laugh when he told the story of the man, who (in the story) said he was a Socialist and believed in division of property. "If you had $1,000,000 would you give me half of it?" asked one man in the story. "Sure," was the reply. "If you had two pigs, would you give me one? was asked the Socialist. "Go on, you know I have two pigs," is supposed to have been the Socialist's reply (in the story of course.)

How the audience laughed? The audience was composed of people of other political faiths—and Socialists. The former laughed at the joke—the latter laughed at the folks who laughed at the joke. The Socialist in the story could not be a Socialist in real life. He wouldn't permit Socialism to be explained to him in that manner.

So after all, the joke, while old as Methusaleh's ghost, was a good one. It made one fraction of the audience laugh through ignorance—the other laugh through knowledge.

THE man who never sins or makes a mistake hasn't enough initiative to do anything really worth while.

PROVIDENCE pity the man who doesn't want to understand! The man who decries Socialism and, when pressed for his reason, cannot give a specified one, or cannot discuss questions of Socialistic belief, is one who deserves not adverse criticism but the prayers of his friends.

To be consistent, he shouldn't bite into a good looking apple for fear that it might have a worm in it. He wouldn't take a bath for fear of getting dirty afterward. But, then, the ignorant critic of Socialism isn't consistent. If he studies the subject and then rejects Socialism, all well and good, but if he takes time to critcise that he should expend in informing himself, his support, even should he for some reason or other become a disciple of Marx, wouldn't be worth anything, in fact it would be a detriment.

TO the young wife: if you smell cloves on his breath it is not to be taken as a sure sign that he has the toothache.

Will not our City Council do us a kindly favor by passing an ordinance prohibiting the blowing of whistles and ringing of bells at the beginning of the New Year? Talk about a sane 4th of July! There are too many sick and nervous people who suffer from this inhumane practice.

Socialism is industrial democracy. Capitalism is political plutocracy. Industrial democracy means competency. Political plutocracy spells slavery.

It is a noted fact that men, who have been guilty for years of criminal and demoralizing practices upon little children, which strikes down the very foundation of our civic morality, have gone free or been paroled from serving a light workhouse sentence. Such men as Brady and Foy, who commit or attempt to commit murder, either go free or are lightly punished, where they serve the Big Interests.

On the othe hand a working man, who under the excitement of a strike in the class struggle was guilty of or charged with throwing a stone at the property of the Big Interests, were invariably given long terms in the Ohio Penitentiary, although the court was given discretion to impose [illegible] sentence.

Yes, verily, the God of Capitalism is gold.

Proposed Park Commission.

Columbus has an opportunity to do something for itself that is worthy the best efforts of its citizenship. Petitions are being circulated to secure a special election to determine whether or not the mayor shall appoint a committee of three citizens to act as a park commission, which body, if appointed, would have charge of all the city's parks, boulevards and play grounds.

The conception of the commission, taking into account what, theoretically, the commission would be supposed to do, is good. It would place in the hands of three citizens, who would serve without pay and be required to furnish $5000 bond as a guarantee of good service, the power to upbuild the city in an aesthetic way that would not only make Columbus a more pleasing city to look upon, to visit and to live in, but also would prove of lasting benefit to the citizenship, especially the young blood, which surrounded by beauty and evidences of culture and refinement, could not but grow in general worth.

If the commission is elected and serves faithfully, beautifying Columbus at a cost consistent with the municipality's pocket book, it should have the loyal support and applause of all residents, regardless of political, economical or religious beliefs.

With no thought of discrediting the men who may be appointed, and no one knows who they will be, for the election as yet isn't assured, it can be said with truth and consistency that, were Socialists, men who understand the theory of Socialism and have sufficient stamina, wisdom and energy to put those theores into practical application, appointed on the commission, Columbus would, in a few years, at a surprising low cost, see itself beautified to an extent that would amaze even itself.

As an example, or let it be a suggestion to anyone who is honored in being appointed to a seat in the commission, the lands along the city's rivers and creeks could be purchased, cleared of objectionable shacks and buildings, with their incident dump piles and unsightly places of trash deposit, and, in their stead beautiful boulevards could be built, which would at once get rid of a great moral and sanitary evil and add to the pleasure of Columbus' citizenship.

It isn't a dream.

Or, if the doubting Thomases insist on calling it a dream, let ie be said that all actualities are dreams before they materialize. Thought, which is, per se, a kind of dream, always must preceede action. If it doesn't, the thinker is an idiot.

The Profit System—profits, interest and rent, is the legitimate fruitage of Capitalism. It has fastened itself upon our body politics like a leech which is sucking the very life-blood of the nation. Why the hungry, the homeless and the destitute? Wake up, Workingmen! Tear the damned leech out of your vitals.

Property Rights Superior to Life or Morals?

It is a noted fact, that the powers of government, controlled by capitalistic interests, are used essentially for the protection of property and the large business interests, as against the life, liberty, security and morals of the working or property less class.

Of course, if any member of the aristocracy of wealth is menaced or injured, it is a heinous crime which demands summary punishment. Bit if a thug is nported to protect the property of a wealthy corporation, which got its wealth from the public, and under the guise of protecting its property, he shoots and wounds women and children, he goes entirely free. If, in the service of such corporation, a man kills a passenger and cars, a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine or work-house sentence tence, while the company pays his fine and costs and furnishes him with a music box to amuse him and relieve his lonesomeness.

In the mean time every laboring man or boy, who threw a stone at the property of such corporation, under the excitement of a strike against the unjust conditions and broken promises of the corporation, and some who did not throw any stones, are sent up for a term of years in the Ohio Penitentiary or Mansfield Reformatory.

The court is given discretion to make stone throwing at cars, a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine or work-ohuse sentece or both, as a felony. In every offense against the Hail-Light Co. it was made a felony.

The court said that the fact that the crime or alleged crime was committed during the excitement of a strike, was an aggravation of the offense, [illegible] that if the crime were not against the property of a great corporation, the exact contrary would be true, for people will forget their better discretion and do things under excitement that they would not do otherwise. They may not have any criminal tendencies whatever.

Another thing has been quite noticeable lately. Men who have been guilty, perhaps for years, of criminal and demoralizing practices with children, undermining the moral foundation of society, have gone free and unmolested or paroled from serving a short workhouse sentence.

Lives of women and children are daily ground into profit in mills and factories. Men are killed by the hundred in mines, factories and on railroads by reason of the negligence of the owners, who violate the laws and refuse to provide safe and proper devices and conditions, and they hardly command a passing notice.

Yes, the lives of the working class are cheap, while the property of the wealthy class is dear.

Socialism always stands for justice and order, but between all conflicting rights as to life and property, it will ever throw its influence and protection around the lives and welfare of the people.

How long do you think it will be before you secure a competence under the wage system? Why not now denounce this present political wage slavery system and espouse Socialism.

Would it not be nice to live in a land where you could know that not one single person need be hungry, or homeless, or cold? Could such be possible? Yes, under Socialism. Why not?

The Socialist will surely carry Adams county next election. Why? Because all the "Repubs and Dems" have been disfranchised for selling themselves for a mess of pottage. The Socialists have the whole field and should make hay.

The Adams county voter was perfectly logical in selling his vote to the highest bidder. It is simply the fruitage of the profit system. But for a workingman to sell himself and his vote to the Republican or Democratic party is beyond comprehension—so illogical.

The Socialist will show the Capitalistic system—at work in its methods of exploitation with various municipal affairs. Keep your eye on the Gas question.

Workingmen, keep your eye on your Councilman in your Ward. Tell him by word, or letter, what you want him to do regarding municipal affairs. Do not let him forget that he is your servant; that you sent him to Council to act for your interests. Tell him to vote to reduce the price of gas, and electricity, and water. Tell him today.

THE SOCIALIST $1.00 PER YEAR.

THE POET REFORMER BJORNSTJERNE BJORNSON.

By Lida Evandell.

"Shall I the journey never take,
Over the lofty mountains?
Must my poor thoughts on this rock wall break,
Must it a dread ice bound prison make?
Shutting at last in around me,
Till for my tomb it surround me?

"Forth, will, forth! Oh, far, far, [illegible]
Over the lofty mountains:
I will be crushed and consumed if I stay;
Courage tow'rs up and seeks the way,
Let it, its flight now be taking:
Not in this rock-wall be breaking.

"One day I know I shall wander afar,
Over the lofty mountains!
Lord, my God, is thy door ajar?
Good is thy home, where the blessed are."

So sang the Norwegian prophet-poet, Bjornstjerne Bjornson, who died in Paris last year.

In this beautiful lyric he expressed all the ardent impatient longings of his youth, the impressions made upon his sensitive nature by the wild, picturesque scenery of his beloved Norway.

The son of fighting parson, Bjornstjerne early began to revolt against rules and regulations of all kinds. At fifteen years of age he founded a paper called, "Liberty". He was antagonistic in spirit and born to fight. The words he put into the mouth of Sigurd Slembe, greatest champion of the Northland well expresses his own character:

"Now, only listen to me, saintly Olaf:
Today I whipped young Bentein!
Bentein was
The strongest man in Norway—now am I!
Now I can walk from Lindisnas and on,
Up to the Northern Boundary of the mow,
For no one step aside or lift my hat.
There where I am no man hath leave to fight,
To make a tumult, threaten or to [illegible]
Peace everywhere! and he who wrong hath suffered
Shall justice find, until the laws shall sing.
And as before the great have whipped the small,
So will I help the small to whipp the great."

Universal peace was the world dream of this great dreamer of glorious dreams, but, as long as there were wrongs to be righted, battles for justice to be fought and won, he was arrayed on the side of the lowly and oppressed. His political faith was expressed to his friend, Hjalmar J. Boyesne in these words.

"To Socialism in some state or other, belongs the future. The present crude theories which the justly discontented of the earth are propounding are only signicant as the first serious agitation of the greatest of problems."

To refute the statement that the people are not ready for an ideal form of government he puts the following words into the mouth of the King in one of his plays:

"Is it then necessary that a people, on this Eternal progress toward the truth, should march with a lie as their leader?"

He suggested to King Oscar, that if he would abdicate the throne he might attain higher honor by becoming the first President of Norway. His radical tendencies made him at times the most hated as well as the best beloved man in Christiana. The clergy denounced him and said that those who loved God would deny Bjornson. He was spoken of as the wicked man who had abolished the devil!

Of himself he writes:

"When my opponents seek to sum up my character in a few words, they are apt to say 'He attacks the throne and the altar.' It seems to me I have but served the freedom of the spirit."

In his varied activities, as Journalist, novelist, poet, orator, dramatist or artistic director of drama, Bjornson was ever the champion of freedom. He stood for political, religious, and individual liberty. His independence of spirit is well illustrated by an incident that took place upon his arrival in Gaudeal where he had purchased an estate. His reputation for fearless and independent action had preceded him so that his coming was looked forward to with much anxiety, especially by the Dean of the place. This reverend gentleman was driving along in his carriole just where the road turned sharply by the bridge, when he met another carriole driving rapidly that way. In it was a man, who seemed lacking in respect for the clerical vehicle for he shouted with all the strength of his lungs:

"Half the road!"

The Dean turned aside to let Bjornson pass!

When this great hearted poet of the common people was asked when he most enjoyed knowing that he was a poet, he replied:

"When a delegation came to smash my windows in Christiana. After they had given expression to their feelings of indignation and started for home they felt that they had to sing something and naturally burst forth in the song of their country, 'Yes, We Love This Land of Ours,' they had to sing the song of the man they had attacked."

This is the National hymn of Norway today:

"Yes, we love with fond devotion,
Norway's mountain domes,
Rising storm-lashed o'er the ocean,
With their thousands homes;
Love our country while we're bending
Thoughts to fathers grand,
And to Sage-night that's sending Dreams upon our land."

Life meant more than song to the rugged dramatist, of the Norseland, and if we search all his writings for the message he left his fellow men, we shall find it preached from the pulpit, by the minister "In God's Way."

"One man forgets it in the midst of his hard struggles, a second because of his zeal, a third on account of his stubbornness, a fourth in his own wisdom, a fifth from sheer force of habit, and we have all more or less been wrongly taught on the subject. For were I now to ask those who are listening to me, just because I ask in this place, from this pulpit, you would all unthinkingly answer: "Faith is the greatest! Nay, but in truth, it is not. Watch by the thy child lying gasping for breath, and on the brink of death; or see thy wife gradually slipping after the child away to that outermost edge, worn out by fear and many night-watches, then love will teach thee this, that life is first. And from this day never again will I first seek God, or God's will in any form of speech or sacrament or in any book or at any place, as though He were there present. No, rather let me seek his presence in life,—life won back from the depths of the fear of death in the victory of light, in the beauty of devotion, in the community of the living. God's most important words are those of life; our trues and worship of him is love for all living things."

THE FOURTH WARD BRANCH

Gives a Successful Entertainment and Luncheon.

Saturday night, December 31, 1910, the Fourth Ward branch gave one of the most successful, entertaining and educational affairs, ever held in the history of the branch. A large and enthusiastic audience attended, and all enjoyed the spirit of Comradship and Socialism which was everywhere prevalent. Comrade Johnston, acted as master of ceremonies, and opened the entertainment with a short resume of the work accomplished by the Socialist party in Columbus.

Mrs. Anna Long rendered a beautiful piano solo, which was enthusiastic received and she was compelled to respond an encore.

Miss Florence Seaman, sang the Flower song with much force and feeling and seemed to instill a feeling of class consciousness in the audience.

D. J. Farrell, was enthusiastic received in rendering the Convicts Christmas Eve, by Wm. Carrolton.

Mrs. Johnston gave a clear exposition of the class interests of the different political parties, and brought forth applause and praise for her efforts.

Miss Florence Painter rendered a beautiful piano selection, which was well received, and if she continues to improve with age she has a bright future as a pianist.

The German Socialist Glee Club, sang two songs and from all appearances they will be a factor in the capturing of Columbus for Socialism next fall. More power to them, they have our hearty support.

Mrs. Dr. Woods and D. J. Farrell, rendered a selection on the mandolin and guitar, and were compelled to answer to an encore.

Comrade Bachman gave a few timely remarks on the necessity of organization and the advisibility of the continuance of our social features. He urged all branches to take up the social feature and give entertainments in order to keep up the spirit of Comradship.

The affair in every way was a success, financially also.

We wish to thank all of the comrades and freinds from all over the city for their enthusiastic support, which made this entertainment a success.

Fraternally,
The Committee.

The Fourth Ward branch will have a debate Sunday evening, January 15, subject: Resolved, that the Instruments of Production and Distribution should be taken over by Confiscation.

TO END WAR.

And if ten millions of dollars were "given" to the Socialist party to end war—what a noise could be made in refusing it! And because the Socialist party has evolved that as one of its planks and needs no bribes.

SCOUTING FOR FUTURE SCABS.

As the real workings and aims of the Boy Scout movement become apparent, it is evident that what the promoters of the organization are after is a cheap, efficient and ready organized body of scabs and labor spies, and they seek to make the working class Reilf do the organizing and furnish the material.

THE STEEL INDUSTRY HAS FALEN LOW.

Thousands of Workers Idle, Outlook Gloomy Throughout Pittsburg District.

PITSBURG, PA., Jan. 1. — It is conservatively estimated that of 110,000 men employed in the mills of the Pittsburg district, fully 25,000 are out of work with no immediate prospect of a change. The remaining 85,000 men are working but 65 per cent of full time on an average."

In Youngstown, Wheeling and Johnstown, all of which are great industrial centers, so far as steel is concerned, the conditions approximate those in the Pittsburg district. That is, thousands of men are idle, but the mill owners refuse to give the exact number who are laid off, although they admit that the figures run into the tens of thousands, and do not deny that the advance orders for all kinds of iron and steel products are nearly at the lowest ebb that has been known in years.

In spite of this, however, all other lines of business excepting those immediately connected with the steel and iron business, are on a good basis. The Christmas trade, merchants say, has been fully as good as last year, and there seems to be no note of despondency, so far as the future is concerned. But for all that, many of the large steel mills are closed, with no prospect of reopening for months to come.

The Bosses' Statement.

The best indication of the situation, so far as the mills are concerned, is to be found in the official statement given out by the furnace owners in the Connellsville coke district. When it is remembered that in the production of every ton of iron at least one ton of coke is consumed, the figures will indicate very closely the status of the iron industry.

For instance, for the first week of January this year the coke ovens of the Connellsville district turned out 449,082 tons of material. This has gradually fallen away week by week, until for the week ended December 10 the production was 282,432 tons, or about two-thirds of the amount at the beginning of the year.

Taking the figures for every week of the year, it is noticeable that the falling off in the output has been about the same, week after week. About 5,000 men are employed about the coke ovens. It is safe to say that fully one-third of them are now idle. It naturally follows that the steel industry has declined in proportion to the falling off of the output in the coke ovens.

The great Cambria plant at Johnstown is running but three out of its eight mills. When they run at full capacity they employ between 17,000 and 18,000 men. About 4,000 have been laid off, but of the remaining 14,000 nearly all are employed half time, that is, they are given from two to four days' work per week.

The principal cause for this arrangement is not so much it should be said, for the benefit of the men themselves as from a desire on the part of the owners to hold their skilled workmen about them until such time as business is resumed on a larger scale. Some of the highly trained and skillful steel workers are regarded as almost invaluable, and the mill owners use every endeavor to keep them employed part time so as to prevent their drifting away into other fields. In such an event, they say, it would be difficult to replace them, and the mills would suffer accordingly.

Have "Flock Me" Stores.

In Johnstown the steel trust owns a large department store, which is located on one of the main streets. The families of the men employed by the trusts get credit at this store. As a rule, those who "look good" and show faithfulness to the firm, are permitted to draw on the future by purchasing supplies to be paid for when the mills start up. In this way, too, the workers are held in subjection to the company.

There is a strong opposition to the company store idea. The goods are generally higher and besides, these stores have a tendency to keep workers in the employ of the trust who make good spies and future scabs. The steel trust realises that the company store is an important factor as a whip over the workers.

The steel mills in the Pittsburg district are run on the part time system, just as they are at Johnstown. The better class of workmen are kept employed a part of the time, and it is seen to that they are enabled to make at least enough to buy the necessaries of life. Even where a mill is closed down entirely, as they are in some instances, it by no means follows that all the men are idle. Caretakers, watchmen, machinery experts and many others are kept on the payroll to prevent the deterioration of the plants. Then, too, the skilled workmen are permitted to get money enough to tide them over, if they need it, but in many instances this is not necesary.

In the district of Wheeling, W. Va., 12,000 men are idle in the sheet and tinplate mills. The La Belle plant of the American Sheet and Tinplate Company which employed 3,200 men, has been closed for more than fifteen months, and there seems to be no prospect of its being reopened. At the Aetna Standard between 2,500 and 3,500 men are at work, instead of 6,000 as formerly.

WHICH WOULD YOU RATHER BE?

By J. E. Nash.

My work, until one and fifty,
Was driving a four-mule team.
For a miller, both shrewd and thrifty,
And crowned with the world's esteem.
He hired me when one and twenty,
And said, when my task began:
"I'll furnish them good and plenty,
But you must do this, young man."

"Watch closely their pads and collars,
Don't hitch them in draughts of air;
They cost me a thousand dollars,
So give them special care."
Were some of his workmen dying,
Ten thousand he might engage,
Nor pay out a cent for buying;
But promise: A LIVING WAGE.

"And Pat, I should also mention,
Whenever I close the mill,
Give the mules just the same attention,
If working or standing still."
Then turning, he gave instruction
Like this, to his private clerk:
"Be careful and make reduction,
Each minute the men don't work."

Three times every day I fed them
Their feed, o'er I had my own;
Would blanket and nicely bed them,
And clean till they fairly shone.
Food, shelter and clothing's needed
Each day, until life is done.
All these were the mules conceded;
The men: WHEN THE MILL WAS RUN.

Sometimes, after extra trial,
I managed to save a crown;
In spite of my self-denial
It went: When the mill was down.
The mill was of late construction;
The finest on earth, no doubt;
It grinds out an over-production.
Then stops: AND THE MEN GO WITHOUT.

Last Sunday he told me kindly
He hoped I'd preserved my wage;
Today I'm wandering blindly,
Discharged: ON ACCOUNT OF AGE.
Examine the situation;
Say, which would you rather be,
A mule, held in high estimtion,
Or ONLY A MAN LIKE ME?

LOCAL PARTY NOTES.

First Ward.

A meeting of the various Ward organizers will be held at.....corner of 4th Street and Jenkins avenue, Friday evening, January 13th, 1911. The purpose of the meeting is to discuss organization methods. All are invited to attend.

Note: This is what we want:

Organization is the most important task that lies before the Socialists of Columbus at this time, there is no doubt but that the result of the next election depends altog ther upon the efficency of the organisation we are now building up. If we build well upon a firm foundation, there will be no doubt about carrying the city for Socialism. The people are ready for it, and it is up to us to have an organization that will be able to get out our full vote, and see that it is counted.

A HORRIBLE WARNING.

Rosebrock, the bad egg man, was fined $200 for selling rots and spots. It was dirty, contemptible, dangerous business, and as a warning he was obliged to pay a sum of money that was probably equal to all the profits of a week or so. When such warnings are given capitalists it is no wonder they are so timid and do not engage in crooked business without first fixing the officials.

SOMEWHAT LIKE.

Looking at the show on the downtown streets its similarity to most politicians strikes the careless observer right away.

HOW CAPITAL WORKS.

J. G. Schwalm, in Miners' Magazine.

A certain young woman was engaged in a certain household. In the course of time she severed her connection with the household, and took unto herself a husband to enjoy the blessings of matrimony. After a number of years it happened that her former mistress met her on a street car and engaged in a conversation something like this:

"And how are you?"

"Oh, pretty well."

"How are you enjoying married life?"

"You got a husband, have you?"

"Yes."

"What does he work at?"

"Well, he don't work at anything particular, but he finds plenty of work for me to do."

"What kind of work?"

"Washing. Why, he found five new places for me to do washings this very week, and I am on my way to do one of them now."

"What do you do with your money?"

"I divide it with my husband. I give him half and keep the other half."

"What do you do with your half of the money?"

"Why, I pay the rent and buy the coal, and the groceries, and buy clothes for me and the children."

"What does your husband do with his half?"

"Well, he buys his clothes and jewelry and cigars. He's a good looker, all right, and I am proud of him. Goodby. Here's where I get off."

Capital finds the job, and Labor does the washing and divides the proceeds, and because Capital wears good clothes and jewelry bought with the proceeds from doing washing, Labor is asked to respect and support it.

Public Recreation

DEALING ON THE GENERAL MOVEMENT, THE MOVEMENT IN COLUMBUS; ADULT WORK, AND SCHOOL EXTENSION WORK.

The Second of a Series of Four Articles By E. S. Martin, Director of Public Recreation, Columbus, Ohio.

The development of the playground system of Columbus for the year has been the unique in its combination of the playground and vacation school ideals. Further, it has been up to the present time a successful experiment in co-operation between the city administration, the Board of Education, Library Department, the Board of Health and unofficial bodies. Columbus is not yet among the most favored cities in either the number or material equipment of her playgrounds, but her careful classification and intensive work among the children for the past year has been thought worthy of study by cities having much more extensive systems; and, more, local public sentiment has developed until the time is ripe for a comprehensive city plan. Columbus has been a typical American industrial city in her single-hearted devotion to business and her aparent indifference to any pleasures other than the satisfaction of success.

The playground or recreational work of the past year has covered many activities which stated briefly, are as follows: Physical work, industrial work, nature study, story hour, library and dramatics, and Civic Clubs.

The physical work consisted of formal gymnastics, freehand calesthenics wand, dumb bell and Indian Club exercises. Also games in which there were individuals competing for personal honors, and games where the boys put aside personal aspiration for the good of the team.

In April a baseball league of 32 teams was organized into three sections, each section playing every other team in its own section after which the section champions played for the City Championship, this requiring every Saturday until June 10th, when the Civic Field was open and another league was started with the opening of the playground season, which carried the boys through the playground season. Tennis, Croquet, Tether Tennis, Volley Ball, Basket Ball, Playground Ball and other similar games were played in which the children took great interest.

Apparatus work was conducted in such grounds as facilities permitted. Horizontal and vertical ladders, climbing poles, and inclined poles were supplied in some grounds. The slides, tetters and sand boxes were features which always attracted the crowds. Kindergarten swings and baby hammocks were a source of enjoyment to the little ones.

The enjoyment and benefit to the children resulting from the work in Goodale Park, where a fairly well equipped ground was in operation this summer, and a daily attendance of 646 children was had, needs no comment. A report of juvenile delinquency for that section of the city shows that 50 per cent of the cases of delinquency were done away with for this season. It is our hope to equip at least one ground each year as thoroughly as that in Goodal Park.

To these physical activities there was another important class of physical work known as singing games and folk dancing, which appealed to both and small and large children. The immigrant parents of the children as they came to the grounds and saw their children taking part in these games of the various races came to feel that there were ties between themselves and their own children, as well as the historic past of their own peoples, which formerly had been lacking. The children, on the other hand, who are doing the games which their parents before them have done as children and as young people, coming to understand something of the meaning of these games, have had interpreted to them, in a way which it is hardly possible to accomplish by any other means, their ancestral history. These games constitute a real tie between the old and the new.

Baths.

Another feature important in the playground work this season, if not the most important, was the introduction of bath houses, one of which was erected at the Fulton Street playground, and while this was very crude, it served the purpose of demonstrating the necessity of baths in our city. Hundreds of boys took advantage of this house, protected it from those whom we anticipated might destroy the same, although at no time after the first week was such protection necessary.

Experience has shown that baths concern public hygiene, that their use is a necessity to be regarded as a religious observance, symbolic of practical Christianity. The advantages which effect the animal economy, the home and the public, by virtue of their purifying and exhilarating sprays are—the teaching of personal cleanliness, morality and self-respect among the poorer classes, where bathing is neglected from lack of means; many being susceptible to the salutary impressions produced, desire and soon adopt like conveniences at home. The consequence is, that amid the universal striving for improvement, sanitation is perpetually changing. Comparatively insignificant as this advance may seem, it is something to have to record a positive gain, however small, in a field of so much importance that is so often neglected.

The importance of baths in any city is well understood. A healthy body and keen mind cannot exist in a dirty person; a dirty boy or girl is obviously a menace to good citizenship.

Playground Industrial Activities.

The playground industrial activities are essentially those of a play school. The occupation is based on the play interests of the children. Experience teaches that pure play and pure amusement soon pall upon children of all ages, and that free play or directed play, games—athletic or social—are most enjoyed and produce the best results when mingled with recreative work, either hand work or intellectual work. Eagerness to do something, to create, is an instinct and passion of childhood. Neither swinging on a trapeze nor dancing—however graceful, will ever satisfy this natural passion. Every playground should be made a means not only of training children to play, but of training them to observe with the eye and work with the hand. The highest aim of the playground should be to make good citizens. Its object is to bridge the gulf between the school life and the community life, so that the child may realize himself as an integral part of society.

To conduct a successful playground and to secure the results of which we have spoken requires a strenuous life on the part of the playground teacher. Lack of exercise on a playground will be conductive of evil habits. Active muscular exercise, utilizing the vital forces of the child, will be a powerful moral factor. Plenty of occupation work will be another. Keep the children everlastingly busy. Idle moments are dangerous moments; give them tools and specified duties. Create avocations that will tend to fill the idle hours. Close upon any instinct that manifests itself to form a habit.

The following industrial work was caried on in the playground the past season: Raffia, basketry, practical sewing and construction work. An exhibit of this work by girls, was held in the F. & R. Lazarus & Company's store for one week at the close of the season after which it was taken to the Ohio State Fair for another week. Then it was shown to the Federation of Women's Clubs at its annual meting, after which the children carried it home. Some knife work and a very little tool work was carried on for boys.

Some work was done in Nature Study—gardening activities, care of pets, excursions to parks, along the river, to the woods, and finally in the case of one ground, a picnic to the country ended the season.

Story Hour and Libraries.

The story hour was one of the most interesting parts of our season's work, and so strong was its influence that we have been asked repeatedly to continue this feature the year around. Here small and large sit and listen to such stories as we all enjoyed when children, these stories interesting them in books which the ten libraries had furnished them. These books were eagerly sought and read. Later in the season the children dramatized these stories and gave interesting little plays, such as "Little Red Riding Hood," etc.

One ground at Twenty-third Street and Mt. Vernon Avenue had a form of City Government, elected its officials, and governed itself with efficiency. There are but a few of the activities which make for happier, healthier and better citizenship, which has been provided for this city through charitable organizations.

The following is a brief report of attendance and maintenance:

Total attendance.	Ground	Daily average attendance.
4018	Second ave.	100
5440	Fiesor	186
7229	Twety-third st	181
4287	South End	110
9826	Fulton street	252
17572	Goodale Street	640
3925	Godman Guild	126
6530	Spring Street	162
4736	Felton ave.	119
8626	Civic Field	191
[illegible]		1918

Total cost slightly under $5000.

Average about 200—Cost .05 per day per child for equipment and supervision.

You will note the grounds averaged about 200 children each per day and that it cost about $10 per day on each ground to care for these children during the eight weeks that the grounds were open last season.

The Future.

We hope not only to continue the past activities, but to improve them and to add others of equal importance. We are asking for a new ground in Livingston Park, as requested by resolution of Council introduced by Councilman Mahanna, similarly equipped to that in Goodale Park. In Franklin Park we hope to look after the boy's interest who play baseball and add a little tennis, not interfering in any way with the elaborate plans of the Franklin Park Commission. We are also planing a new ground at Champion Avenue School Grounds, to take the place of the temporary work at Twenty-third Street.

At Civic Field we hope to see many improvements the coming year. We realize its dangers and we wish to minimize them by providing supervised activities ther rather than unsupervised. We realize again the value of an athletic field and it is our wish to provide one such field on city property on the West Side, as requested by a resolution of Council introduced by Councilman O'Rourke. This athletic field will help take care of public and private school baseball games, as well as organizations connected with factories, stores, and other organizations throughout the city. Our former grounds need additional apparatus and increased facilities for extending the work.

Children's Gardens.

The city is the world's workshop and the market place. In it things are made, bought and sold. Office, store, shop, factory, warehouse, measure its importance and determine its character. As the city grows natural objects are obliterated. Land becomes a site, and the more completely it is covered, the greater is its value. Open space is confined to thoroughfare for traffic. The city draws to itself an ever increasing number of workers. What these workers produce is the main concern. How they live is a secondary matter. Men are subordinate to the multitude and the magnitude of the undertakings which supply man's need. A generation with the strength and energy, which the country gives is succeeded by a generation city born and bred. Those reared in the open, who knew the field and forest, give place to those brought up in the tenement, who know the street and the alley. Then, as the physical and mental deterioration, accompanying decreased vitality, becomes a recognized result of city living, means of counteracting its vitiating tendencies are sought. Parks and playgrounds are opened. Recreation, indoor exercises and outdoor games are encouraged and camps are opened in the country. Meanwhile the conviction grows that the experience arising from the preparation of the soil and the whole process from the seed-planting to the harvest, which has been so common in the history of the race, is vital for the individual. Familiarity with growing things is a factor in normal human development which is neither supplied nor compensated for school room instruction and workshop training. The increase in the number of suburban homes, surrounded by more or less ample grounds; and the rush of settlers from city centers to newly opened tracts of land indicate, on the part of the resourceful, a recognition of the call of the soil. Those who cannot leave the city if they would; those in whom the spirit which sends forth the pioneer is lacking; those who have become dependant upon the nearness of the crowd that shrink from the loneliness of the country, all those are multiplying. For them and for their children opportunity must be found where they are. Children and home gardens afford, even in the city, some of the wholesome influences which come from actual contact with the soil.

We are asking that the Council appropriate the usual amount for the work and are thoroughly convinced that we can return to this city all that is expended. We propose so far as possible, to locate these near our grounds where they can study and care for them during the vacation months. We should be glad to extend this plan as folows:

Secure from generous owners of vacant lots the privilege of using same, returning when they wish to sell or use the land for other purposes.

We will clear the land, plow and harrow it and divide it into lots of one-eight to one-quarter acre in size. We will train workers and furnish a sufficient quantity of the most important seeds and plants to insure a good start. The family to whom a garden is assigned, plant, cultivate and harvest the crops, using what they need and selling the surplus. In some cities they pay toward the expense of plowing, harrowing, fertilising, seeds and plants, the sum of $1.00 the first season, $2.00 the second season, and so on up to $5.00. No charge is made to the family for the use of the land.

This work also has an important sociological value, since it has very clearly pointed out a practical solution of the vexed problem of what shall be done with the congested masses in the slums of our cities. The successful cultivation of vacant lots has demonstrated that "Back to the Farm," is no meaningless cry; that mother earth is ever ready to give to those who trust her a bountiful supply of food; that the cultivation of the soil gives not only sustenance for the body but bounding health, freedom of action and clearer vision. This work also has endless possibilities for this city with its acres of farm lands which might be utilized and made profitable to this city in more than a financial way. Preparations are already under way for a Summer camp where the children can spend a few days during the Summer, also where working girls and boys can spend a few days vacation at a minimum cost.

Winter Sports.

Have you ever driven a young and fractious horse on city streets during hours when boards are no longer cooped up in the school room? Did you ever have your "lid" lifted prematurely and involutarily to some passing member of the fair sex while from behind a fence or around some corner you hear howls of derisive laughter and shouts of unholy joy? Did you ever see a cop soaked in the ear; did you ever see boys so dangerously near an accident flipping bobs that it made your hair stand? This is the way children in the city occupy themselves outside of school hours. Do we need winter playground? Seriously, is there anything lawful which children may not enjoy out of doors in the city in the winter time unless special efforts are made to provide the means and places which they must have in order to counteract the cramping, stifling, unhygienic influence of school time confinement? During the summer, baseball can be played in almost any vacant lot; during the winter time these vacant lots are covered with ice and snow and the average city child has not energy or enterprise enough to clear them off. Hence, they take to the city streets, which are kept in such condition that they invite coasting and other delights of less wholesome nature, so that in winter time there is almost nothing for the child which is enjoyable except life on the streets, and the God-given instinct of play indulged in at the expense of the property and happiness of others. Do we need playgrounds in winter or are they merely a summer exotic? We are asking for a very small sum to experiment with along this line this Winter.

Recreation Centers.

In ecordance with the recommendations of the National Playground Association and the recommendations of the Commissioner of Education at Washington, we are using present available buildings—school and city property. Columbus may well be proud as the National Administration has recommended that Congress authorize $75,000 in its annual appropriation to inform the public on just such work as Columbus has begun where the leisure hours of the public may be profitably spent.

When the first promoters of small breathing space for the younger children in crowded cities began their efforts, they surely could not foresee that the little leaven was to work so soon for the advantage of all; and that within a short time, communities large and small in various parts of the country would begin to take up the problem of providing means of recreation not only for the smaller citizens in the sandboxes and swings, but for the older, rougher boys, and the pale, listless girls, who longed for opportunity for expression in play, and finally, for the young men and women, and the fathers and mothers, until the family as a whole should be considered as a unit in the new function that the cities would assume. With the growth of the idea that the community should be alive to its social needs ad responsibilities has come the necessity for the recreation center directly connected with the playground, a place for use in bad weather and at night, and also for certain activities relating to the indoor world. The recreation center by itself fills a tremendous need. Chicago, Los Angeles, Pittsburg, St. Louis, Louisville, San Francisco and a dozen other cities are expending large sums of money in providing these centers. What may be accomplished you may see in our City Hall and a few other buildings throughout the city.

Industrial Work.

We have but a few weeks in which to bring the children under these influences and, owing to this and to the youthfulness of the children, some of the work may seem very crude and the attainment of some of our ends very remote indeed, but the importance of starting hundreds of children along the lines of manual activity that may have such a far-reaching effect in human development, is very great. We have started this work in our grounds this summer and gain assurances from the interest and activity they showed in their work, that a large proportion of the children are started toward the goal that we can see, though they will not know of for years to come. It is our great wish that when they know, the spirit of play will be part of their natures.

Note.

The next article will deal exclusively with school extension work.

DEMOCRATIC PLANS.

When the next Congress opens the Democrats have a big, new and original plan to do something. They will revise the tariff, or try to revise the tariff, or do something to it, anyway. When in doubt, revise the tariff, or say you will. It is the last resort of a statesman.

HOPE.

There is a bad bunch of "Reds" out in the Panhandle district, always doing something to stir up the animals, and if they are permitted to continue in their wild career it will be impossible to find a Democrat or Republican in that "neck of woods" by election time.

The Wolves Are at Your Door.

THE CONSPIRACY OF 1911.

THE STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE demands MANLY ENERGY. This prevailing fashion of GOING WITH THE CROWD is a menace to the cause of SOCIAL RIGHTOUSNESS. If we, the WORKING CLASS intend to march forward, we MUST be SELF-RELIANT, and CLASS-CONSCIOUS.

Today and tomorrow the MASTER-CLASS, will seek to deter our future progress. LIFE and LIMB receives no consideration at their hands, and every law upon the statute books today that stands for the workers protection WAS FOUGHT by these modern HERODS, Who spell the name of their God with a small g, and their DOLLARS with a BIG D.

Yesterday when victory seemed to hand, they side tracked you with an injunction. Today its the same dog with a new trick, known as the LAW OF CONSPIRACY. The flexibility of this law allows those "Whose bread I eat, his song I sing," to interpert its meaning to one of COERCION. The common right of ORGANIZED ASSEMBLAGE was declared unconstitutional under the CONSPIRACY LAW IN 1832. It was attacked hy "Hume" in 1834, and its tenets somewhat modified.

In 1910 it was brought into use again in the OSBORNE CASE in England. In this case the British Labor Unions were restrained from contributing to their Parlimentary Labor Party. The case was contested and it resulted in the Labor Party not being allowed to enter into any caucus, at any time, for political purposes.

The CRIME OF CONSPIRACY is practiced daily in high places, the fashionable club, and the Board of Trade, are its nests. While YOU THE WORKING-CLASS, breathe the air of POLITICAL INDIFFERENCE, the privileged interests lay plans for their future preservation.

The COURT and CHURCH speak at the COMMAND OF THE MIGHTY, and an appeal for JUSTICE brings a display of GUNS and gold bedecked parasities. Franco passing out of the infamies of military rule "cried out for justice through the SOULS OF MEN". But the popular hero built an altar and offered up in sacrifice his practical opponents. For as men THINK so will they ACT.

WE daily read the "CAUSE for CAUSES"! But when it comes to solution, they appear like Josepha coat "in many colors."

The term "FRIENDS OF LABOR" signifies a special interest. To be DEMOCRATIC in Nature the Labor movement must stand for ALL MEN AND WOMEN, who live honest lives, and work for the good of all citizens. Remeber that the "ABUSE OF POWER IS PARAMOUNT, and YOU MR. man WITH A VOTE are to blame for its strength and growth. Those WHO LIVE BY THE SWORD SEEK TO PREVENT THE CAUSE OF JUSTICE and equity. Awake from your sleep of INDIFFERENCE before its too LATE, FOR the WOLVES are at your very DOOR. "ETERNAL VIGILANCE IS THE WATCHWORD OF LIBERTY". LET US BEWARE AND ABOVE ALL BE PREPARED TO RESIST ALL ENCROACHMENTS ON OUR CIVIL RIGHTS AS CITIZENS OF THIS GREAT REPUBLIC."

—Jim Henderson.

MR. ALDRICH, OF RHODE ISLAND.

No one can question the honesty of his motives or the purity of his patriotism; he is after money all the time, and, under capitalism, that is the chief virtue. When he succeeded in getting a little higher duty on rubber he was actuated by the whitest and most spotless of motives. The mere fact that he denied he was interested in rubber cannot be counted against him. It wasn't a lie. It was simply intended to fool his enemies, and his enemies are necessarily the enemies of the republic.

Now comes the information that Aldrich has combined four of the Straits Settlements rubber companies. Combining them consisted of bringing them under the control of the Continental Rubber Company, in which Aldrich is interested. Peter Grimes, who brought the news, says:

"If this company gets control of the rubber of the Malay states, which produce nearly half of the world's supply, the trust will be able to break the European market and cripple theBelgian companies, which get their rubber from the Kongo. Control of the price will be possible on account of the high American tariff; the trust will get the high price in the United States, and will be able to sell so cheaply in Europe that the European companies cannot compete with it."

Naturally the story is promptly denied. But it has all the ear-marks of that higher patriotism which Aldrich and his crowd have always played. The steel, cotton, sugar, oil and other barons have worked it. Why should not the rubber men also be good to themselves, since they have complete control of the government of this country?

Socialism Summarized.

By H. M. Hyndman.

Socialism is a conscious endeavor to substitute organized co-operation for existence in place of the present anarchical competition for existence, or the system of social organization calculated to bring this about. This definition, though it gives, perhaps, adequate expression to the active and practical side of Socialism, leave out of account altogether its theoretical basis... From this point of view, Socialism is an attempt to lay the foundation of a real science of sociology, which shall enable mankind, by thoroughly understanding their past and present, to comprehend, and thus, within limits, to cont ol the movement and development of their own society in the near future. Consequently Socialism in its wide sense is not, as is still commonly thought, a mere aspiration for a better state of society, still less only a series of proposals to mitigate the evils from the present social arrangements.

Modern scientific Socialism essays to give an intelligible explanation of the growth of human society, and to show that as each step in the long course of development from the institution of private property, through chattel slavery, serfdom, and wagedom, was inevitable, so the next step from capitalism to Socialism is also inevitable.

The object which Socialists have in view is that this, the final transformation, should be made consciously by an organized, educated and intelligent people, instead of unconsciously, and therefore tempestously, by groups of discontented, embittered and ignorant workers. Agitation against the injustice of the present system of production, therefore, is only valuable so far as it educates men and women to appreciate the tendency of the time, and leads them to organize for the attainment of the definite end which the evolution of economic forms has made ready. Whether the great change will be brought about peaceably or forcibly has no bearing upon Socialism in itself, but depends upon the stage of development which has been reached in each civilized country, and the attitude which the dominant class may adopt in relation to the demands which the economic situation impels the producing class to make.

With the establishment of national and eventually of international Socialism, mankind resumes the definite control over the means and instruments of production, and masters them henceforward for all time instead of being mastered by them. By such cooperative industry, whose power over nature is increased by each fresh invention and discovery, a carapace of repression is lifted from the faculties of each individual, and wealth being made plentiful as water by light, wholesome labor, all freely contribute to increase their own happiness as well as that of their fellows. Human nature assumes a new and higher character in a society in which surroundings are such that life is not, as today, a constant struggle against the pressure of want and the temptations of misery. Instead of the personal, limited, introspective, individual ethic is the social, altruistic, broad ethic, in which the duty toward society necessarily involves the highest duty toward a man's self. Woman, relieved of economic and social subjugation, will assume her place as the social equal of man.

So far, therefore, from individual initiative and personal freedom in the highest sense being limited and stunted, human beings will have the opportunity for attaining to a level of physical, moral, and mental development such as the world has never seen. The golden age of society is, indeed, not in the past, but in the future.

THE FAVORED FEW.

You beings, who are supposed to represent "MORALS AND VIRTUE", "Which is the WORST OFFENSE?" "TO RUIN CHILDREN OF TENDER YEARS," or "TO BE ACCUSED OF THROWING STONES AT STREET CAR?" The recent TRAVESTIES of Justice are disgusting. The last parcle was a living disgrace to those who engineered its outcome.

PENSION THE AGED.

I was superintendent of schools for very fine paper but I could not help very fine paper but I could not help in that work for 30 years, but notwithstanding this I went to the Chamber of Commerce to hear Prof. Moulton, an ex-educator of Cleveland, and other cities for many years and a very distinguished educator he was. His subject was the pensioning of teachers by the state. The professor had a very fine paper but Icould not help thinking, how all in each calling or profession, want to be taken care of by special arrangements in some manner, to meet the emergency of old age. The preacher, old soldier, teacher and so on. Why classify this way? Why not providde for all the aged? Many a common toiler is living as industriously a life, as any professional person. Many of these professional persons would rather be in that work than do any toil of farming or of business life. What! Do you want the infirmary as a retreat in old age? Many of them have brought up children as good citizens. Misfortune in one way or another has overtaken them. Look after our people young and old until all can earn in some degree a living.

Let the present age, be looked after as well as the old civil war veteran is cared for today. How glad we are for him! This is one of the strongest incentives, and will engender warm and lasting patriotisim in all classes of our people.

Common man.

THE NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS SOCIALIST PARTY.

Chicago, Ill., December 1910.

The receipts for dues at the National Office for the month of October were $2,393.20. That was the record month to that date. The receipts for dues for the month of December, will exceed Four Thousand Dollars, a clear gain of more than Six Hundred Dollars over the previous high record for any one month.

Enroute to and from the last meeting of the National Executive Committee, Comrade John Spargo was assigned lecture dates in some of the larger cities.

He was out eighteen days and addressed fourteen meetings. The average charge for admission was twenty cents, the average attendance 475, and the average amount of literature sales $11.50.

His tour netted the National Office a balance in its favor of $63.10, while at the same time most of the locals came through without any expense, some of them with a tidy profit.

Local San Luis Obispo, California, has more than trebled its membership since election. At the November election they beat the Democratic candidate for governor and came within ninety-eight votes of carrying the city for the Socialist nominee.

In the general election November 8, as compared with the presidential vote, in the state of Kansas the Republicans lost 31,869, the Democrats lost 33,784, and the Socialists gained about 4,000.

Chaged with conspiring to prevent cigarmakers from returning to work, J. M. Gill, the editor of El International, the official labor paper of the union cigarmakers, has been arrested and placed in jail. Cash bail was demanded by the court in the sum of $6,000, and as this was well known to be beyond the means of the striking cigarmakers, every penny that they could raise having gone to purchase food and shelteer for their families, it was practically jail with no alternative for Editor Gill. It seems that to publish a labor paper is a conspiracy, while the paper owned by the mayor of Tampa, Fla., which has repeatedly advocated violence and justified outrages by the citizens committee, is a legitimate public enterprise.

THE NEW HOUSING CODE.

The pictures shown at the Columbus Federation of Labor Tuesday evening, made a deep impression upon the audience.

The City Council may expect to meet the issue with a demand for legislation that will prevent slums and provide better sanitary regulations.

STATIONARY ENGINEERS.

The Engineers well known representative John Pierson reports membership working and the preparing of events for the coming year. The educational features found in this body of workers prove the desire to be abreast of the times.

JURISDICTION SQUABLES.

The question of self-preservation appears to be the paramount issue with some Labor Leaders.

They apparently imagine themselves greater than the forces that created them. Like a railroad engineer trying to handle a heavy train of cars on a steep grade they may lose control and then the train will pull the engine.

The autonomist must give way to the industrialist. The signs of the times demands new energy.

An old lady was once asked her reason for not wanting to see her daughters get married. This was her answer: "Who is going to keep me when they all leave home?"

Nevertheless the Iron Molders and the Brass Molders has settled their grievances. The Brewery Workers an organization that dared to stand for a principle against great odd now declares a triumphant victory for their organization so verily the world "do move forward sometimes—somehow."

HARK!

To the Rustling of Gold Braid and Clanking Swords!

The State Militia hope to reach into the people's pockets ONCE AGAIN.

We wonder if they imagine we have forgotten their "HOUSE BREAKING" tactics during the Car Strike. The locality where this occured is known as "DEATH VALLEY."

So that, there will be no ill feeling in the matter we reprint the article of Mr. Sandlas. It may help the cause of INJUSTICE.

Interesting Comparision of the Government Expenditures in Times of Peace.

In the February issue of the "Bulletin," published by the state board of agriculture, Secretary A. P. Sandles has compiled some statistics not generally known, and yet intensely interesting.

nn his abbreviated way of saving things are the following: Two dollars out of three are spent for war purposes, and one out of three for education, rivers, harbors, canal; agriculture, salaries and all other expense of the government.

Copper cents but not common sense.

One horse pulls the government log wagon and two horses pull the red tape and brake button sulky.

Here is the expense account: For agriculture 1 4-5 per cent; for education 3 per cent; for war 6 1-3 per cent; for feed $1; for fight $37; for brains $1; for bullets $23; to encourage production $1; to encourage idleness $37; to shoot brains in $1; to shoot brains out $23; for culture, refinement and education $1; for shot gun business in times of peace $23.

More cannon, less live stock than 10 years ago; more powder and ball today then 10 years ago, but less bread and meat to feed the millions; food supply decreasing and army increasing; fertile soil becomes barren and battleships multiplied; forts erected and experiment stations neglected; agriculture and education in overalls go barefooted while war in broadcloth rides in the Pullman.

Many dollars.

No sense.

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE."

Prisoners Hear Stewart's Gift "Music-Box" Monday.

The 300 prisoners at the workhouse enjoyed a holiday treat Monday in the nature of a phonograph concert. All of the five "companies," consisting of 60 members each, listened to the machine for an hour during the afternoon and evening.

The machine was one that was donated Saturday by Manager E. K. Stewart of the Rail-Light company, after he had gone down to the workhouse with A. D. Foty, Rail-Light conductor who started Friday on his assault and battery sentence of six months for shooting and killing Clifford Root, a passenger, last October. He said he wanted to learn Superintendent Owen's method of treating the prisoners.

One phonograph maker uses a trade mark known as "HIS MASTER'S VOICE." He should send criminal Fotey this picture. It may keep away the thoughts of his victims dying agony.

But if Mr. Owens wants to put on a real show he should find out if there is a record of Mr. Stewart's testimony before the State Board of Arbitration.

After being on strike for nineteen months, the machinests employed on the B. & O. and S. & O. Southwestern railroad, have won a complete victory.

Who plac'd turpentine on the tail of that Illinois cow?

"Oh! Horrors"! One known as JOHN MITCHELL was seen to purchase a small CARPENTERS GIMELET. Also transportation to a point near the JOHNSTOWN DAM. Then came the disastrous JOHNSTOWN flood.

John Mitchell when a boy was konwn to have learnt the trick of extinguishing Illuminating gas by blowing down one of the burners. RECENT MINE EXPLOSIONS may prove examples of his viciousness on the AIR SHAFTS. ("Isn't it awful?")

"Oh! moun ye sinners mourn!" Whereas (tremble please). One known as the Reverend Charles Stelzle (Ministerial) Labor representative and member of the Machinist Union was seen with hands clenched imploring SOME ONE TO send rain. OUR STATE LEGISLATURE.

It is estomated that LABOR has at least 16 union men in the Legislature.

In view of this fact it was not deemed necessary to place a legislative agent here at this time.

When the time is ripe for action the man will be there, but for the time being we don't need to BEG, BECAUSE SOME OF the WORKING CLASS ARE BEHIND THE GUNS.

There is little further to comment upon. Let us Await future developments.

MESAGES at their best are meaningless. GIVE US REAL LIVE ACTIONS that will do something FOR ALL THE PEOPLE instead of the few.

We note that nothing is said of the Iniative and Referendum measure. This is one of labors greatest hopes it shall never die.

The Liability Commission will soon report. The results of their findings will be digested by the workers all over the state. At the present time they are under a cloud.

GARMENT WORKERS.

The great strike of the Chicago Garment Workers has proven the fact that women are capable of handling their own affairs. Illinois is not the only State to have sweat shops. We have them in Ohio. The State Labor Report is a mere veneer of results when it comes to the conditions of women workers. The sanitary conditions in some of the factories are to revolting to publish. Some day we expect to expose these evils with headings, designating the trangressors.

The Columbus Local Garment Workers report progress and appeal for the demand of their label goods. DON'T FORGET TO LOOK FOR THE GARMENT WORKERS LABEL. DO THIS AND HELP ABOLISH THE SWEAT DENS.

IMPORTANT BUSINESS.

CARNEGIE'S GIFT.

Andrew Carnegie gave $10,000,000 to abolish war, or rather to found an organisation that would talk over the subject of abolishing war. It isn't industrial war that Carnegie wishes abolished, that is, the war between the capitalist and the working class. It was through the enslavement of the latter by the former that he got this $10,000,000 he now gives to abolish war. It is an enormous amount of money, but it wouldn't go very far "compensating" for the men killed and maimed in the Carnegie steel mills. But that is another of the things to which Andrew will not give. Nor will the workers get until they take.

JUST A HINT.

While Secretary Dickinson is howling about our unpreparedness for war and has sent the shivers down the backs of the timid and foolish folks and has aroused the anticipation of those whose business it is to sell arms to the nations, it might be a good thing to read George Kirkpatrick's fine book, "War, What For?" Push it out. It is worth while. No better, no more striking study of the commercial crime of militarism has ever been written. You can get it at The Socialist office, and it is good either for yourself or as a present to someone. Peace on earth good will to men—great! Show what it means to have the other thing. Kirkpatrick's book does, and it is worth circulating.

THE DELIGHTS OF SMUGGLING.

Mrs. T. Interborough Shonts was in trouble again with the customs officials. She forgot that she had $20,000 worth of jewelry with her. Let's see—that is something like 400,000 fares, isn't it? Yes, sir, there is money in overloading cars.

DON'T FORGET THAT the LEGISLATORS are your servants. Don't forget they meet in your HOUSE.

The Columbus Motor Car Transportation Company

Incorporated for $100,000.00 under the laws of the State of Ohio.

Its object is to install a Motor Bus Line in Columbus, that will surpass anything ever attempted before, in SPEED, SAFETY, RELIABILITY ELEGANCE and COMFORT.

7 tickets for 25 cents to start, and cheaper as soon as practical is what is planned.

Recent tests made prove the MOTOR BUS to be the future means of CITY PASSENGER TRANSPORTATION.

The Columbus Motor Transportation Company will put it within the power of the citizens to furnish transportation for themselves, and at the same time show an earning on their investment.

With small capital we can establish a better passenger service, than the trolley car affords. The trolley, with their slippery tracks and dangerous overhead wires will disappear from the city streets. The independant MOTOR CAR will take its place.

Become identified with a company whose object is progress in the interest of our city and its people, by subscribing for one or more shares of nonassessable stock in this company. MONTHLY MEETING.

Business Woman's Club will hold their monthly meeting, January 6, at 7 P. M. at the Assembly Room, Charaber of Commerce building. All working girls of the city are welcome to join.

THE COMON LAW STATUS OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Common law is the ancient, unwritten system of English jurisprudence. Consequently it is the fundamental law of this country. English colonists brought it to America along with the language and customs of England. In so far as it has not been changed or abrogated by positive enactment, it is still the Law of the Land. It will be interesting and amusing to note the position assigned to married women by this common law.

Blackstone is the greatest commentator of the system. With one sweeping generality he gives us the key to the law of domestic relations. "Husband and wife are one in the eyes of the law, and he is the one." Such comprehensiveness is apt to be misleading in these civilized days. To particularize: The husband had the power to chastise his wife but only moderately, or as the old writers sometimes say, "with a stick no thicker than his thumb." In passing it may be interesting to note that the Supreme Court in a recent dicision upon a case arising from the District of Columbia followed the old line of authorities on this point.

The personality or being of a married woman merged in that of her husband. To all intents and purposes she was legally dead during the continuance of the relationship. The wife was compelled to act always thru her husband, and by the kind permission of her "lord" or baron." What a helpless inanity she was!

A married woman could not sue or be sued. She could not even make a will. Page on Wills, No. 90—"Under the Wills Act a married woman could not make a will of lands even with her husband's consent." But a woman in the common law days would hardly miss the right of testamentary disposition. Immediately upon the performance of the marriage ceremony a woman was divested absolutely and unconditionally of all personal property owned by her. Everything she owned became her husband's to use and dispose of as he saw fit. Even her clothes and trinkets, technically, called "paraphernalia" belonged to the husband if he desired to sell them. On the death of the husband the personal property which had been formerly the wife's went to the husband's general heirs, subject only to the distributive interest of the wife. There is a story told of a thrice married woman who bought from the respective families of three deceased husbands a much prized tea-set,—a gift she had cherished from girlhood. We are not surprised that she refused to marry again as she feared she would be compelle to buy that tea-set a fourth time.

A married woman could not make a contract of any sort. Her attempted contract was not merely voidable at her option but absolutely void and therefore could not be ratified after the death of the husband.

The earnings of a married woman belonged unconditionally to the husband. She could wash for five days and on the sixth the husband could collect the money due her and spend it on a hilarious time and the wife had no recourse. If the debtor paid the wife and took her separate receipt, he was not discharged from liability to the husband. Oh those good old days!

If a woman owned any real estate the rents and profits thereof went entirely to the husband. He could lease or encumber the property in any manner for the term of his life.

The barbarity of the system did not stop here. If a husband joind with a third person and committed an offense against his wife, she could not even sue the third party, who assisted her husband. Needless to state no such absurd rule applied if the wife conspired against her husband.

Death itself did not remove the laws inequalities. The right of a husband and of a wife in the property of the survivor was different, to the manifest injury of the woman. Roughly speaking a woman was entitled to only a life interest in one-third of the property owned by the husband, while a surviving husband was entitled to a life estate in all the realty owned by the wife. He had, all her personalty before her death.

The husband was the sole guardian of the children. He had the power to appoint a guardian for his children, born and unborn and if the person named was a proper party his rights were superior to those of a mother whatever her fitness and competency.

In short a married woman was entirely at the mercy of her husband. Divorce was difficult if not impossible for the common majority. It is a marvel that any women were courageous enough to enter the Holy State! Yet discrimination and prejudice followed, all women whether old or young, married or single, and after all girls probably accepted the terrors of marriage in preference to the equal evils of uncomfortable, uneducated unrespected old maidhood.

In many states much of the common law is yet in operation; in almost all some of it. Even in progressive Ohio women are still for many purposes in the infant idiot, criminal class. Present status will be discussed in a later paper.

—Ella June Purcell.

A SELECTION FROM "IN MEMORY OF JEAN"

(Mark Twain's Daughter)

By Mark Twain in January Harper.

There was never a kinder heart than Jean's. From her childhood up she always spent the most of her allowance on charities of one kind and another. After she became secretary and had her income doubled she spent her money upon these things with a free hand. Mine too, I am glad and grateful to say. She was a loyal friend to all animals, and she loved them all, birds, beasts and everything—even snakes, an inheritance from me. She knew all the birds; she was high up in that lore. She became a member of various humane societies when she was still a little girl—both here and abroad—and she remained an active member to the last. She founded two or three societies for the protection of animals, here and in Europe.

She was an embarrassing secretary, for she fished my correspondence out of the waste-basket and answered the letters. She thought all letters deserved the courtesy of an answer. Her mother brought her up in that kindly error.

She could write a good letter and was swift with her pen. She had but an indifferent ear for music, but her tongue took to languages with an easy facility.

THE MOST REMARKABLE WOMAN.

The most remarkable woman in the world today is Helen Keller. Being blind, deaf, and dumb, she has, through education of the medium of the sense of touch alone, come into pleasant and helpful communicative relationship with her kind. Into her life of one time darkness and misery she has, by her marvelous perseverance over obstacles which, at times, must have seemed well nigh disheartening, been enabled to let in the light of knowledge; which, in turn, has revealed to the world a character so rare and beautiful, that one marvels at the seeming miracle.

In a recent letter written by her to Comrade Warren she closes with the following statement:

"It has been my duty, my life work to study physical blindness, its causes and its prevention. I learn that our physicians are making great progress in the cure and prevention of blindness. What surgery of politics, what antiseptic of common sense and right thinking shall be applied, to cure the blindness of the people who are the court of last resort?"

HURRAH FOR WASHINGTON.

One more state has decided to let women vote. The north-west seems to be more lenient toward the rights of women than our conservative southern or western states. We are glad Washington has made this decision. We wish that Oklahoma and South Dakota, where the question was up, might also have given votes to women. However, we must be patient and abide our time.

Of course, when we really think about it, it sems rather foolish that grown women should have to be "allowed" to vote by men. The men allowed themselves to vote, and they should have given the women the same pivilege when they took it. But there are strange things in the world, and we need not expect to understand everything. But we believe the time is coming when our brothers will realize the foolishness of not allowing good, intelligent women to help them run the government. The women are learning to think and to work for society, and they will soon have to express themselves by the ballot.

At present we will show our pleasure in saying "Hurrah for Washington."

—Progressive Woman.

Chicago doctors say a man was driven insane by reading the society page of a newspaper. But that is a mistake. The man just read the society page because he was insane. One can understand how people may wish to figure in a society page,—if they are vain and superficial. But why any one with something to do and live for wishes to waste his time in reading it, we do not understand.

SOCIAL DUTY.

The door-bell rings,
The portal swings,
My lady comes a-calling,
In velvet dressed,
Her veil close pressed:
The formal talk's appalling.

The style, the day
The church, the play—
Whichever line she fancies.
Ten minutes pass;
She says, "Alas'",
Time flies," and off she dances.

No real word said
From heart or head,
No thought to live in beauty;
Her list she checks—
What name's the next?
She's doing social duty.

JULIA WARD HOWE'S PORTRAIT

Refused Admission to Faneuil Hall.

It seems strange indeed that the portrait of the late Julia Ward Howe is refused entrance into old Faneuil hall. The wonder is that at so monstrous an insult to the noble woman's memory, the spirit of liberty incarnate does not arise on old Boston Common and proclaim the outrage in thunder that could be heard 'round the world.

Surely the author of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic"—the immortal hymn whose great beauty and rare patriotic sentiment will cause it to live as long as the Republic itself lives,—ought by every known right to have an honored place within the hall of liberty along with Washington, Lincoln and other distinguished Americans.

Alas, let the plain truth be spoken though the heavens fall. There is no longer any "cradle of liberty" in this once liberty loving land of the free and home of the brave. It is now the land of the trust and the home of the slave.

But, methinks that the memory of Julia Ward Howe holds today a far dearer place in the hearts of the American people than will ever the municipal arts commission which has refused its august sanction to allow her portrait to hang on old Faneuil's walls; and she whose dream was the dream of freedom for all, shall have a living shrine within the breasts of all today, who, like her, would die to make men free.

NEW SUFFRAGE PAPER.

The first number of The Western Woman Voter was issued at Seattle on Dec. 20. It will be published monthly, primarily in the interests of the newly-enfranchised women of Washington. It will contain news relative to good government measures throughout the United States; equal suffrage news; politics and all practical subjects in which women as well as men are interested. The price will be $1.00 per year—6 onths 50 cents. Miss Adelia M. Parker, 419 Boylston avenue North, Seattle, Wash., will be the managing editor. She is sure to make a bright and interesting paper.

HIGH SOCIETY.

Wagner says: To live the simple life is to fulfill the highest human destiny. Just how far short some women come to fulfilling the highest human destiny is evidenced by some "High Society" notes taken from a recent exchange.

Miss Irene Sherman was recently married at Newport and spent $80,000 for one dress.

Edmund K. Stallo's two daughters are raising a row at their New York home because they say they cannot dress themselves on the $30,000.00 a year each allowed them by their father.

Mrs. Eward B. McLean, wife of a New York millionaire, being ill and wishing to see some sheep(she was born on a Western ranch), fifty were brought from the far West on a car attached to the fastest continental train. The express on the sheep represented a fortune sufficient to have saved the lives of thousands of poor people.

A gambling camp was recently raided in fashionable Pittsburg, and a colony of women in men's clothes was discovered. Some of the women millionaires in order to get away jumped into the river and swam the Ohio.

There is a French saying that "It is the women who make the morals of a country." This is not true, cannot be true, so long as men alone make the laws. For the law is a mighty teacher of morality or immorality, justice or injustice.

Mrs. Josephine E. Butler.

College women are fearing that the enemy of society is not the woman in Colorado who votes, but the woman in New York who plays bridge. It is not the woman who takes an intelligent interest in the life of which she is a part, but the woman who sits by the window and watches the callers of her neighbors across the way. Not the woman who works in the shops or the factory, but the woman whose days are passed at the bargain counter. Not the woman who earns money, but the woman who wastes it, because she has never learned its value.

—Prof. Lucy M. Salmon.

A Healthful Stunt.

Digestion is largely a mechanical process, says a physician. Where the digestion is weak there is usually a weakness of the abdominal muscles, and with better diet, more thorough mastication, better rest and more regular habits must be included a system of exercise to strengthen the muscles and thus improve the peristaltic action of the stomach and the intestines, upon which digestion so largely depends. The massage roller is an excellent device for this purpose. Lie flat on the back, stretch the hands fully above the head, the finger tips touching the floor. Rise to the sitting posture, take hold of the feet and draw the knees up to touch the chest, stretch again and repeat. Walking on all fours is also beneficial.

Tidiness and the Schoolgirl.

Tidiness is one of the most attractive of feminine qualities. It is also one of the rarest. Early and persistent must be the training which carries the girl into womanhood with her "bump of neatness" well developed. Unless inherently fastidious during school days she is liable to drift into careless habits which she never outgrows.

One girl may have a trick of leaving shoes about her rooms. As a child she was permitted to do this, and as she grew older the untidy custom never was abandoned, for the simple reason that she did not notice anything unusual about it, and probably nobody else took the trouble to correct her. Another slovenly habit is leaving a bunch of combings in the comb or on the dressing table. Constant vigilance on a woman's part is necessary in these small matters if she would be thought really tidy.

If You Care For Your Son.

Do not give him plenty of spending money.

Do not permit him to choose his own companions without restraint or direction.

Do not give him a latchkey and allow him to return home at any hour without question.

Do not fail to make inquiries as to where and with whom he spends his leisure time.

Do not fail to have him understand that manners are not a substitute for morality.

Some women risks her life whenever a soldier is born into the world. For years she does picket duty by his cradle. Later on, she is his quartermaster, and gathers his rations. And when that boy grows to a man, shall he say to his mother, "If you want to vote you must first go and kill somebody"? It is a coward's argument.

GEOGRAPHY.

There was a man in Manitoba,
The only man that ever was thar;
His name was Nicholas Jones McGee,
And he loved a maid in Mirimichi.

Chorus:
Sing ha! ha! ha! for Manitoba!
Sing he! he he! he! for Mirimichi!
Sing hi! hi! hi! hi! hi! for Geographi!
And hat's the lesson for you and me.

There was a man in New Mexico!
He lost his grandmother out in the snow;
But his heart was light and his ways were free
So he bought him another in Santa Fe.

Chorus:
Sing ho! ho! ho! for New Mexico!
Sing ha! ha! ha! ha! for Santa Fe!
Sing hi! hi! hi! hi! for Geographi!
And that's the lesson for you and me.

There was a man in Austra-li-a,
He sat and wept on the new-mown hay;
He jumped on the tail of a Kangaroo,
And rode till he came to Kalamazoo.

Chorus:
Sing hey! hey! hey! hey! for Australi-a!
Sing hoo! hoo! hoo! hoo! for Kalamazoo!
Sing hi! hi! hi! hi! for Geographi!
And that's the lesson for me and you.

There was a man in Jiggerajum,
He went to see in a Kettle-drum;
He sailed away to the Salisbury Shore,
And I never set eyes on that man any more.

Sing hum! hum! hum! hum! for Jiggerajum!
Sing haw! haw! haw! haw! for the Salisbury Shore!
Sing hi! hi! hi! hi! for Geographi!
And that's the lesson the whole world o'er.

START AGAIN.

Erase your mistakes of the past,
The Old year is dying so fast.
Just bury your sorow
And welcome your morrow.
For the New Year is dawning at last.

Then start with a bright happy smile.
Oh! Hold not your pleasure
And joy in a measure—
But give what you can—all the while.

For short are the days of each year,
And many are clouded with fear.
So down all your Sorrow,
And then greet the Morow—
With Smiles, for the Happy New Year.

THE HISTORY OF "BUTTONS."

By George F. Paul.

In many of the swamps of Florida, Mrs. Alligator dwelt. She lived under a huge, upturned cypress which had been blown down by the fury of one of the trophical storms. When it had blown over it had made a large hole where the roots had been torn out of the ground. This made a cosy home for our amphibian friend.

Near by on a little upraised ground she was watching a crude nest covered over with dirt, sticks and leaves. In this nest were two dirty white eggs which she had deposited some two weeks before. She had depended on the elements to hatch them for her. Another week and instinct told her it was time that those eggs were hatched.

Two wee alligators opened their eyes to the world one sweltering day in June. Instinct told them also that water was near and they wiggled out from under the sticks and leaves and made for it at once. Mrs. Alligator, who was basking on a log near by, saw them and all was happiness. They looked like mammoth lizards with huge heads, big feet and a tail long in proportion to their little bodies. They are of a pinkish color, with little green eyes and tiny tusks, which soon would be called into use. They could swim, as soon as they were in the water.

For the next few months they stayed very near their mother, for their tender flesh was eagerly sought for by cranes, kingfishers, snakes, and even their own kind. As they grew larger their skin began getting tough and black, with rows of scaly looking buttons on their backs and tails. Their mother fed them on choice bits of crawfish and turtles, which she also lived on.

Their names were Greedy and Buttons. One day while Greedy was playing in some shallow water a big moccasin spied him and before he could reach deep water his little life was brought to a tragic end.

Buttons was some two feet in length when his mother left him to look out for himself. He was very lonely for a while, but he stayed in the old home until he was nearly four feet long. Then he started out to explore. He traveled through the swamp until one day he found water that was, to his mind, very extensive, so he decided to stay for a while. There was no one of his kind there and he had it all to himself.

The next morning, being very hungry, he was on the alert for food and soon saw a large crane fishing near the bank. Silently he swam under the water, rising to the surface every few rods until he came very near his prey. Then, when he got within striking distance, his powerful tail was used; one blow and the helpless bird was driven into his extended jaws and all was over.

After having his breakfast, Buttons wandered around until he saw something moving on a log that jutted out over the water. What was it? He had never seen the like before. It was on two legs and had a pole in the fore feet. It was walking upright and was saying something to itself. Buttons swam up pretty close and viewed the object. His eyes were on a level with his nose, so only a very small portion of him was out of water. His curiosity got the better of him and he boldly swam within a few feet of it. It suddenly, without a sound of warning, turned square at Buttons, pointed a bright, short thing at him, and, well he saw flash, heard a deafening report, and something that hurt unmercifully stug him a the nose. He did not wait any longer, but left the forked thing on the log to its soliloquy. His nose got so sore that he could hardly open his mouth, for you know that his top jaw opens and his bottom one does not move.

In a few weeks his nose was well and he started out to explore again. He had enough of this pond, so that night he started for a new one. Whether he could smell water or not, he traveled in the right direction and came to a lake much larger than the former one. Here he saw these two-legged objects going around over the water in big, flat, hollow logs propelled by sticks with a wide end. Buttons kept out of sight for he had had dealings with these things.

He had been there some few hours when he saw one of his kind coming towards him. He knew what it meant. —a fight for the supremacy of the pond. Now Buttons was nearly seven feet long and no mean adversary for any foe. They did not wait for any talk, but went at it "tooth and nail." His opponenet was his equal in weight and size. The water boiled and foamed around where they silently struggled. Finally he got his adversary by the head and hung on for grim death. But even then he was terrible lacerated and beaten by the tail of his foe. The tail is the most formidable weapon they possess and woe to anything that comes within its reach. At one blow it will knock even a horse's feet from under him like ten pins.

But Buttons was not caught napping. He whipped his huge tail viciously against his foe. At last as his opponents struggles ceased, he knew that he was victor. There were some smaller alligators in the pond with him but they kept out of his way. He was lord of all, with plenty to eat, and he had found his place to stay. Every day he would bask on the log with one shut and one open. There were plenty of hogs that came to wallow and many a one met a tragic fate. At night he would forge far and near, bellowing himself hoarse. He was very proud of his voice and he used it to good advantage.

One night he saw a light on the water. He stopped and it shone in his eyes. He had grown very cunning, had Mr. Buttons, but he had never been so fascinated before by anything as with this light. He seemed paralyzed; he could not budge from the spot, and it kept getting nearer and nearer. At last it was right upon him and then a blinding flash and all was over with him. Two hunters out after hides had shined his eyes, and Buttons met a tragic a death as any he had caused.

WILLIE WANTS TO KNOW.

Who was this O'Leary, Pa, whose other name was Brady,
And was he a great big man with reputation shady?

What was this all about, Pa, when big guns came into play?
Did he shoot little children, and why did he run away?

Was this only a dream, Pa, like some other things we know?
And didn't he shoot the women? I would surely like to know.

Gee! but it does seem strange, Pa, and I just can't understand,
For if he was not guilty, then why didn't he lend a hand?

To catch the other man, who did all this shooting do,
Instead of running away like the guilty always do?

And if he was all right, Pa, no reason to keep shady,
Then why did he change his name from O'Leary to Brady?

I believe it's a dream, Pa, may be like some other things
And it caused by hysterics, and just imaginings.

There "ain't" no O'Leary, Pa, and he didn't shoot no women,
And trying to work this out, just sets my head swimmin'.

So I'll just give it up, Pa, and then sometime, by and by,
If I should shoot a woman I will just get up and fly.

And I will change my name, Pa, and just be some other man,
And if they ever catch me, they can do the best they can.

I'll swear I had no gun, Pa, never had no use for one,
And I'll be so innocent they'll send me right back home.

Who is that big woman, Pa, holding the scales in her hand?
What is she supposed to do? She's supposed to rule the land?

Why don't they let her see, Pa, and just look round and then
P'raps she'd see a difference between old street cars and men.

If they would let her see, Pa, why they may be she would know
A lot better what to do, 'n ev'ry one would get a show.

You say her name's Justice, Pa, and should in the Court House dwell,
Well, then, who is Miss Justice of whom the Socialists tell?

Is she in the Court House, Pa, do they sit there side by side?
And will they make her blind too, when some poor fellow's tried?

Are stones worse than bullets, Pa, or what is the reason then
That the man who shot went free, the stone throwers to the Pen?

And may be it's all right, Pa, but I cannot understand
Just why Justice does deal the same in every hand.

And when I am a man, Pa, and can walk up and vote
I know then what I will do, I will just take off my coat.

That is if I have one, Pa, and for Justice I will talk,
The party that mistreats her will just have to take a walk.

CHAPTER II.

WHEELER BRAND gazed at the girl, and above his own misery rose his sympathy and thought for her whom he longed to comfort, for the girl of his choice, whom duty said he must cause to suffer. He yearned to take her in his arms and wipe away the tears, but he knew that she would repulse him. He throbbed with the desire to prove to her his love by assuring her that the attack on her father was ended—but his duty whispered, "No."

And to himself he repeated the "No." For he must go on, and she must endure, and the judge must pay the price.

The voice of an outraged people had spoken through the pen of Wheeler Brand, and he was one of those men strong enough to refuse to take the price of silence.

He led the girl he loved to a chair, even as she sobbed and whispered, "Wheeler, Wheeler, Wheeler," endearingly from her heart's depths. Brand looked down on her with a world of sadness in his eyes. He well knew, and the world would soon know, that those who sit in the high places must pay the penalty for sin, even as the lowliest among us who more blindly goes astray.

Judith Bartelmy had been long enough in society to learn the art of the control and the concealment of emotions under many trying circumstances. Probably in any other situation than in one where her father and the man she loved were so deeply concerned, as in the present, she would have been able to retain a larger degree of self composure. Several minutes passed before she was able to speak in evenly balanced tones.

"Wheeler," she finally said, "if any one had told me that you would or could do what you have done against my father, against my family"—her voice began to break again—"against me, I would not have believed it. And you have not told me that you will cease your attack."

Brand thought to palliate her. He seated himself on a corner of the managing editor's desk and bent toward her as she sat in a chair near him.

"Now, Judith, let me try to explain," he said entreatingly. "I think I can make you understand. You see, the Lansing Iron company owned a lot of valuable properties—ore ranges, machinery, railroad trackage, etc. If it had been managed fairway it would now be a wealth producing business, but some of our speculators downtown were trying to get hold of it to gamble with. They wanted to milk it, as the saying is, by watering it. They did have a stock market battle or two, which profited nobody but the lawyers on both sides. But they finally got it by juggling it into a receivership, which they never could have done if a United States judge had not been willing to exceed his functions. That judge was your father.

"Since the works shut down," he went on strongly, "the men are out of employment, and the gamblers have got rich because the company's gone broke. That's just what happened, and that's all I said."

"But it wasn't your facts, I tell you. It was your insinuation that was false."

"Not insinuation—interpretation."

"But it wasn't true—it wasn't true."

"Oh, yes, it was true, and more."

Judith verged on the hysterical again.

"If you loved me as you pretend to, no matter if you thought it true or not, you would not have written that article."

"Can't you see that I wasn't writing about your father, but about a United States judge who"—

She moved farther away from him.

"That's splitting hairs, Wheeler."

He walked to her side.

"Judith, please—please don't let's quarrel about this."

The girl turned to him impulsively.

"Oh, Wheeler, we were on the verge of it, weren't we?" He cast his arms around her. "You're sorry, aren't you?" She looked fondly into his face. "And you will take back that article, won't you?"

"You mustn't ask me to do that; I can't," looking at her earnestly.

"You can't?"

"No."

Judith drew away from him a step or two. She surveyed him coldly.

"Wheeler, I came here thinking only of my father, but I suddenly find myself facing a much more serious question—not what kind of a man he is, but what kind of a man are you."

Brand was deeply cut by her manner and her intonation.

"Judith, if you only knew the truth, all of it, things I can't tell you, you'd be with me heart and soul in what I'm trying to do."

He caught her in his arms again.

"Whatever I've done or whatever I may do I love you," he insisted passionately.

Judith showed equal fervor as she said:

"And you're more to me than my father, but for my sake you mustn't work against him. How could we ever be happy together if you did? You'll do this for me, Wheeler, just this? I want you to carry out your ideals and live up to your high purposes in every other way, but you must not attack him. Promise me that you'll never do it again. Won't you promise me that? And you'll retract that article you had this morning. You'll do this for me, just this?"

"Judith—it's the truth—and, knowing that, would you have me retract it?"

"Yes."

"I can't."

Judith began to take off the engagement ring Brand had given her.

"You don't mean to do that!" he cried in amazement.

"I most certainly do!"

He was almost frantic. He grasped her hand.

"I won't let you mean it. I can't let you go without your ring. You may be Judge Bartelmy's daughter, but you are going to be my wife. You've worn my ring for a month, and you must wear it forever!"

The girl passed his passionate appeal by without heeding it. She tossed back her pretty head defiantly, snatched the ring from her finger and threw it on the managing editor's desk.

"I'll not wear it again," she exclaimed resolutely, "unless—until you come to your senses." So expressing herself, she stalked majestically across the room.

"Judith!" called Brand in desperation, fearing that she was about to leave him.

"Will you do what I ask?" she queried imperiously.

"I cannot," he answered simply.

The judge's daughter tossed her head independently, caught her skirt in her hand, turned her back swiftly on Brand and walked indignantly from the room.

Wheeler Brand, dazed, heartsick and discouraged and torn by the emotions that welled within him, leaned helplessly against the desk. After all, he reasoned, what did it all matter? There were lots of evil men in the world, always had been, always would be. What harm would it do if one dishonest judge were allowed to go unmolested, even if he happened to be a United States judge? Surely there were other dishonest judges, and he could not drive all of them off the bench—no, indeed. And, moreover, this thankless task he had shouldered would if he succeeded rob him of the girl he loved. It would rob him of the love of the girl who loved him.

Then the thought of the enthusiasm that had buoyed him as he wrote the story that had exposed Judge Bartelmy came to him and clung to him. The inspiration in doing a strong man's work for the public good enthused the spirit of Wheeler Brand, captured his soul. The steady light burned once more in his eyes. He shook himself together—fastened his old time grip on himself. As for Judith, he would do his duty, and he would win her yet.

When the managing editor of the Advance re-entered his office and walked briskly toward his desk he found Wheeler Brand looking eagerly over a notebook which, quite unknown to McHenry, contained the data for an article on the Lansing iron case even more damaging to Judge Bartelmy than the one already printed.

"Well, did you settle it?" asked McHenry.

Brand looked up and started toward the door.

"Yes, sir," he answered, and he was gone.

At this juncture Downs, the city editor, came into the managing editor's room. He addressed McHenry rapidly.

"Water main burst on Morton street; drowned seven dago kids in the basement of a tenement; mothers, scrubwomen, gone out to work and locked them in; water rising." He drew close to the desk. "Children, climbing stairs to escape, found huddled in each other's arms on top step, drowned. All but the youngest hanging on to a string of beads; must have died praying."

The managing editor's face immediately lightened, and he pounded his desk enthusiastically.

"Good! Good! By glory, that's a dandy! That saves our lives! Now we'll have a paper tomorrow! We'll go the limit on this. Did you send a photographer?"

"Yes, sir, I did."

McHenry seized the office telephone.

"Night editor! Oh, hello! Cut three columns more out of those shavings. We've got a live one. Seven dago kids drowned. First time they ever saw water in their lives. Run three columns!" He hung up the receiver and turned to the city editor.

"Put in three heads and make it stick out like a sore thumb. And, say, put in a black faced bulletin saying the Advance will receive subscriptions for their families.

Durkin entered with a bundle of proofs.

"And, say, Downs," added McHenry, "print in bold faced type that the Advance will start the subscription with $100."

"Mr. Dupuy is downstairs," announced Durkin.

The managing editor could not suppress a sour expression which crept across his face. "Dupuy, eh?" he grunted half audibly. "Wonder what he wants around here now? He's a regular buttinski."

McHenry knew Dupuy in a business way, knew he was counsel for several of the big mercantile establishments which advertised in the Advance and that the lawyer had represented various corporations at the state capital. "Well, I suppose I'll have to see him," he finally resolved. "Show Mr. Dupuy in," he called to the boy.

"Good evening," was Dupuy's greeting to McHenry as he entered and placed his overcoat on a chair.

"Good evening, Mr. Dupuy. What can I do for you?" The visitor seated himself at the right of McHenry's desk.

"McHenry," began Dupuy decidedly,

Mr. Dupuy was downstairs.

"somebody on your paper has been making bad breaks lately, particularly the one this morning."

"What one this morning?"

"The Judge Bartelmy story, of course."

"Help!" sang out McHenry. "I've been getting that all day."

"It's no joke, McHenry," snapped Dupuy.

"It was a mistake," responded the managing editor.

"Mistake! Who was responsible for it?" leaning forward.

"Oh, it just slipped through in the rush."

"Tell that to the marines," retorted Dupuy sarcastically. He paused. "Who slipped it through?"

There was another pause.

McHenry began to assert himself.

"Excuse me, Dupuy," he asked pointedly. "But how does the Bartelmy story affect you?"

"Some of my clients have a very high regard for the judge. Your story grossly misrepresents him."

"Yes, I suppose so."

"This growing tendency to bring our judiciary into disrespect is a dangerous symptom of the unrest beneath the surface," spoke Dupuy pompously. "The federal bench is the ultimate bulwark."

McHenry laughed.

"Oh, capital in distress! Yes, I know all about that."

Dupuy stirred indignantly.

"There was no occasion for that remark," he shot forth tartly.

McHenry saw that Dupuy was very much in earnest, and the management of the Advance, as he had previously known it—representatives of an insurance company—would have desired to gratify the wishes of the powerful interests behind Dupuy. So far as the new owner was concerned, the managing editor could not tell what his attitude would be in the matter, but he had received no instructions as yet to change the policy of the paper. Plainly the course of wisdom, he reasoned, would be to act toward Dupuy as he had acted in the past, when the insurance company had insisted that the paper be operated on a purely commercial basis. Yes, he would deal carefully with Dupuy—that is, with Dupuy's clients.

"No offense meant," explained McHenry. "Well, we'll have nothing more about Bartelmy. Will that satisfy your people?"

"Thank you, McHenry. That will be eminently satisfactory both to them and to me as their legal adviser."

"All right; that settles that."

"Oh, not quite!" said Dupuy, raising his hand warningly. "There's one more point. Who was responsible for the story?"

"Oh, let's pass that!"

But Dupuy could not be turned aside. McHenry had begun to give way to him, and the lawyer intended to follow up his advantage.

"Very well; it's up to you," he said. "But I want you to realize, whatever happens, there is no personal animosity in the matter."

"What do you mean by 'whatever happens?'" asked the managing editor quickly.

The visitor was a living picture of complacency.

"How much advertising did you get from our concern last year?"

The managing editor began to discern more clearly the hidden club in Dupuy's words and demands.

"Oh, I can't say as to that."

"About $30,000 worth, wasn't it?"

"Yes, I should think so," admitted McHenry.

"Well, there's the answer," exclaimed Dupuy triumphantly. "As a matter of business, McHenry, if you are not friendly to my clients, why, you can hardly expect them to be friendly to you, and I shall explain to the new proprietor of the Advance, Mr. Nolan, the reasons for the sudden drop in his advertising. He is a rich man, and he probably will not like to know that he is in the way of losing a good deal of money to further a radical propaganda which he probably abhors. Come, McHenry, for your own sake be reasonable. Who wrote the story? Surely you are not going to consider a mere reporter in a matter so vital to our interests. Who was it?"

McHenry surrendered.

"A young fellow named Wheeler Brand."

Dupuy rose and towered above McHenry as he sat at his desk.

"I thought so. I only wanted to make sure," he said. "He's a dangerous type. Comes from good enough people, but ambitious to get into the limelight by stirring up the mob. Thought he might have learned sense by now, but it seems he hasn't. Guess he never will; these fanatics never do."

"We consider him the best investigator in town," warmly, in praise of Brand.

"He's entirely too zealous. Do you catch me?" asked Dupuy, leaning over McHenry and gazing significantly into his eyes.

The managing editor caught Dupuy's meaning and stared at him blankly in his surprise.

"You don't mean"—

Dupuy smiled coldly.

"Yes—I mean—get rid of him!"

CHAPTER III.

THE managing editor again began to weigh just what significance the demand of Dupuy had. He directed his glance at him fixedly, and a long pause ensued after the lawyer lobbyist's abrupt demand that Wheeler Brand be discharged from the Advance.

Dupuy returned McHenry's stare, and his discerning eye and brain enabled him to read the workings of McHenry's mind. He felt instinctively as he glared at McHenry that he had the managing editor "on the run." During the period of the insurance company's ownership there had been no doubt that the decision of the managing editor of the Advance would have been in favor of Dupuy and his demand for the discharge of Wheeler Brand. And the lawyer, like McHenry, knew nothing of the new owner that would change the attitude of the paper.

"It's no joke, McHenry."

Dupuy was right in his estimate of McHenry's weakness. The lawyer lobbyist was playing in rare fortune, indeed, to discover in his opponent a man who dared not stand for the right. He well knew that he would not find the same sort of man in a position of importance in many other newspapers of the land. Well, too, did he know "the power of the press" throughout all America, for he had learned at bitter cost that it was the foe of all the Ed Dupuys and all those that employed them to serve their ends.

Finally McHenry spoke in answer to Dupuy's demand.

"Let us give Brand one more chance!" protested McHenry. "I'll put him on baseball or water front. Come, now."

"I will be candid with you. I was instructed to make an example of somebody for this morning's story. Perhaps, though, a good hauling over might do for this time. Call him in now. It's his last chance."

A boy entered.

"Ask Mr. Brand to step in."

"I'd rather take a licking than do this," protested McHenry.

Dupuy was unsympathetic.

"Well, he's only got himself to thank!" he snorted.

Wheeler Brand came in.

"Mr. Brand," began the managing editor, "there is a kick being made on the Bartelmy story of this morning."

"Yes, sir; I suppose so." Brand looked up and saw Dupuy, and the reporter's face showed that he understood.

"I forward the kick to you, indorsing it O. K.," said McHenry. "In other words, the kick goes."

"Why, what"—

"This is a practical world," interposed Dupuy.

Brand grew bitter, for well he knew the practices of Dupuy.

"Oh, yes; I know the patter—a world of live and let live. We must be very careful before imputing motives, eh, Mr. Dupuy? Does not the good book say, 'Let him that is without sin among you cast the first stone—at United States judges.'"

"Wheeler, Wheeler," cried McHenry, "we only ask you to talk it over calmly!"

"That man has hit me in the dark before," exclaimed Brand. "This is the first time that he has come into the light."

"I desire to say that my client," put in Dupuy, "like a great many other of the—ah—subscribers—to this paper, were disappointed at what they conceived to be an unwarrantable attack full of insinuations about one of the most distinguished members of the United States bench, and they wish merely as readers of the paper to express the hope that nothing of the sort will occur again, in which case they are willing to overlook this morning's article entirely—to, in fact, regard it merely as a mistake, a mistake made without malice."

"You mean I am to have another chance to hold my job if I'll be good from now on?" asked Brand.

Dupuy once more became complacent.

"Such, I believe, is Mr. McHenry's decision," he announced calmly.

"You certainly have your gall, Dupuy," cried Brand in menacing tones, "to think you can muzzle me for $40 a week. I've paid more than that for the privilege of fighting you."

The lawyer turned quickly to the managing editor.

"You better let him go, McHenry," he suggested. "He's a crank."

Wheeler Brand was amazed at the way in which McHenry allowed Dupuy to influence him.

"Does he give you orders?" he asked meaningly of the managing editor.

"Yes, my boy; he does, and I accept your resignation."

The reporter was by no means daunted by his discharge.

"I'm sorry for you," he cried, inclining toward McHenry.

Dupuy laughed significantly.

"Reserve your sympathy for yourself, young man," he advised the young newspaper writer.

"Reserve your sympathy for Bartelmy; he'll need it before long," was his cutting retort.

"Oh! is that so?" sneered Dupuy. "Go west and grow up with the country, for if you hang around here to hurt Bartelmy don't forget that criminal libel is punishable with arrest."

"Sorry, old man," spoke McHenry kindly. "If I didn't have a family I'd go west with you."

"If it wasn't for men having families," put in Dupuy philosophically, "there'd be a revolution."

Brand straightened up and, with a contemptuous expression on his face, started toward the door.

"You've got more heart than sense, McHenry," was the parting shot which he hurled at the managing editor.

"Pretty tough on a reporter to fire him for 'scooping' the town on a big story," said the managing editor.

"Oh, pshaw!" grunted Dupuy.

A boy entered with a card. Dupuy crossed to a chair and picked up his overcoat.

"Mr. Nolan, sir," the lad announced, with an amusing grimace. "He's the new boss, and he's got a couple o' mitts on 'im like Jim Jeffries. Gee, but I'll bet Nolan is there with th' wallop, all right!"

THE BOY SCOUTS.

ANDERSON, IND., Jan. 4.—Invited to become a member of the National Council of the Boy Scouts, of which President Taft is honorary member, and to which council belong Col. Roosevelt, Jacob Riis, and other notables, John Spargo, the Socialist writer, declined in the following letter:

Lee F. Hamer, Esq., [illegible] Twenty-eight Steet, [illegible] York City.

My Dear Sir: Your letter of Dec. 6, 1910, inviting me to become a member of the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America, of which council the president of the United States is the honbrary member, reaches me here.

Among the members of your National council are several of my personal friends, men whose work for the welfare of our youth deserves the highest praise.

I regret, therefore, that I must decline the honor implied by your invitation, for the reasons which follow:

During my stay in England recently I availed myself of the oportunity to study the Boy Scouts movement which my visit afforded.

That the movement has done and is doing a wonderful amount of good to the boys, through healthful exercises and pastimes cannot be doubted by any one who has observed the great superiority of the boy scouts over other boys in their physical appearance habit and general deportment.

Now, as most of the boy scouts I saw in England belong to the working class, I could not do other than rejoice in the benefits they were enjoying. As a Socialist, I am fully persuaded that the workers in all lands will be the better able to work effectively for a better state of society, as a result of every physical, mental or moral advantage they enjoy.

But, observing the English scout movement, I was painfully impressed by the fact that it undoubtedly makes for the development of a dangerous military spirit. Wherever I went in England I found blatant, aggressive jingoism rampant. A menacing war spirit, directed against Germany in particular, seemed to be so widespread as to be a menace to the peace of two great nations and the world.

That the boy scout movement has the effect of adding to this menacing militarist spirit is beyond serious question. You cannot have hundreds of boys and girls (for they have girl scouts in England) organized in military fashion, wearing uniforms of military patterns, using military terms and practing military drills and duties habits the dominant force in their lives, without fostering a spirit of militarism in the people.

This objection to our organization and all similar organizations, seems to me to far outweigh their advantages. The best friends of the boys of America will, it seems to me, use their influence to prevent the development of the scout movement, and try to substitute for it a movement having all the admitted advantages of the scouts, but shorn of its pernicious militarist spirit and character.

In the summary of the "scout law," which you send me, I find the following:

"A Scout is loyal to his country, his officers, his parents, AND HIS EMPLOYERS. He must stick to them through thick and thin against anyone who is their enemy or who even talks badly of them."

With much of this law I agree. I believe, however, that it is poor service to the boys of the working class in this country to emphasize loyalty to their employers rather than to their own class.

We cannot ignore the class conflict which characterizes the life of the nation today.

It is my profound belief that the best interests of the nation will be served by the success of the working class in that struggle. And to emphasize loyalty to their employers, where that involves disloyalty to their own class, is to impose upon the boys an ethical code that is essentially false and dishonorable, disastrous to themselves and to the nations.

Very truly yours,
JOHN SPARGO.

SOCIALISM.

Socialism is the cry of today and forever.

You hear it everywhere and we know it is the only friend the working man has, the only chance he has to free himself from the slavery of capitalism, the only "last straw" of the down-trodden, poerty-stricken laboring classes.

Let us unite and praise and cheer for Socialism in the coming new year. Let Socialism forever reign and abolish child-slavery and starvation wages.

MONEY MAKES MONEY.

John D. Rockefeller, it is estimated, has taken $180,00,000 in profits as his share of the loot from the Standard Oil Company. That was only part of his income. He reinvested a portion of what he got from the Standard and that in turn brought him profits. He reinvested a portion of the new profits and got still other profits. So there have been thousands of people, in all sorts of industries, working day and night to keep him in a mansion and themselves out of the poor house. During the past ten years he has done practically no work. But his money has always been at it, bringing in more money.

Ye have heard that it was said by them old, that the Socialist is a murder and that he thirsteth for gore, as a miser thirseth for money; but I say unto you the socialist comes not to destroy life, but to save it, yea, he would save the life even of the millionaire, and of his sons and daughters, and would make them useful.

Ye have heard that it was said by them of old that the Socialist is a destroyer of peace, that he seeketh to bring on a war classes and it set brother against brother and father against son; but I say unto you, the Socialist loveth peace and opposeth war. Verily, he would disband the armies of the world and would let them do useful work.

Ye have heard that it was said by them of old, that the Socialist is a bomb thrower, and that he seeketh property to destroy it; but I say unto you, the Socialist seeketh not to destroy property but to conserve it. Yea he striveth unceasingly to increase property and protect the rightful owners in its possession.

Yea have heard that it was said by them of old, that the Socialist loveth to "divide up" the wealth of the world and to compel the industrious to share the results of their labor with the idle and thriftless; but I say unto you the Socialist hath become weary of "dividing up" and of sharing his earnings with Morgan, Rockefeller and Guggenheim, and he ceaseth not night and day to cry a loud against this injustice. Morever, he proclaimeth from the housetops that the laborer is worthy of the product of his toil.

Ye have heard that it was said by them of old, that the Socialist would break up the home and would have no man know his own children; but I say unto you the Socialist loveth his family even as other men love their families; and he woul not break up homes, but would have them happy. Yea, he would increase the people dwelling therein.

Ye have heard that it was said by them of old that the Socialist is a dreamer and knoweth not what he seeketh; but I say unto you, the Socialist knoweth clearly what he seeketh. Verily, he seeketh only that which is his own and he urgeth all men to unite in demanding what is their own. Morever, he hath seen in his vision the time approaching when there will be bloodshed in the land and when there will be destruction of property, unless the sensible and useful people arise in their might and check the mad career of Morgan, Rockefeler and Guggenheim, and taken charge of industries, direct them for the benfit of the whole people. And the voice of the Socialist is heard crying in the wilderness, calling upon Morgan, Rockefeller and Guggenheim to cease from their oppression lest the anger of the Lord descend upon them.

For the Socialist is not vindictive, but is kindly and rejoiceth not in the destruction of men, nay not even of wicked men. And whosoever sayeth that the things are not as I have told you, and whoever affirmeth that the Socialist is more lazy or more dishonest, or more covetous, or more blood thirsty than other men, the same is ignorant and knoweth not wherof he speaketh, or else he lieth maliciously and shall in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER OF, BY AND FOR THE WORKERS

Vol. 1. No. 4. COLUMBUS, OHIO, SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1911. PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR.

The Strange Adventures of Mr. Drummond.

Charlie Drummond, because his father made a fortune in plug tobacco, does not come under the operation of the laws as the laws apply to ordinary human beings. He is too rich. He is too much of a gentleman.

As the news stories state it, he is a millionaire in his own right. The estate nto which he can jam his fist when hard pressed is several times a millionaire. So young Mr. Drummond can commit bigamy—and has done so. He can defy all the laws governing decency and sobriety—and has done so. And he gets off easily.

The other day he was up before a St. Louis court for bigamy, almost serious social offense. He was fined $500, which he paid either from his own income or from the income of the Drummond plug tobacco estate. He was warned not to get drunk in St. Louis. He was warned not to do very much marrying there.

And he went out and got drunk and got married.

Then he promptly took a train for New York city where such things are not noticed. His latest temporary wife is a beautiful young girl, who was a stenographer. Of course as a wife she is not legal. She will have no claim on the Drummond estate, and when Charlie is tired of her he can throw her aside as he would a servant. But for the time being she is his wife, and will remain so until the courts interfere and declare her otherwise. In so interfering they also safeguard the sacred Drummond plug tobacco property.

All this brings up the question of marriage under present conditions. Here is a man who can commit matrimony as often as he chooses. He can marry anybody that is willing. He can defy the laws. And if he happens to get caught he can get out of it on the payment of a very small fine.

What is five hundred dollars to him, when he can get rid of a wife and all legal obligations! What is such a paltry fine! Nothing. The fine of which he is a member, and for which he does not a bit of work, can turn that over to him within a week. He does no work. Yet he wants for nothing, not even wives. He can have as many of them as a Turk. Yet no matter how many he has he does not have to go to prison.

He is a good capitalist. He breaks up no families. He is a safe, sound, conservative man. But think what would happen if a radical of any kind put on paper the ideas that Drummond practices! Think what an uproar there would be! Every paper from the Pacific Coast to Cape Cod would be up in scare headlines howling about it. Yet what he does is ordinary, common—and the courts are not severe on him.

His opinion of courts and of judges was shown by what he did as soon as the judge had pronounced sentence. He did the opposite and got awy with it. He had simply capitalist respect for courts, and capitalist respect, very rightly, is no respect at all.

William Allen White, insurgent Republican, better look out. For what does he do in the December American Magazine but get off this blatant heresy, this stark, startling Socialistic vaporing

"Never before in all the world have any ninety millions of people held one idea, one abstract idea, so firmly in mind as the American people have held this idea: that capital, the product of the many, is to be operated fundamentally for the benefit of the many."

Mr. White, as an old party insurgent may have quite the same definite thing in mind that the Social-Democrat has when he demands the collective ownership of the means of production and distribution, yet in essence and in principle he is conceding a great deal in that direction. Capital, the product of the many, should be in the service of those who create it, he says. That is getting close, although it isn't saying that those who produce the wealth by their labor should themselves be the owners of it, that the working class should be the rich class, so long as classes exist.

If Mr. White is mentally honest he will follow out the logic of his positon, and if he does so he is pretty sure to arrive at the real solution for the social ills that beset humanity, and will thenceforth be done wth half-way and patchwork measures.

That East Ohio Gas Co. at Cleveland, which threatened to shut off the city's gas supply because it was refused a charter giving it the right to increase the price of artificial gas, evidently intends to carry out its threat. The company has notified more than 1,000 employes of their dismissal to take effect Jan. 17. If the company really sticks to its word, will the people of Cleveland have nerve enough to seize the plant and run it for the benefit of the whole city? Certainly not. If they wanted a municipal gas plant they would have had it long ago. Anyway, the emperor—excuse us, the courts—wouldn't let them do anything so violent. Let 'em get about in the dark, if they don't want to pay the price!

Idle, starving men can not be patriotic. No man cares for a flag under which he can not get a job.

Let Us Stop Dividing.

Yes, Mr. Loaded Down Worker, we understand that you do not want to "divide up." It is for that reason that we have the courage to reproach you. All of us workers are TIRED of "dividing up." At the least we can buy out of the market for ourselves only one-third of the values (or their equivalent) which we ourselves have made by our own labor.

Let us stop "dividing up." Let us own our own jobs and pay to ourselves the entire product. This applies to brain-workers and hand-workers; that is, to all workers except those who work the workers.

Have we ability?

Certainly! Those who make the goods are able to enjoy the goods. But we, the burden bearers, have not begun to think. When we do, we will get together. When we get together we will have Socialism.

That is the way of it, Brother Loaded Down! Socialism means that we not only work together but that we own our jobs (the machinery and raw material) together. And then we will own personally, every one his entire share of the goods produced.

Frederick Guy Strickland.

Worth of Warning.

William Cavanaugh, giving his occupation as a Big Four switchman, pleaded guilty in police court last Tuesday to the charge of the unlawful possession of dynamite on August 31 of last year, for the purpose of placing it upon the tracks of the Columbus Railway and Light Company. The daily papers announce that the county authorities regard the arrest of Cavanaugh as of more importance than that of Albert Strader, now in the county jail under indictment on the same charge. Cavanaugh was bound over to the Grand Jury under $3000 bond.

The foreman of the Grand Jury is Captain Harold M. Bush, son-in-law of Robert E. Sheldon, president of the Columbus Railway and Light Company and Bush is the "hero" of Leonard avenue and won distinction last summer by his "valiant" work in terrorizing innocent citizens.

Alfred Strader, in jail awaiting trial, is not allowed to see his friends. Last week the court graciously granted Mrs. Strader the privilege of seeing her husband for fifteen minutes every seven days.

A. D. Foty, who is doing time in the workhouse for the "trivil" offense of killing a street car passenger, is thriving according to reports. He seems to be very popular. E. K. Stewart, general manager of the Columbus Railway and Light Company, visited Foty twice during the past week and took to his friend some nice presents. Among these were a Meerschaum pipe, two packages of a high class brand of smoking tobacco and three packages of fancy cigarettes McQueen—everybody knows McQueen—visited Foty three times last week and once this week prior to Wednesday. He cheered Foty by taking to him two suits of underwear and three packages of choice cigarettes. The rules of the workhouse forbid a prisoner from receiving a visitor more than once in any week. But, what are rules among friends? The above statements are based upon reliable information. What do you think of it fellow worker? Doesn't it look as though the masters of the means of life were framing up a plot similar to the Harry Orchard stunt. The third degree and sweat box sometimes force confessions from men.

It will be recalled that after Foty was indicted he went to the attorneys for the street railway company and said he had secured a confession from Strader. May it be possible that Foty and Cavanaugh, under the benign influences of the street car company, can be used to concoct purjured evidence against innocent men, accused of dynamiting. Cavanaugh was bound over to the grand jury under $3000 bond, while three others previously arrested were held under $16,000 each.

The rulers seem to be determined to go the limit, but the workers are no longer in ignorance. Let the bosses keep up such tactics, and then abide by the results.

Atlee Pomerene, a country lawyer from Canton, was elected United States Senator from Ohio last Wednesday by the General Assembly. Eghty-six Democrats voted for him and sixty-one Republicans scattered their votes among fifteen favorite sons. The result will not lighten the burden of labor one whit, as we need not care.

Expose the Contemptible Courts.

The federal courts are bulwarks of class rule.

They are the first resort and last refuge of plundering power. They paralyze progress. They deal the stealthy strokes that stupify every strong strike. They leap like unleashed curs when privilege calls.

They wield their daggers from behind apparently impregnable battlements of appointive, life-tenure positions, gained by fawning for the crumbs that fall from corporation tables.

They have usurped the authority they wield, in defiance of the law they pretend to interpret.

By slimy stealth and cringing cunning they have gained a position of greater power than any military dictator ever seized by violence.

They have throttled representative government by insinuating themselves into a place above elected legislators and executives.

The council of nine that sits upon the supreme court bench at Washington is as much more powerful and dangerous than the council of ten that once held bloody and profitable sway upon the banks of theMediterranean as America is greater that ancient Venice and modern capitalism more complex and comprehensive than ancient feudalism.

Press, platform and educational institutions have sought to hedge these judges about with that counterfeit sanctity that has always shielded tyranny. The "divinity of kings" has been replaced by the "sacredness of the courts" in the ritual of class rule.

To tear this phrase-formed halo from these usurping tyrants is the first step to their overthrow. It is the first step toward democracy.

Until these judges are exposed as the puerile puppets of class rule that they are, their character as the tools of class rule and robbery cannot be seen and destroyed.

The courts of America are contemptible and dangerous to liberty. That contempt must be made known that it may be expressed and the danger removed.

No nation is capable of pre-eminence in any noble sense that degrades one major part of its citizens by bestial and preventable poverty. It is therefore by a purely national spirit that Socialist are compelled to concentrate on the economic problem of the distribution of wealth. In so doing they necessarily find themselves closely allied with such of the poor as are awake to their condition; but their appeal is likewise to the patriotic rich as well. If ever there was a national policy, Socialism is surely it.—The New Age.

At Philadelphia in 1850 where a Pacific railroad convention was being held, Joel B. Sutherland advocated a national railroad, and as if by inspiration, pointed out the evils that would result from private ownership. "No man living" he concluded, "ought to have the power of building this road vested in him and his heirs—nor should any company have that grant made to it."

"Rebels against the old order have ever been the heralds of progress."

The State Bureau of Accounting has reported that there is a deficiency of $92,000 in the public offices of Vinton county, Ohio. If the examiner had waited a little longer the officials would have had the entire county.

J. Pierpont Morgan went to the rescue of some New York banks last week and admits himself that he prevented a panic. It now transpires that J. Pierp "Made" $20,000,000 in doing the Good Samaritan act.

The soldiers of progress have lost battles, but never lost a war. The human race has never taken a backward step.

The Socialist is pleased to announce that a regular feature of this paper will be a signed editorial article each week by Comrade Frederick G. Strickland upon some fundamental principle of Socialism. There is need to say anything about Comrade Strickland. His fame as a speaker and writer is as wide as the nation. We consider ourselves extremely fortunate in adding Comrade Strickland to our staff.

The Republicans and Democrats have pulled the wool over the eyes of the workingmen so much that the wool has worn so thin that the workingmen are beginning to see.

Women were accorded the exalted privilege of sitting in the gallery at the Jackson Day banquet at Memorial Hall last Saturday, by paying 25 cents. This was something like seeing the animals feed at the circus. Socialists haven't been holding many banquets as yet, but whatever is going on under Socialistic management, finds the women on an equality with everybody else.

Helpless Workers Are Mobbed.

HOW TOILERS ARE TREATED IN FRESNO, CALIFORNIA.

Agnes H. Downng, writing to the New York Call from California says:

It s mild to speak of the class struggle here now. It is a class war.

One of the frightful incidents was the violent attacks on the I. W. W. recently at Fresno. In the suburbs of that town a five-acre lot had been rented and tents pitched for a winter quarters for the homeless men who pick the fruits, gather the harvests, build the roads and tunnel the mountains, that comfortably housed people may eat, drink, travel and play.

These houseless, comfortless fellows took the liberty at evening to speak on the streets to their fellow workers—to speak of how, by standing together, they might preserve for themselves the fruits of their own labor. They asked for no more. But for this they were harassed and set upon first by police and later by a mob of ruffians—the employers and their hirelings. The I. W. W. boys were hunted and beaten by the mob, and their tents, which were their homes, and their little personal belongings, were burned to the ground. The press dispatches told that many fled undressed, as the attack was made at night.

We are rather used to seeing workingmen clubbed while resisting oppression, but the burning of their property by men who stand for the "sacred rights of property" is something new. The property does not seem to be so "sacred" when it is only the clothes and shelter of men. Perhaps it is only sanctified by being in shape that it can be used as a weapon for exploitation. At any rate, the authorities and papers that prate loud about law and order and "sacred rights" have made no arrests and have said no word to condemn such brutal lawlessness.

But the event will not be forgotten. On December 4, 1910, defenseless men have been hunted naked from their homes, their homes burned to the ground by a lawless mob, and the city of Fresno is silent. Blind justice found sight to see that the lawbreakers were the profit drunken capitalists, and the majesty of the law takes no offense. There are no prosecutions.

WISCONSIN NOTES.

On the finest avenue in Milwaukee stands a large and elegant mansion. Its aristocratic owner copied it after a European castle. It is said to contain one hundred large and beautiful rooms. The grounds around the castle occupy one whole city square.

This magnificent residence, like many other houses of the aristocracy, stands vacant. A particularly malodorous family skeleton drove the owners away, and the house has long been for sale.

A few weeks ago, it was reported that an option on this fine castle had been given, but to whom remained a mystery.

The name of the purchaser has now been divulged—it is the city of Milwaukee. And the use for which this beautiful home is intended is a remarkable feature of the Social-Democratic administration.

The Milwaukee Social-Democrats have decided that there shall be one city in the United States where the children of the poor may be born in a palace. Therefore at the last meeting of the Milwaukee City Council, Alderman Victor L. Berger introduced a resolution providing for the purchase of this building and the fine grounds around it for a maternity hospital.

The idea is a most happy one, and the choice is significant. The Social-Democrats have a genuine reverence for the little child. Under a real Socialist system, of course, all children will be ushered into the world with equal rights. Under the Social-Democratic administration of one city alone, the nearest we can come to this final ideal is to place the new-born infant for a few days at least in sanitary, beautiful and happy surroundings.

Whether the mothers are the hard-working wives of workingmen, or whether they are women in still more unfortunate circumstances, they will for a little while be cheered by comfort and beauty, in large and fine rooms, surrounded by the garden, by flowers and pure, fresh air. This cannot but have a beneficial reaction on thir children, and give them at any rate a healthy and happy start in life.

Such is the plan of the Social-Democrats. Nothing is too good for the little children. Social-Democracy, building for the future, must take a most deep and serious interest in the little men and women who are to build the Co-Operative Commonwealth.

Meanwhile, it must not be supposed that the path of the Milwaukee Socialists is all smooth sailing. One difficulty is that so many of the appointed officers are necessarily hold-overs from the last administration. For instance, the tax commissioner is a survivor from the old Rose Democracy. Under the law, the Social-Democratic administration at present cannot get rid of him. Now it has just transpired that this man, in assessing the taxes of the city of Milwaukee has laid the heaviest taxes on those wards where the workingmen reside. In this way, he wished, apparently, to gain two objects.

In the first place, he wanted to lighten the taxes for his friends the business men.

In the second place, if the workingmen were heavily taxed under a Social-Democratic administration, unless they understood just how taxes are adjusted in Milwaukee, they would naturally blame the Social-Democrats for the increased taxes on their little homes or for higher rents.

This was the wily dodge of the Anti-Socialists. In reply to this, the Social-Democrats will simply have to explain the real state of the case, and put Mr. Workingman wise on the tricks that his enemies play against him.

Thus the work of education always has to keep going on. And the working people must always keep their eyes open if they want to win political power and the economic freedom that will go with it.

E. H. THOMAS, State Secretary.

THE AFFIRMATIONS OF SOCIALISM.

Socialism is an affirmation. It affirms that there is plenty of earth, air and water. The sunlight, crystalized into black diamonds and hidden away beneath the earth's surface, will light and warm the children of men for ages. The energy of the flowing rivers, the swelling tides, the moving winds and the flashing sunlight is more than ample to meet the wants of man.

Socialism affirms the dignity of man. For him the earth turns on its axis; for him the changing seasons; for him the sun and the stately constellations. For him, plants and animals. In him is the flower and fruitage of the ages. He contemplates nature and by the power of feeling, will and intellect remakes the world. He is master of circumstance, not its slave.

Socialism, by a transcendant affirmation, reconciles man's freedom with economic determinism. Individually, singly, man is helpless in the grasp of the oppugnant forces of nature; collectively, enmasse, he is all powerful.

The political, religious and economic creeds, of the past are all based upon the idea that the individual is the dominant force. This has given us kings, rulers, priests, capitalists, masters—a small class of superior persons—and a multitude, nameless and dedicated, of worshipers, slaves, wage workers, servants and underlings.

Los Angeles Fight Making Socialists.

ATTACKS BY CAPITALISTIC PRESS REACTS ON ENEMIES OF WORKERS.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., Jan. 10. — That persecution of union men and columns of falsehoods printed in capitalist newspapers to throttle organization among the workers do not attain the object desired, but frequently react the other way, was amply illustrated in this city in the year just past.

Despite the attacks on organized labor and trade unionism by every newspaper in Los Angeles, by the police department, and the pliant courts, the labor unions in this city gained more than 3,000 members last year.

And not only has the number of union men increased in spite of all the persecutions and misrepresentations to which union men are subjected, but the old union men are becoming more and more class conscious. The labor papers of this and the neighboring cities are taking on a distinct Socialist character. Everywhere the working people are beginning to realise that the only way to stop persecution of trade union men is to put in office the party which represents union men and the working people generally, the Socialist party.

Now, a few months after the fall election the capitalist papers are beginning to worry over the growth of Socialism in Los Angeles. It is with grave apprehension that they look upon the 16,000 Socialist votes which Los Angeles gave Stitt Wilson, the Socialist candidate for governor, at the last election in November. Especially do the capitalistic papers feel this blow which is aimed at the power back of these papers—at the system—when they compare the vote of 16,000 for Stitt Wilson with the vote of 4,717 which Debs got in 1908.

The last two years have been years of great activity among the capitalists in the direction of crushing unionism. And it was in these two years that more than 5,000 workers came to the realisation that the Socialist party is the only thing which will put a stop to the foul outporings on labor of the Los Angeles Times and its contemporaries.

MORE GOMPERS FOOLISHNESS.

Max S. Hayes.

In a late number of the Federationist Samuel Gompers says he sought to ascertain the origin of the workingmen's parties in Europe and found that they were due to political and class conditions not existing in this country. Says Samuel, boastingly:

"No kings or nobles here; no hereditary class of privileged lawmakers; no hereditary titled aristocracy; no forced military service."

Oh, no! Only an onion under another name smells just as sweet. "No kings or nobles here." Oh, no! Only oil kings and steel kings and sugar barons and railway magnates and coal dukes and other parasites who tax and rob the people more brazenly and systematically than the most greedy nobility in Europe would dare dream of today.

"No hereditary class of privileged lawmakers." Oh, no! Only the Federal courts, which unmake laws and read new meanings into laws to suit their pleasure (see Sherman anti-trust law, the hatters' case, the Gompers Mitchell case, the legalizing of the blacklist, etc., etc.,) to protect their propertied class.

"No hereditary titled aristocracy." Oh, no! Only several hundred baronesses, countlesses, duchesses and the like colecting millions of dollars annually from the sweated railway men, miners and other American workers to keep the immoral and rob ten aristocracies of Europe alive.

"No forced military service here. Oh, no! Only the Dick bill and the strike-breaking militia. (See Bridgeport and Columbus within the present year.)

There is grave doubt in our mind, whether the editorial referred to was penned for the edification of the working class or the Civic Federation. In fact, we could be led to believe without much trouble that August Belmont himself wrote that editorial and slipped it into the Federationist forms while our friend Samuel was down in the cellar making mathematical calculations as to how long he can keep out of jail for exercising the right of free speech and press—and abusing the intelligence of working people who don't care a hang whether those who rob them happen to carry an ancient coat of arms or the high sign of a pork barrel and dollar mark.

In any event, if Gompers wrote that junk about no kings and nobles here he ought to be in jail and kept there until he learns to interpret conditions without juggling words.

The Labor News of Cheyenne tells of H. B. Hall, convicted of stealing a dog in that city, being sentenced to fourteen months in the penitentiary for the offense.

The Courier of Buffalo, N. Y., tells of several white slavers sentenced by Judge Hazel in the United States district court to a fine of $1 each for offense, with two weeks imprisonment.

THE GERMAN WAY.

In Leipsig, one of the principal cities of Germany, the Socialists won all the seats contested in the election just held in the Third district. They polled 18,164 votes in a total of 32,184, defeating the combined opposition and electing eight men.

In fifty-five cities of Germany organized labor possesses labor temples, thirty-four of them own their own grounds. The trades union press consists of one central organ, fifty-six trade journals, one paper for the Italian and one for the Polish laborers, and all get their news service from the Sozialdemokrats Press Bureau Berlin. Labor secretaries are active in 112 cities, central labor councils in over 700 cities. The Socialists have captured already the fifty-second seat in parliament.

A decision arrived at by a competent court of Berlin, Germany, may here be contrasted with the now notorious prison sentence hanging over the three officers of the American Federaiton of Labor.

In the Berlin court under the shadow of William II.'s bristling imperial mustache, a case of boycotting by published notices was also the issue.

The proprietor of a certain large saloon and meeting hall, had persistently refused to let the Berlin Socialists use his hall for public meetings. Thereupon our militant contemporary, the Vorwaerts, twice published notices asking its readers to withhold their patronage from this particular place, stating the fact that the proprietor had refused to use his hall for Socialist meetings.

The proprietor then entered suit for damages against the Vorwaerts, but he lost his case signally. In the opinion handed down by the Berlin judge it is admitted that the Socialist party has a legitimate interest in securing suitable places for public meetings, and that plaintiff had refused to let his place be used for such meetings. When, thereupon, the Vorwaerts urged its readers to withhold their patronage from plaintiff's place as long as such refusal was persisted in, the Vorwaerts was merely acting in defense of legitimate interests. The court held that the pressure to make plaintiff change his attitude is not improper under the circumstances.

Such is the reasoning of a German court, briefly stated in plain language. And this in a monarchial country. mind you, where the people do not boast of the "freedom" that they do not possess.—Cleveland Citizen.

WHO IS A SOCIALIST?

Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Who is a Socialist? It is the man
Who strives to formulate or aid a plan
To better earth's conditions. It is he
Who, having ears to hear and eyes to see,
Is neither deaf nor blind when might, rough-shod,
Treads down the privileges and rights which God
Means for all men; the privileges to toil,
To breathe pure air, to love, to woo, to wed,
And earn for hungry mouths their need of bread.
The Socialist is he who claims no more
Than his own share from generous Nature's store;
But that he asks, and asks, too, that no other
Shall claim the share of any weaker brother,
And brand him beggar in his own domain,
To glut a mad, inordinate lust for gain,
The Socialist is one who holds the best
Of all God's gifts is toil; and second rest.
He asks that all men learn the sweets of labor,
And that no idler fatten on his neighbor.
That all men be allowed their share of leisure,
Nor thousands slave that one may seek his pleasure.
Who on the Golden Rule shall dare insist,
Behold in him the modern Socialist.

The race has wasted, is wasting, itself in fratricidal strife. Man, ignorant of the superb power of co-operation, of brotherhood, has striven to save himself individually. What shall I DO TO BE SAVED, is the cry alike of creedal religion, office seeking politicians, the capitalist and the worker.

Socialism affirms that salvation comes through brotherhood; that no man can live unto himself.

Give us five years of PEACE, stop every strike, every lockout; spend nothing for the armies and navies of the world; stop the wastes of a quasi competition; take off the army of traveling salesman and let them produce wealth; stop the wastes of foolish, useless advertising and the duplication of goods, and places of selling them; and above all STOP the enormous TRIBUTES PAID by LABOR to CAPITALISTS in the form of RENT, INTEREST and PROFIT; then let the people who now are in enforced idleness go to work; do this for five years and POVERTY WILL HAVE DISAPPEARED, and our world will be the kindergarten of happy human children.

THE SCHOOL EXTENSION MOVEMENT.

The Third of a Series of Four Articles
By E. S. Martin.
Director of Public Recreation, Columbus, Ohio.

There are undoubtedly many elements of unrest in our country hardly comforting to contemplate. Tendencies are undeniable that if unchecked are fraught with peril to the nation and to the individual. It would seem that if we are to escape certain grave dangers which have overwhelmed in their time olden republics, as exultant and unsuspecting as our own, we must be singularly favored and possess latent qualities of strength and permanence of which we are at present unconscious.

It is, however, a happy circumstance that side by side with the growth of tendencies more or less ominous there have sprung into life a number of decidedly hopeful influences which are likely to prove corrective and stimulative in the right direction. Due by no means to the initiative of any individual, they appear to have received a powerful impetus within recent years and are now so firmly intrenched as not likely to prove spasmodic and transient.

Among those happy influences spreading throughout all sections with accelerating rapidity the most hopeful is the strengthening of a certain national consciousness which recognize the claim of the individual and holds that nation's welfare as paramount, whatever becomes of any gentlemen's agreement whereby private interests are promoted at the public expense and a few enriched to the impoverishment of the multitude.

With many heterogeneous elements in the Republic intensified by successive layers of emgrants, a veritable migration of races, that this process of unity, this feeling of solidarity, should have been so strengthened is little short of the miraculous, and indicates without any shallow optimism that the Republic is headed right.

The national awakening or rather the dawning consciousness of a people's power and rights as higher than syndicate and corporation is affecting signally the education of the masses. The rapidity and thoroughness with which library work is being made supplementary to the public school is one of the most gratifying signs of the new day. It is a distinct concession to the needs of the people; this co-ordination of literature and the common schools.

The passion for education which is seen at its best in the West has wonderfully deepened and broadened public instruction. It is ceasing to be a bed of Procrustes, for now the people more and more demand that the schedule of studies shall fit the pupil and not the pupil be made to fit the schedule by as violent and abnormal a process as that of the ancient Attic highwayman. Whatever agencies can uplift, inspire, strengthen mind and body are being enlisted in the service, even if traditional schedules are radically transformed.

In some cities, one might instance Detroit, the art museum is utilized at certain hours for illustrated lectures, given by the director, Doctor Griffith, which run parallel with school courses in history, geography and science. In other cities, St. Joseph is a good example of this feature the public library is not only made a hall for higher instruction to teachers in literature and history, and the world of books with regular examinations and certificates, but becomes as well a center of distribution for supplementary reading to pupils in outlying districts, boxes of books in various departments of study being systematically forwarded and returned.

It is, however, in the school house that the advance has been most noteworthy. It was to be expected that in our era of educational development which has so profoundly influenced college, university, our elementary and the impetus. In equipment, range of secondary schools should feel no less studies and requirements of teachers the change could hardly have been cial attention now paid to defective more remarkable. If we add the spe- and delinquent, the blind, the crippled, the consumptive, the school garden, domestic science and other features that seem the advance guard of State Socialism, the development has been phenomenal. Perhaps in some degree the progress has been too rapid and unnecessary, as it appears to strike at the sense of parental responsibility.

Then in the field of school architecture, compare the old-time country school house set back from the road and half hid among the trees to the latest school buildings East or West, North or South, in some cases with roof gardens, kitchen, gymnasium, baths, workshops, its halls adorned with pictures and statues, its spacious class and assembly room, its heating and lighting plants, sheltering an army of boys and girls several thousand strong. Could the triumph of the school house be more complete and its relation to the people be more clearly illustrated?

No less significant is the growth of the private school today. Side by side with the public school, it has developed the best lines of broad and effective instruction. They are equal partners in the work of education. The representative private school, complete in equipment, thorough in organization, scholarly in methods, marks as great a triumph as the development of the old-time model common school edifice that is our nation's permanent fortress, even as our school children are our nation's real defenders.

Real Triumph of the Schoolhouse.

The real triumph of the schoolhouse—the actual test of its co-ordination with the needs of the people—is less a question of schedule and equipment which effects so powerfully the education of the young. There is a broader and more vital problem which the school-house is beginning to solve. The education of men and women, the social and civic enlightenment of the masses, this is the new field which the school-house is entering, with every likelihood of permanent success. The schoolhouse with an open door to the great body of working men and working women in various lines of labor with the hand and brain, the wage-earner of every class, in overalls or frock coat, what a new departure and how fruitful and blessed is the process of welding together more closely and distinctively this nation of ours, into whose life and spirit all races seem interwoven.

The schoolhouse extension movement, which is arousing widespread interest and which has assumed different forms according to local conditions, marks a radical departure in popular education. It makes the family the unit value in public instruction and broadens the school to include the child, the youth and the adult. It widens the curriculum to provide for the wants of the wage-earner and the average citizen, renewing a taste for art, music, science and literature. It transforms for the hour or two weekly the schoolhouse into a social center for old and young, without distinction of race, creed or condition, inculcating certain virtues of neighborliness at least, which have grown less familiar. It popularises the school building as a practical club for the people where they shall be entertained under refining influences. And, above all, it creates a forum to teach, in a winning and informal way, the basic element of citizenship the principle of national ethics, without the shadow of partisanship or prejudice, rallying together the forces for good so vital for the preservation of city, state and nation.

Apart from features which may be regarded as more or less ideal, it remedies an economic defect of no little weight, and to which due attention should be given. As was recently shown by John Cotton Dana, of Newark, N. J., our schools operate only 900 hours a year, and the schoolhouse with its costly equipment, is idle during 1500 daylight weekly hours. Without being too utilitarian and exacting, there is urgent need of improvement? Without the movement would do away with the reproach of an empty schoolhouse, when the vacant classrooms and auditorium can be utilized for the up-building of a community and at a minimum of extra expense.

Reasons for School Extension.

Now it may be asked why is School Extension necessary? Have we not abundant schools of different grades and character admirably adapted to the wants of all classes of pupils? Are not the boys and girls who pass annually from elementary to the grammar and from the grammar to the high school a credit to our common school system? Is not the course of instruciton effective, the equipment beyond criticism, the teaching forceable? These may be answered a the affirmative and still there is pressing need of school extension. A few years ago United States Commissioner W. T. Harris (Ency. Amer. Vol. VI.) emphasized the comparative neglect of secondary and higher courses of public instruction. Of the entire number of pupils enrolled, in the public schools of the land 95 out of 100 were in the elementary schools leaving 4 per cent in secondary schools and one per cent only in the higher institution grade. The crux of the situation is the alarming fact that the great majority of the boys and girls who enter the elementary school do not graduate from the grammar grade, while but a small fraction complete the high school course.

There may be variations from the average in certain cities and among special classes of our population; but on the whole we are brought face to face with two distressing conditions. First, our schools, upon which confessedly no expense is spared and secretyling, and which represent an enormous outlay of capital, are utilized for the full course by only one per cent of the aggregate number of pupils. Secondly, almost the total number of children, all but 5 per cent, begin practical life with but the rudiments of school education.

It is noteworthy that as the army of teachers is required preponderantly from women, girls remain longer at school, as to enter the normal classes. This tendency is fortunate from another point of view, because is insures better educated mothers and a more cultured atmosphere for the home. With the increasing desire to choose other and more lucrative lines of work, the higher grades in the public schools will soon possess as little fascination for the girls as they now offer boys and young men. Here economic conditions are paramount and cannot be overlooked. Our young people as a class are obliged to become bread winners—the great mass must help their parents and themselves, and the public school know them no more at an age when they are still in pinafores or short trousers. This is an undeniable fact, but one for which the school is not wholly to blame. Experts differ as to the extent of its culpability.

There is thus each year an increasing number of young people who begin their practical life with their school education grossly incomplete—unformed and uninformed. These embrace in a decade an important body of our population, together with the multitude of recent immigrants who have little American schooling save the limited and intermittent night course, and that provided in some cities by special agencies, charitable and otherwise.

Why is not the distinct province of public instruction to teach the adult and restore in a measure the young people to their early school associations? Is it not the school's function and raison d'etre to educate, and why must that education be practically restricted to kindergarten and elementary grades? The school as a school no longer reaches the great majority of boys and girls in their most impressionable age, when character and capacty alike are to receive permanent form.

Outgrown Traditions.

Is it not imperative for the school promptly to recognise facts and cease to be hampered by traditions long since outgrown? Should it not confidently reach out and encompass the entire life of the community—childhood, youth, maturity? Is the schoolhouse, forsooth, merely for the cradle and its curriculum to be alphabet blocks and the primer? Shall it be closed at any hour and to any element of our population, when the penitentiary is ever open and vicious disorganizing influences are ever at work? If a nation cannot survive half slave and half free, can permanence and security be guaranteed to a State, half ignorant, half intelligent, in which the schoolhouse provides merely for a dwindling minority, leaving the education of the young people at their formative age, just when they need it to chance or circumstance? Could ignorance and incapacity—we speak not of crime for we have faith in the essential honesty of American youth—be given a higher premium? No wonder the atmosphere of too many of our American cities is befogged with ugly partisanship and lawlessness open or secret. Why must educational traditions, like the laws of the Medes and the Persians, stand in the way when conditions are so exceptional and demand prompt, radical reform?

Another objection has now to be met. Granted that the schools are abandoned at too early age and the economic factor makes an effective remedy impossible. Do not the churches, the various educational and benevolent agencies, amply provide for the unschooled? Are there not numerous organizations that complete the unfinished school training and adequately supply the needs of the adults?

The work of the churches and of similar agencies, ethical and religious, is not to be underrated in this connection: they reach large numebrs of young and old; they guide, protect, educate and inspire with their classes, lyceums and entertainments. Yet even under the best auspices the atmosphere suggests charity and the tone consciously or unconsciously is too often sectarian.

It is the right, not the privilege of the people which is here concerned. They are in reality the owners of the schoolhouse; it is their property and they are surely entitled to its occupancy and to such extension of its interest as shall best promote their welfare. The people are the taxpayers; they want no special favors doled out to them, no patronizing and no charity. It is simple justice which is demanded. The schoolhouse is there for a purpose and that purpose must be maintained.

It is nearer to the hearts of the people than most of us fancy. The awe which thrills the humbled peasant abroad as he enters the stately cathedral and bows for a moment in silent adoration is blended with exultation at the thought that it is his in all its magnificence. He shares its greatness and its vastness until his lowly dwelling assumes a glory of its own.

There is something of this feeling in the attitude of many toward the school house, especially in the more congested sections in our large cities. It is their own, for their children and themselves. Nobody can rob them of it. Its bell, shrill, insistent, exultant, is to them like a sacred possession. The building becomes transfigured, as with their sons and daughters they enter it again on special occasions, while its atmosphere is charged with a curious tenderness and sanctity which give a certain glow and happiness to commonplace lives.

The schoolhouse is the common ground and hope of the nation. It was an old law among Jews and adopted from them by the Mohammedians that no private dwelling should be higher than the place of worship. The schoolhouse, too, must crown the heights as citadel of civic betterment high above greed and rancor. If new occasions call forth new duties, public instructions, too, must assume new obligations at the present crisis. It is passing inevitably from the child to the adult, or rather it is developing into a richer, completer training that shall include child and adult.

Note.

The next article will deal with the school extension movement in Columbus with especial emphasis on one of the most important phrases for this work—The Adult Work.

The Socialist $1.00 per year.

What Socialism Stands For.

Human life depends upon food, clothing and shelter. Only when these are assured are freedom, culture and higher human development possible. To produce food, clothing and shelter, land and machinery are needed. Land by itself does not satisfy human needs. Human labor gets raw materials and food out of the soil by creating machinery and using it upon the land. Whoever has control of land and machinery has control of human labor, and with it of human life and liberty.

Today the machinery and the land used for industrial purposes are owned by a rapidly decreasing minority. So long as machinery is simple and easily handled by one man it does not make its owners so powerful that they can dominate the sources of life of others. But when machinery becomes more and more complex and expensive, and requires for its effective operation the organized effort of many workers, its influence reaches over wider circles of life. The owners of such machinery become the dominant class.

The Masses in Subjection.

In proportion as the number of such machine owners compared to all other classes decreases, their power in the nation and in the world increases. They bring ever larger masses of working people under their control, reducing them to the point where muscle and brain are their only productive property. Millions of formerly self-employing workers thus become the helpless wage-slaves of the industrial masters.

The more the economic power of the ruling class grows, the less useful does it become in the life of the nation. The overwhelming bulk of the useful work of the nation falls upon the shoulders of the classes that either have no other productive property but their manual and mental labor power the wage workers — or that have but little land and little machinery outside of their labor power—the small traders and small farmers. The ruling minority is steadily becoming useless and parasitic.

A bitter struggle over the division of the products of labor is waged between the exploiting propertied class, on the one hand and the exploited, propertyless class on the other. In this struggle the wage working class cannot expect adequate relief from any reform of the present order from the dominant class of society.

The wage workers are therefore the most determined and irreconcilable antagonists of the ruling class. They are also the class which suffers most from the curse of class rule. The fact that a small number of capitalists is permitted to use all the country's resources and social tools for their individual profit, and to make the production of the necessaries of our lives the object of their competitive private enterprises and speculations, is at the bottom of all the social evils of our time.

Modern Industry Planless.

In spite of the organization of trusts, pools and combinations, the capitalists are powerless to regulate production for social ends. Industries are largely conducted in a planless manner. Through periods of feverish activity the strength and health of the workers are mercilessly undermined, and during periods of enforced idleness the workers are frequently reduced to starvation.

The climaxes of this chaotic system of production are the regularly recurring industrial depressions and crises which paralyse the nation every fifteen or twenty years.

In this mad and reckless race for profits the capitalist class is bound to exploit the workers to the very limit of their endurance and to sacrifice their physical, moral and mental welfare to its own insatiable greed. Capitalism keeps the masses of working men in poverty, destitution, physical exhaustion and ignorance. It drags their wives from their homes to the mill and factory. It snatches their children from the playgrounds and schools and grinds their slender bodies and unformed minds into gold dollars. It wantonly disfigures, maims and kills hundreds of thousands of workingmen annually in mines, on railroads and in factories. It drives millions of workers into the ranks of the unemployed and forces large numbers of them into beggary, vagrancy and all forms of crime and vice.

Public Intelligence Corrupted.

To maintain their rule over their fellow men, the capitalists must keep in their pay all organs of the public powers, public mind and public conscience. They control the dominating parties and, through them, the elected public officials. They select our executive, bribe our legislatures and corrupt our courts of justice. They sway our educational institutions. They own the nation politically and intellectually just as they own it industrially.

The struggle between wage workers and capitalists grows ever fiercer, and has become the only vital issue before the American people. The wage working class, therefore, has the most vital and direct interest in abolishing the capitalist system. But in abolishing the present system, the workingmen will free not only their own class, but also all other classes of modern society: The small farmer, who is today exploited by large capital more indirectly but not less effectively than is the wage laborer; the small manufacturer and trader, who is engaged in a desperate and losing struggle for economic independence in the face of the all-conquering power of concentrated capital; and even the capitalist himself, who is the slave of his wealth rather than its master. The struggle of the working class against the capitalist class, while it is a class struggle, is thus at the same time a struggle for the abolition of all classes and class privileges.

Must Conquer the Political Power.

The private ownership of the land and means of production used for exploitation, is the rock upon which class rule is built; political government is its indispensable instrument. The wage workers cannot be freed from exploitation without conquering the political power and substituting collective and democratic administration for private ownership of the land and the means of production used for exploitation.

The basis for such transformation is rapidly developing within the very bosom of present capitalist society. The factory system, with its immense labor, is rapidly destroying all vestiges of individual production in manufacture. Modern production is already very largely a collective and social process, while the great trusts and monopolies which have sprung up in recent years have had the effect of organising the work and management of some of our main industries on a national scale, and fitting them for national use and operation.

An End to Class Rule.

In the struggle for freedom the interests of the workers of all nations are identical. The struggle is not only national, but international. It embraces the world and will be carried to ultimate victory by the united workers of the world.

To unite the workers of the nation and their allies and sympathizers of other classes to this end, is the mission of the Socialist. In this battle for freedom the Socialist movement does not strive to substitute working class rule for capitalist rule, but by working class victory to free all humanity from class rule and to realise the international brotherhood of man.

A DEFINITION OF SOCIALISM.

Socialism would solve the labor problem by guaranteeing to the producer the full product of his toil; the prison reform problem, by removing the incentive to crime; the temperance problem, by taking out of the scheme of life the only incentive which ever induced any man or woman to keep a saloon, a gambling house, or a brothel; The immigration problem, by establishing a system of industry in which every day of idleness would be (as it is now) a loss to society, and in which every day of added labor would be a decided gain to all the inhabitants of the commonwealth. In a word Socialism would make the fulfilment of the teachings of the greatest of all Socialists in universal brotherhood among men, peace on earth, and plenty for all the children of a common Father.

The demands upon the columns of The Socialist are such that we must insist that hereafter, all articles submitted for publication MUST BE BRIEF. The desire is to serve the interests of the workers' cause. People will not read long articles. They will read brief, pointed arguments or statements of facts. A long screed of two or three columns, most always, is skipped, when the shorter appeal is noticed and, very likely, impresses the reader. From 300 to 400 words is the limit in The Socialist hereafter, unless there is some good reason for granting more space.

It ought to be understood that we cannot undertake to publish everything that is sent to us. Some people have the idea that most anything can be printed in a newspaper—"just to fill up". There are somethings which it would be unwise to print; sometimes the subject is old or unimportant and there is always the barrier of space. BOIL IT DOWN COMRADES.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

The Employers' Liability Law appears to have become a paramount issue. It's important legislation because it concerns "LIFE AND LIMB". The gentlemen who made the "quick lunch route system" to Europe for the purpose of hoodwinking the workers appear to be suffering with an acute attack of "imaginative dementia" and like the visitor to a travologue lecture they have become fascinated with highly colored illusions.

Let us compare some of their figures.

Liability fund to be contribute thus :

Employer ..... One third the damage claim.
Employee ..... One third the damage claim.
The State ..... One third the damage claim.

What is the State? "All the People."

Then the Employers would charge their one-third on the cost of production, therefore causing no interference wth their profits or dividends and leaving the Common People to once again "Hold the Snipe Bag."

The passage of a clean honest law would mean the abolition of claim agents. The unscrupulous acts of some of these gentry would have made Shylock blush. Jerry Simpson once said "He had nothing against fleas." It was the business they were in that brought disgust.

Another source of protest against an honest law will come from firms who advertise in glaring head lines their success in defending employers against casuality damage suits. These firms have done a thriving business in the last few years and the employers have been taxed heavily for their service. Should the proposed "IMPORTED LEGISLATION" go through the manufacturers would be relieved of this expense and once again the shekel casket would increase in weight at the expense of the community. Contributery negligence is a term used to imply suspicion that workers wilfully destroy safety devices, so as to be able to earn more wages. Let it be remembered that when ever a firm purchases improved machinery or are compelled by law to provide safety devices, the expense is met by a demand for greater production or the paying of less wages. Under the present system, this indirect mode of extortion is classed under the title of "business ethics."

Considering that the Master-class are always ranting about patriotism, home markets, etc., we believe that their foreign ideas might work where they are understood. Let it be remembered that our Board of Commerce once brought the German Ambassador from Washington, D. C., to explain the workings of this "Rob Peter to Pay Paul" philanthrophy and while the gentleman might have meant well few understood him. This is the workers' position at this time on this imported, made to order gold brick.

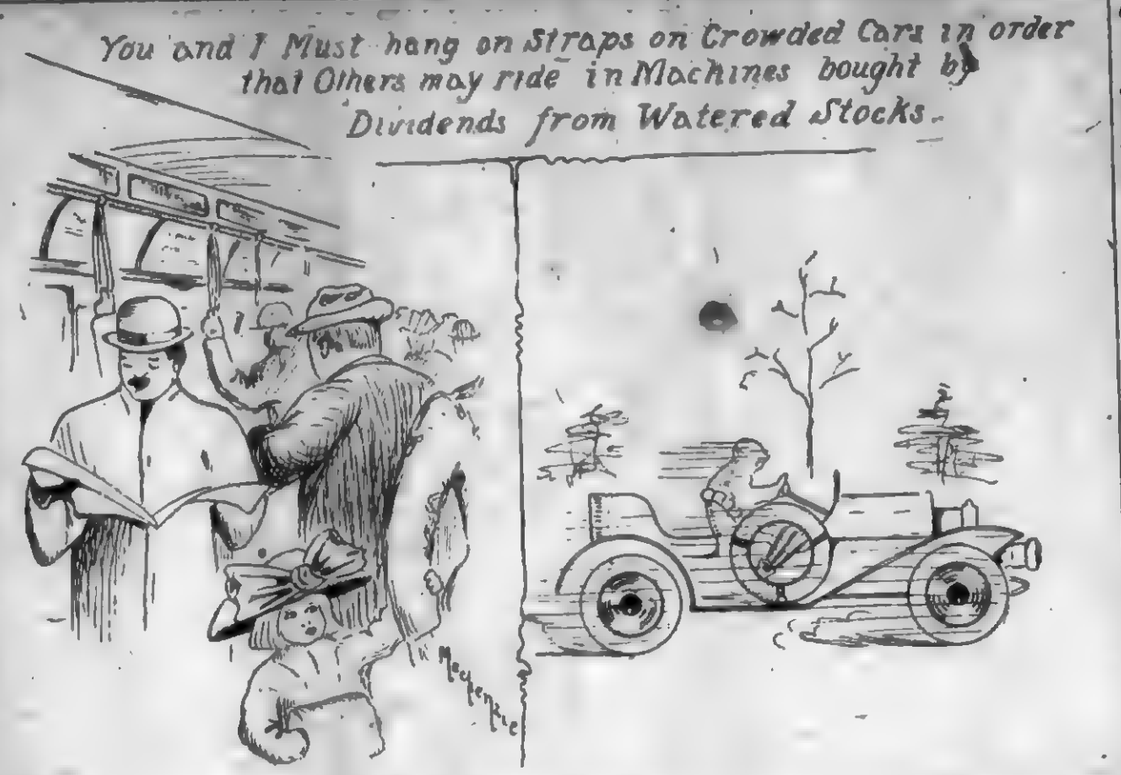
DEBS' CLARION CALL.



"If the policy of the government upon vital questions affecting the whole people is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the supreme court the instant they are made the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned the government into the hands of that eminent tribunal."

"At the time Lincoln uttered this protest in behalf of the people the supreme court had only pronounced the doom of negro slaves. Since that time it has by repeated and insidious attacks sealed the slavery of the whole working class of the United States. If Abraham Lincoln, who was cordially hated by the slave owners and their supreme court, was justified in making this protest half a century ago, we are justified, aye, it is our solemn duty to emphasize that protest by a demonstration of revolt that will shake this republic.

"February 12th, the anniversary of Lincoln's birthday, can not be more patriotically celebrated than by the inauguration of a national demonstration of protest against the despotic encroachments of the capitalistic courts.

"Let that day mark a new era in American history!"

What say the toilers of Columbus about a Lincoln's birthday celebration? With our brothers in prison and others foredoomed to the same fate, it seems fitting that the voice of labor be heard in no uncertain tones.

The Question Box.

Columbus, O., Dec. 26, 1910.

To the Editor of the Socialist :

I enclose herewith a check for 50c, six months subscription for the Columbus Socialist. I have seen your first issue and find it to contain much of interest to any citizen who has given any thought to the subject of Socialism. I have read about H. G. Wells, John Spargo, Eugene V. Debs and others to some extent and the insight I have gained has excited my curiosity, but has by no means convinced my mind of the practicality of Socialism as a distinct, political movement. There is abundant reason to believe that party politics, in our country, as indeed in all countries having a government making a pretense of freedom, is not effectual on behalf of the masses of the people, that the strong, active scheming and executive class, small in number but industrious, united and unscrupulous, are, under cover of the "interests", so-called, dominating the politics of the day and largely controling and using the government for selfish profit, and there is the further well-founded belief that there is a little hope of getting out from under this controling partisan combustion, involving both of the great parties to some extent. It is said with much plausibility that Jefferson's doctrine of uncontroled individual liberty will not accomplish the the end desired by its friends, but will, on the contrary, indirectly encourage and build up the evil of inequality before the law, because it gives to the strong and designing men an open field wherein to marshal their forces and co-operate for the accomplishment of their designs for the economic and industrial en-slavement of the larger, less cunning and more conscientious classes. It is urged again on the other hand that to strengthen the government as a machine, to govern the peoples more, will be to give more power to the enemies of liberty and equality, because the partisan manipulators would at once seize upon the opportunity, capture the machine and thus accomplish, with less difficulty, their nefarious designs. Some very wise and patriotic men hae concluded that political Socialism furnishes the means ad opportunity for the complete liberation of the nation from the abuses which are so appalling. And the late elections at home (as well as abroad) are encouraging to those having this view, but to me the increased numbers going tha way does not seem a convincing fact. There is folly in numbers sometimes. The late elections, both at home and abroad, seem rather a frantic and desperate protest against existing grievances, than a suggestion or means of how to appease them. This has been a government by political parties and it has been and is said that we must have political parties in order to detect and expose dishonesty and disloyalty in the operation of the government. This is probably not a wise nor a good governmental suggestion for various reasons, which I shall not here attempt to enumerate. But we must have political principles and the means to put them in operation. This can only be done with success by system and organization. All honest, political effort is more or less in the nature of propaganda and this can't be effectually carried forward by fugitive, individual exertion. The principle of combination, of union is wise in theory and good in practice in politics as well as elsewhere. Now what has Socialism to offer as a solution of the vexatious problems of government confronting the world? What is the scheme or method of procedure? The Golden Rule and the sermon on the Mount are very good in their way, but they have not and will not enforce themselves. We may say we have a good Constitution for our federal government in some regards but it does not and cannot enforce itself. A fountain in the center of a great desert is good to think of, but worthless, practically, if there is no means to get to it and use its waters. To illustrate further, we will say we must have a tariff law or we must not have a tariff law; we must have or we must not have this or that currency system; we must have orwe must not have public ownership and ontrol of public utilities; we must have or we must not have the single tax system; we must have or we must not have imperialism, or we must have or must not have local option in the temperance issue, and so other issues that were and which have to be dealt with by the people.

Is it understood that all Socialists will stand on the same side as to each of these question? That cannot be, because Socialists will have and will exercise individual judgment and, incidentally, will differ in opinion and then Socialism, as a distinct, partisan movement, may distintegrate. Is the Socialist to be an individualist or a partisan in the political arena? He can't, logically, be an individualist,and he dare not be a partisan in the ordinary sense of that term. And yet he must belong to an organised movement if he is to accomplish anything in the line of government. Association, brotherhod, partisanship is the logic of the movement as we have understood it, unless there is to be but one party and that would be an anomaly in a democracy, would be a sort of democratic dynasty. If under Socialism there are to be parties, engaged in partisan fights, there these strong, designing, ingenious, executive men, without any conscience, will reappear and assert themselves and the fortunes of the people wil be again imperiled. How can this danger be averted in a regime of Socialism any better than in that of Jeffersonianism? If we were living under a despat with absolute power of control we would not, possibly, have dangers of this peculiar kind. But Socialism hates despots and loves liberty, freedom and equality and with these, how is the danger to be avoided? It may be said under Socialism, the government will practically own and control everything and will use everything for the equal good of all. But how control and use these things? It is easy and fine to talk about the lillies of the field, the freedom of the birds and their equality, the glorious free sunshine and the fruitful land, but how is this fine, splendid idea to be put in practice in the control of human society? It must be done, if at all, by the people. If this be so, then why not by Jefferson's methods, which have system, as well as by Socialism which has no methods? Socialism is, in effect and purpose, democracy, reversed in its operation as we understand its propositions. It strives after the ultimate liberty and equality of the individual as well as that of the community. But the methods create the difficulty of the division. Government is a method or system of political control. We can't have anarchy. There must be law everywhere, enforced by some means. Where will this great trust be reposed? Either in a despotic or a democratic government. If democratic, that is for the good of the people and by themselves there will be division of opinion and parties. If despotic then there will be no parties. Even with Socialism in the saddle, partisanship will appear and assert itself in good and bad forms, just as it does now. The Socialist, as I have known him is, in his opinion, always radical and individual? He is the same stuff as the partisan is made of. The Socialists will differ as to the methods of procuring equal opportunity for every man, woman or child in society. It may be more ethical or more religious than politics has been, but this will only continue so long as the citizen is better than he now is. Does it not all come down to a question of individual morality and justice applied in the administration of government affairs? Can city government in any form be better than the average of its citizens? Can any Socialist enlighten us on these points? If so it would be thankfully received.

Geo. D. Jones.

We cannot answer fully all, or any single one of the questions asked us by attorney G. D. Jones in the above letter, in the short space allotted us in these columns, in one issue, but if the attorney will study the teachings of the Socialist for the year 1911, the tenets of Socialism will be explained in various ways, thus showing the feasibility of its purposes.

The hope of a better—a more humane system of government lies in the aspirations, the soul-longings of millions of men who are seeking an exemplification of a government that will be just to all mankind. It is the Christ-Spirit seking to become manifest in human affairs.

All governments have been based upon political rather than industrial acquirements. The politician has always lorded it over the workingman, thus making a slave of him. Social emocracy has never been attained in the history of the world, and never can be under the regime of Capitalism.

The lifegiving forces of a nation comes from its industrial storehouse. The political is simply the means of the disbursement of Capitalistic graft. The Magna Chartas of both the civil and religious rights of nations have been usurped by political demagogues who have builded an oligarchy of wealth and power whereby the robbery of the masses is legalised. Republican government without the referendum and recall is a farce.

Democratic government under Capitalism is a misnomer.

Socialism is an evolutionary movement. Socialism will displace Capitalism and in so doing completely destroy the profit system. Jeffersonianism approves the profit system—the exploitation of labor, and is, therefore, a part of the regime of Capitalism. Under Capitalism "every man's hand is against his brother for the dollar." The motto of Socialism is: "From each according to his ability, to each according to his deed." With the abolition of the profit system the tenets of Socialism may then be justified in government. The scheme will then be changed from that of a political hierarchy to an industrial democracy.

That the food which nearly all the steamship companies dish out to their seamen is of so low a grade, and in many cases so positively foul that seamen become physical wrecks after some years in the service of the steamship companies, were the facts brought out at the annual conventon of the International Seamen's union, recently held in Detroit.

This underfeeding of seamen, together wth the unsanitary conditions under which they are compelled to live and the small wages they get, are creating a great deal of discontent, and at the convenion it was determined to take concerted action to force better conditions from the steamship companies.

If a conciliation board fails to bring any improvements from the steamship companies then a strike of seamen will be in order. When such a strike of seamen is called it will be made worldwide.

CITY CENTRAL COMMITTE.

The city central committee of the Socialist party met at Headquarters Wednesday evening with every ward represented. A large amount of routine business was transacted. Twenty-three applications for party membership were received and approved. The election of permanent committees was completed.

On motion a cordial invitation was extended to Comrades Fred G. Strickland and May M. Strickland to locate in Columbus.

The affairs of the company are being carried on in a thorough business manner and strictly in accordance with law. As soon as the required stock is sold the company will be organized by the stockholders electing a board of directors, who, in turn, will select the necessary officers. The temporary treasurer is heavily bonded in the Fidelity & Deposit Co., of Maryland, and no other safe business method is overlooked.

News, news, news! Its enough to give a man the blues. Nobody married and nobody dead; nobody broke an arm or a head; nobody comes in to talk o the "scrap;" no one got boozy and started a scrap; no one got run in for taking a horn; nobody hurled and nobody born. Oh! for a racket, a riot, a fuss! Some one to come in and kick up a muss; some one to stir up the peachladen air; somebody's comment to give us a scare. Somebody thumped within an inch of his life; somebody run off with another man's wife; some one to come in and pay his dues; anything, anything, just so it's news.—Colusa (O.) Herald.

If things in general are heavenly YOU have NO KICK coming. But if you have some internal distress within you COUGH UP on paper and we will publish the result of your findings.

It pays to advertise. And therfore Mr. Secretary give us SOME NEWS. We are not in the business of preparing inscriptions for tombstones. We are going to let them know we are here to stay alive. So be a mule and register with a KICK.

FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Columbus Federation of Labor met Monday night. Besides the nominations of officers, an important feature was the endorsement of a protest against the third degree and "sweat box" methods used by the police and courts. A local judge was placed on the unfair list owing to his arrogant attitude towards organized labor.

THE COLUMBUS BARBERS' UNION is arranging for a mass meeting at Federation of Labor Hall, February 18. The speakers will be John Mitchell, Jacob Fischer, International Secretary-Treasurer and Rev. Irving Reese.

BARTENDERS' UNION.

We extend to the body all the encouragement possible. The new element can be proud of the privilege of associating with men of their craft who have held so loyal to the charter. Fight on. You have everything to gain boys and don't forget the Blue Label cigars.

"How do you distinguish the waiters from the guests in this cafe? Both wear full dress."

"Yes, but the waiters keep sober!" —Cleveland Leader.

PLASTER'S UNION.

Reports indicate peace and good will to all men. The present scale agreement is good till January 1, 1911. You that are almost persuaded better get in line. These are the days when we must stick together like a mustard plaster.

Once there was an old goat that tried to pass himself off for a sheep.

The watchful shepherd at once detected the imposture.

He killed the goat.

But he sold the flesh for mutton. —Chicago Tribune.

CIGAR MAKERS UNION.

There is something doing with the Cigar Makers. When we see many of the old war horses getting back into harness "Watch out."

The serstary has promised to send this office a list of the stores handling BULE LABEL CIGARS. Read this report and then retaliate by refusing to buy the product of Association Societies.

Advices indicate that there has been no materjal change in the strike and lockout situation in Tampa, Florida. Reports here indicate that less than three hundred people all told are employed in the 27 strike - bound factories owned or controlled by the Manufacturers' Association. Reports indicate that the members still out remain steadfast in their determination to remain out until an honorable and fair settlement of the dfficulty is reached.

Mr. J. C. Johnston, who was the representative of the International Union since the difficulty started, was waited upon by a sub-committee of six or seven representatives of the citizens' committee, and according to his own statement was informed by C. C. Whittaker, a former city attorney, who acted as spokesman for the committee, that "We are a committee representing the citizenship of Tampa. We are here to tell you that there is considerable feeling against you in Tampa and we are of the opinion that if you stay here violence will be done you. We are not telling you this for your sake but because we don't want the fair name of Tampa reproached because you are killed or injured here, and in order to avoid this we want you to get out and get out immediately." He concluded by saying, "It is up to you." Under the circumstances Mr. Johnston considered it wise and discreet to leave, and he did so. He was in no wise responsible for the lockout or strike, but acting under instructions, and in the fulfillment of his duties while there in the nature of a peacemaker, he was doing what he could to defend and protect the undisputed rights of our members.

BAKERS UNION.

Columbus Union Bakers held an enthusiastic meeting. The recent visits of out of town members appears to have injected new life and energy into the membership.

At their last meeting a committee was appointed to assist their craft in securing through legislative enactments laws that will tend to decrease the high rate of mortality now prevalent among the Bakery employees.

Extract from a speech delivered by Dr. W. E. Evans, Commissioner of the Board of Health of Cheago, Ill.

Your trade is a trade that has an exceptionally high mortality at all ages, but I want to call your attention particularly to the fact that in these age periods, that is those who belong to the Prudential Life Insurance Company who have been engaged in occupations where they had to breathe a good deal of vegetable dust, that their death rate was especially high between twenty-five and thirty-four years of age. In that ten years' period, of those that died 58.3 died from those diseases that were recognized as bad air diseases.

Why is it that bakers have a mortality that is somewhat above the average? The reason is, of course, that your work is a work that is somewhat more dangerous than the average work. Now why is that? A large part of your work is done at night and night workers do not usually live as long as day workers. Your hours of work are long hours and after your sponge has been made, while it is setting; not infrequently men will get some sleep in the bakeries. There are periods there in which he can snatch a few hours sleep. It is not a healthy place in which to sleep, and sleeping in a place is probably somewhat more trying on the man from the standpont of his health than it would be to stay awake during that time.

A man asleep is not quite as sanitary a proposition as a man is who is awake. He pollutes the air a little bit more by reason of the fact that his mouth is liable to be open, and the mouth is liable to dry out and whenever the mouth dries out the odor from the things that have dried in his mouth causes odors in the atmosphere rather more than during the same period when the man is awake.

Then bakeries are hot places.

There are those who believe a bakery must be maintained at a warm temperature. The process of the rising of the bread is a bacterial process. It means that the atmosphere must be at a temperature in which germs grow naturally since the rising of the bread is a germ process.

Of course, in view of the fact that a considerable part of the diseases that men are subject to are germ diseases, the thing that makes for a good growth of germs for the dough at the same time makes for a good growth of germs for the man.

MACHINISTS' UNION, NO. 55.

Over 275 members were present at the banquet given by Machinists' Union, No. 55, at Federation Hall, Tuesday night. The Machinists' Band provided music. Sixteen new members were obligated. Business Agent Lyddy reported an increase of forty per cent in membership during the past year; two members have died during the past year from tuberculosis and two members are in Arizona seeking to escape the White Plague. Hon. Tom Prior, who landed a $2,000,000 improvement at Newark, was presented with a relic of his infantile days.

At a special meeting of Buckeye Local, National Window Glass Workers held last Sunday the local agreed to a ten per cent assessment for the relief of their idle members, some not having worked at their trade since last April. Since the dissolution of the Imperial Glass Company, an alleged trust by the courts, the organization is having a hard fight to maintain their present scale of wages which calls for a 20 per cent increase over last year's scale. It seems as though the only ones to be benefitted by the dissolution of the tust will be the middle men who have control of the markets. The reduction in the cost of consumer but will be absorbed by that long list of parasites who collect toll on the finished product in its journey from the real producer to the consumer.

A DEFINITION.

Socialism does not consist in violently seizing upon the property of the rich and sharing it out amongst the poor. Socialists do not propose by a single act of Parliament, or by a sudden revolution, to put all men on an equality and compel them to remain so. Socialism is not a wild dream of a happy land where the apples will drop off the trees and into our open mouth, the fish to come out of the rivers and fry themselves for dinner, and the looms to turn out ready-made suits with gold buttons, without coaling the engine. Neither is it a dream of a nation of stained-glass angels who never say damn, who love their neighbors better than themselves, and who never need to work unless they wish to. No! Socialism is none of these things. It is a scientific scheme of government, entirely wise, just and practical. — Robert Blatchford, in Merrie England.

THE WELSH STRIKERS.

Further Efforts to Settle the Coal Trade Trouble.

It is expected that this week a large number of the miners now on strike in South Wales will be back at work. The Cwmaman colliers, numbering 3,500, who struck work a month ago, in sympathy with the Powell-Duffryn workmen, have intimated that they will remain idle until after the adjourned Conference convened by the South Wales Miners' Federation, to be held at Cardiff next Wednesday, but whatever the result of the Conference they will restart on Thursday. Bwllfa colliers, numbering 3,000, will, it is expected, come to the same conclusion.

At a mass meeting of 10,000 of the Aberdare miners on Friday, it was decided to abide by the decision of next Wednesday's Conference. The Conference was adjourned last Wednesday. At the meeting, over which Mr. W. Abraham presided, reports were presented from all parts of the coalfield, and it was stated that there was a strong desire in many parts of the coalfield for the adoption of a general "down tools" policy. As against this, some delegates expressed the view that it would be useless to have a general stoppage in South Wales unless they were supported by the miners of England and Scotland, and they urged that missionaries should be sent from South Wales to the Scottish and English coalfields in order to point out to the miners there the grievances which the South Wales miners ought to have redressed, and also to urge them to press upon their Executive the advisability of having a general stoppage throughout the country in order to force the "abnormal places" question to a head. The question was then raised as to whether the coalfield should be balloted on the question of a general stoppage, but this suggestion did not find much favor. Finally the Conference was adjourned for a week without having come to a decision upon any of the points discussed.

CAPITALISM, KNOWS NEITHER COUNTRY OR FLAG.

CULLMAN, ALA., Jan. 10.—Queen Wilhelmina of Holland has recently invested about $750,000 in coal lands in this section of Alabama and her agents are willing to make further investments. As a result of Queen Wilhelmina's investment there has been organized the Cullman Coal and Coke Company, with a capital of $2,000,000. The Queen owns nearly half the stock of the company and the remainder is held by Holland capitalists. This company will mine the coal, the bulk of which will be shipped to Holland.

The State of Alabama went through a strike recently. The governor caused the wicked modern "Moses" to be deported.

Many of the mines use CONVICT labor. Much has been written of the inhuman methods used on the convicts.

Of course the Queen would not allow such things to occur in Holland. Well, never mind, the Hollanders will have the satisfaction of thinking that the coal came from a FREE COUNTRY. Dream on sweet dreamers.

SOMEBODY'S LOAFING.

If the state factory inspector has any spare time on his hands we wish he would travel the early morning PARSONS AVENUE STREET CARS gong south and find out who is running a DAY NURSERY OR A BABY FARM in that location.

One alleged trust has been brokon. The Temple Iron company of Pennsylvania has been permanently enjoined by a federal judge from doing business. The reason for this action may be found in the fact that it was a rival of the steel trust. So, the boasting trust busting is after all the offense, with two weeks imprisonmerely a means of serving the trust by destroying compleition through injunctions issued by the federal courts.

HIS ONLY HOPE.

A lawyer of New Orleans tells this story: An old negro was brought up before the judge charged with chicken stealing, and when the usual question was propounded, "Guilty or not guilty? he said, "I don't know, boss; I jest throw myself on the ignorance of the court."—Case and Comment.

RESULTS OF RECENT BRITISH ELECTIONS.

Note Labor Party Gain.

	Old Parliament.	Old Parliament.
Liberal	275	271
Labor	40	42
Nationalist	71	73
Independent Nationalist	11	11
Tory	273	272

Thus the Liberals lose 4, the Laborites gain 2, the Nationalists gain 2, the Indenpendent Nationalists make no change, and the Tories lose 1. If the Independent Nationalists voted with the Tories, which is where their sympathies lie, the Ministerial majority would be 104 as compared with 102 in the old Parliament; if they voted with neither party, it would be 115 as compared with 113 in the old Parliament; but if they vote with the Ministry, as it is assumed in the dispatches that they will, the Ministerial majority will be 126 in the new Parliament as compared wth 124 in the old one.

OUR LOSS OF INDIVIDUALITY.

I recently read an article called "The Loss of Individuality", wherein the writer gravely lamented the fact of our tendencies in drifting steadily toward the destruction of individuality. This lack of individuality, it seems, is particularly noticed in the dress of men and women, in that every one shows a determination to reach sameness.

The writer further states that in the earlier day there was brilliancy and variety of color and costume, blending in a harmonious whole.

Up to this point I agree with the writer. It is true that people, especially women, follow as a rule, as closely as their means will permit, the current styles in millinery, gowns, wraps, shoes and even the little finishing touches at the neck.

Only the few women with big, beautiful natures, such as are found among the Salvation Army lasses and the nuns of the Roman Catholic church, prove exceptions to this ruling law of fashion.

But the writer says that, of course, all Socialistic teachings are in this same direction, turning out people on precisely the same pattern, with the same ideas, occupations and conditions in life, all content to remain on the same dead level.

My dear unknown writer, where under the shining sun did you get your ideas of Socialism? Surely not from any Socialist nor the writings of any Socialist. You are wrong from start to finish in your last assertion quoted.

Socialists, under their rule, would no more expect or desire to make all people alike, with like ideas, occupations and conditions, than they would expect, under Socialist regime to paint each evening the same color scheme in the sunset clouds.

Socialism never has taught nor never will teach that all human beings can be equal. The only equality that Socialists believe in is the equality of opportunity.

Today, after all, what is responsible for the dead sameness of conditions of which the writer complains? Are we not victims of the system of Capitalistic greed?

If in the earlier days, there was brilliancy and color of costume; if the polonial belle, bedecked in the pretty finery of original individuality, differed from her sisters in style and color, as the shades of the rainbow differ from each other; it was because the head of her household lived under a far different government then we find ourselves living under today. He owned the tools with which he labored. He produced an article, sold it and received the full, just compensation for his labor. At his home there was plenty and prosperity. There was an abundance of time for the dainty lady to fashion the quaint, smart costume she wore and be original through and through. Today, the descendant of that bygone age toils in a factory.

He does not own the tools with which he labors. They are owned by the men who own him, for he is little better than a slave. He does not receive the full value of his labor, but is permitted to keep back about one-eighth of what he earns. And what of the women of his household? Under such conditions most of them must themselves enlist in fighting the battle of the struggle for existence. Those who do not find their time well occupied in getting sufficient clothing for themselves and their families, while little heed is paid or can be paid, to original designing. They are only too happy that some one else can give them a pattern to follow.

Content with precisely the same occupations do you say? How strange! Would not the work of the world still have to be carried on under Socialism as now under Capitalism? Would we not then as now need lawyers, physicians, merchants, manufacturers and laborers in all fields?

Think you under Socialism we would have no further use for the poet, the painter, the sculptor, the actor, the musician, the writer? All these occupations would still continue, the only difference being, after having once taken from their lives the harrowing struggle for the bare necessities of life, these workers would greatly excel and give to the world such evidence of genius, or individuality, if you please, as could never be dreamed of under the present existing conditions.

"All content to remain on the same dead level." My friend, if you sound the depths of Socialism the world over, you will find nowhere in its domains a "dead level." Socialism is alive. It is a living, glowing advancement from start to finish. It is a forward, onward, upward movement. The Socialist wagon is hitched to a star.

Like you, my friend, we too mourn the system that has crushed from the individuals of our land the golden heritage of their individuality. In giving them an equality of opportunity, we can give them back the joy of thinking for themselves independently, of being themselves, and of manifesting in all lines their true selfhood.

The divine spark of genius is as liable to fall into the home of poverty as into the home of the rich. Today what is the result when one of the poorer class is endowed with genius? Has he an equal chance with his more favored brother for its development? Too often the spark burns out, because he has time only from sunrise till sunset for the incessant grind of work, that he may keep more breath in his body.

There always have been and there always will be individuals blest far above their fellows. Socialism could not change this immutable law, nor would it seek to.

Some can, with inspired vision, see the angel within the rough block of marble and call it forth in all its angelic beauty.

Others can give to us in music, the moonlight shining on rose gardens, the roar of the winds, the toss of the billowy seas, the noise of battle, the tears of sorrow, the maddening glory of love. Still others can portray on canvas the human countenance until it glows with seeming life.

To these rare souls the spirit of Socialism would but lend all encouragement possible in its power, saying: "Press on in your work of creative genius. You were but the imprisoned chrysalis under Capitalism; you are now a winged victory. Scale the heights, for they are yours."

And to others would the spirit command in the words of Thomas Carlyle: "Produce! Produce! Were it but the pitifullest, infinitesimal fraction of a product, produce in God's name!"

EACH IN HIS OWN TONGUE.

A factory of workmen,
An industry they say,
A place where the toiler early and late,
Toils till the close of the day.
With ne'er a respite from labor,
Never a smile or song,
Some call it a Corporation,
And others call it wrong.

Smoke on the far horizon,
Hiding the blue of the sky,
Whistles that sound in noisy shriek,
When the quitting time is nigh.
And within and out the factory,
The signs you can plainly read,
Some call it a Corporation,
And others call it Greed.

A blot on fair creation,
A stigma on the race,
This slavery of our workmen,
For ill gotten profits base.
The spirit cries from its bondage:
"Deliver us from the foe."
Some call it a Corporation,
And others call it Woe.

THE GOVERNOR OF CONNECTICUT DOES NOT BELIEVE IN EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL WOMEN.

And so Governor Simeon E. Baldwin of Connecticut thinks it would be well for a few women to vote, the favored few who are assessed for taxes upon property. Thanks, awfully, Governor, but we would like to ask you if all the intelligence necessarry for exercising the right of suffrage is wrapped up in the property owning women of our land? Are there not some few others who might be capable of having a voice in saying who shall rule them and the manner of that ruling?

Why show such glaring favoritism?

The woman who is comfortable and happy in the possession of property rarely gives much heed to the question of industrial economics that is forced daily upon the woman bread earner or the mother of a family who must manage down to the last penny in order to make both ends meet—too often, alas, she cannot make one end meat and the other vegetable.

These women know that something is wrong; many of them know the remedy. Give them a chance for they could not make matters politic worse; they might make them a great better.

"A man's a man's for a' that"—the same applies to a woman; whether she is a Morosini, a Goelet, a Stalio, or a poor, half starved, little waif slaving in a factory, she is an American citizen, and as such entitled to all the rights of citizenship.

We hope, dear Governor, that you will some day have a change of heart along these lines.

Four women are to sit in the next legislature of Colorado as duly elected members.

Anna Hosman, 18, worked three days in St. Louis in a shirt factory for 39 cents. This was brought out in a trial before a probation officer and indicated the extent to which child labor prevails.

SHALL WE BE OPTIMISTS?

Lida Evandell.

It has recently been charged against us that we are "cheerful idiots". We have been labeled unreasoning optimists, rainbow chasers, followers of will-o-the-wisp, lured on by deceitful mirages of hope, to the end of the journey and there, still hoping against hope, that there is something better just beyond the horison of our vision.

Are we deluded creatures, filled with rosy illusions which have no existence in reality? Are we like children always making believe, playing, pretending, building air castles on foundations of nothingness? Do we, in spite of our years, persist in dwelling in a fairy land of our own creation, peopled with beautiful creatures of our foolish imaginations?

Or have we a reason for the faith that is in us?

What is optimism? "A creed for women and children but scorned by strong men."

As nearly as the feminine mind can fathom, comprehend and elucidate it, it is the doctrine of unbounded fruit in the goodness of things, taught by the philosopher, Liebnitz long years ago, (so you can see it isn't NEW thought at all, you followers of that fad!)

This old time philosophy declares:

First—That the existing universe is the very best of all possible universes."

Secondly—"That, whatever is, is right, in some inscrutable way, cannot be improved upon."

Well, has the mighty reasoning of man, been able to discover any better world than this old earth?

Has he, in all the centuries been able to improve upon it so much? Isn't it jogging along pretty much in the same old way as in the days of old? Since man was driven out of the garden of Eden has he not been constantly seeking another paradise?

Have we not with us the same old floods, pestilences, earthquakes and such things as troubled our forefathers?

With the same old rainbow of hope, in the sky, that Noah saw. (I always suspected that it was Mrs. Noah who spied it first and pointed it out to her doubting husband,) promising us that whatever comes we shall not be totally wiped off the earth?

But the old belief defined as optimism has grown along with other creeds of life until today it has resolved itself into something like this:

"There is a great law of cause and effect in the universe moving on towards perfection. All things are in a state of evolution, and each separate thing must endure the condition or environment that will help it towards its growth and development."

Woman, as a modern optimist, sees and dwells upon the coming perfection rather than upon present states of undevelopment which appear evil.

The most radical female optimist who looks upon a puckery little green peach clinging to the bough of the tree, and exclaims, "Isn't it sweet and dear," is not deceived thereby. She understand exactly what would happen if that little peach were diverted from its true course of development and precipitated into her stomach; but its green immature state does not cause her to condemn it as no good.

She looks ahead to its juicy ripened perfection, its future state of luscious maturity and says:

"It is full of possibilities; it is potent with good. She would stay the hand that would destroy it because it could not at once convey it to a hungry palate. She says: "Wait Let it alone. Let it grow. It will soon be a fine big peach."

In the same way the woman optimist looks upon her fellow creatures. There's that worthless no account husband of hers, which causes her friends to wonder what in the world she sees in him! Her belief in the ultimate goodness of things enables her to penetrate through the soiled and battered outside of what has once been a man, to the heart and soul of him, which may be, by her aid, still struggling for mastery.

And every woman is an optimist when it comes to her boy. She will follow him all through his wild escapades clear down to the gutter of lost manhood, into the lowest depths of crime, because of her faith in the tiny germ of good, which she still believes is in him, wrongly it may be hidden from all eyes but hers.

And nine times out of ten, the germ does not exist, and faintly struggling to extricate itself from its surrounding filth and slime, dimly feels the light of her love and faith, gropes towards it, and finally finds its way out into the sunshine.

Whatever the modern woman discards in her desire for advancement, let us pray that she will keep her faith in the goodness of things. That she will hold on to her optimism which enables her to see through external coverings into the heart and soul of things.

Whatever woman has achieved as an individual, whatever she has done for the race, whatever she has given to the world, she has accomplished through her optimistic faith in herself in men, and in things.

Whatever progress woman makes in the future, will be made through her faith in life, in the world and in her fellow creature.

Whatever fields of endeavor she may enter her one divine, supreme, mission to the world, in the coming age, is to look up, herself, and help others to look up and see that there is something on this old earth, worth living for and working for. The greatest thing in the world she can do is to sustain and encourage those about her with her unfailing sympathy and love, and to be able to do this she must remain an optimist.

"EVER THY FRIEND."

By Lida Evandell.

"Ever thy friend."
Words so lightly written, what do the portend?
Is it the soul that speaks,—tell me does it know
The long road, the weary road that we must go?

Thou art my friend.
Wilt thou walk with me unto the very end?
Or wilt thou only clasp my hand a little while
Where the ways are smooth and the heavens smile?

If I must go
Through valleys dark where tempests gather low
Must bruise my feet on stones and thorns I tread,
O shall I turn to find that thou hast fled?

Should I divine
I cannot go thy way nor thou go mine,
Shall thy strong voice still call in accents clear;
"I love thee still, my heart, and still am near."

We cannot know,—
Ah me! until we reach the rosy sunset glow,
And only there,—there at our journey's end,—
Shall those great words be true: "I am thy friend."

Points for Mothers

The custom of taking children to funerals is being denounced by many preachers and persons who make a special study of children. They argue that the child mind is especially sensitive and it should not be subjected to thoughts of death and tragedy unless absolutely necessary, because the impressions the child receives give an undesired twist and turn to the development of the mind and have a lasting effect toward morbidness. The Rev. Gerald G. Fansbawe, vicar of Godalming, England, has taken up the subject with much energy. He writes: "The clergy have frequently noticed that young children, sometimes in considerable numbers, are to be seen at funeral services at the cemetery. They are not the children of the bereaved family, but those of neighbors and occasionally of persons who merely come and watch out of morbid curiosity. It cannot be a good thing that young lives should be thus early familiarized with all that is sad and somber. Joy and brightness should be associated with childhood, and as far as possible they should be shielded from anything which is gloomy and depressing."

The Rainy Day.

"Rain, rain, go away; little Willie wants to play; come back some other day," need not be the sorrowful dirge of the children on the wet days if the mother of the house be of tactful kind and knows how to make good use of the indoor weather.

In the first place, a rainy day is a good time to teach the children some of the old stories of the Bible or of the good pieces of literature which would find them restless when the sun demanded that they go outside. The mother will find that the children take more readily to little sewing lessons and to little instructions in housekeeping on wet days than on the other times when such lessons would be wasted. If a mother be wise she will save up her strength and her little talks on good behavior for the rainy days, and she will have the necessary results from patient children, who really appreciate the home's coziness of a rainy day.

The state of Washington at the late election adopted a provision for full woman suffrage.

Finland now employs police women in all the towns of the country. These women do not do patrol duty but they guard women and girls who are unprotected, protecting them from the vultures who would destroy them and aiding them secure honest employment. They also care for children of the unfortunate. This is practical work and answers well the question as to whether women would be able to take up the duties of citizenship in case they are given the ballot.

DREAMS.

Some tiny elves, one evening, grew mischievous, it seems,
And broke into the store-room where the Sand-man keeps his dreams,
And gathered up whole armfuls of dreams all bright and sweet,
And started forth to peddle them adown the village street.

Oh, you would never, never guess how queerly these dreams sold;
Why, nearly all the youngest folk bought dreams of being old;
And one wee chap in curls and kilts, a gentle little thing,
Invested in a dream about an awful pirate king!

A maid, who thought her pretty name old-fashioned and absurd,
Bought dreams of names the longest and the queerest ever heard;
And strange to say, a lad who owned all sorts of costly toys,
Bought dreams of selling papers with raggedest of boys.

And then a dream of summer and a barefoot boy at play,
Was bought up very quickly by a gentleman quite gray;
And one old lady—smiling through the grief she tried to hide—
Bought bright and tender visions of a little girl who died.

A ragged little beggar girl, with weary, wistful gaze,
Soon choose a Cinderella dream, with with jewels all ablaze—
Well, it wasn't many minutes from the time they came in sight
Before the dreams were all sold out and the elves had taken flight.

WHY CORN POPS.

Under favorable circumstances one may occasionally see, while popping corn, little puffs of white vapor issuing from the popper. One might reasonably presume this to be steam or water-vapor; but, in order to make sure of it, I popped half-a-dozen grains in a small beaker, the mouth of which was stopped loosely with a cork holding the beaker over a gas flame. The result was the generation of so much steam that it hissed out around the cork and gave my fingers a lively sensation of heat. This seemed almost conclusive on that point, but it occurred to me to weigh the corn before and after popping, and this led to the discovery that more than ten per cent of the weight of the corn is lost in the process, and this loss is doubtless the water which escapes. So that our popperful of corn — a bulk between fifty and one hundred times as great as it was originally — really weighs less than when we started! But this only half explains what takes place when the grain explodes. It is not quite plain why the expanding steam should puff the corn out into a crisp white mass instead of blowing it to atoms, and the real inwardness of the matter will be apparent only by comparing the structure of the seed as Nature has finished it with its structure after it is popped. To do this, we must cut a very thin slice, thinner than this paper, through the middle of the grain of corn, and magnify it very highly. Now the whole grain is made up of little sacs, or bags, which botanists call "cells"; each cell of which there are thousand it is to this compact arrangement tightly with little granules of starch, and t is to this compact arrangement of starch-granules that the corn owes its hardness. Much the greater part of the grain consists of these cells crowded full of starch, although the remainder is really the most important, vital part, that is, the embryo, which, under proper conditions initiates the growth of the seed; the starch being merely a little store of food upon which the young shoot feeds until it is established and able to take care of itself. And, by the way, the cereals which are so extensively used as food are, like the corn, largely composed of this same substance, starch. Understanding now what there is in the kernel of corn let us look at a thin slice of the same corn after it is popped, and see if we can make out what has become of the cells and the starch. Here we have apparently a similar structure of cells; but they are smaller than the original cells and much larger than the starch-granules, so it is reasonable to conclude that these apparent cells are the starch-granules themselves swelled up by the steam. This is the fact; so they are not cells at all in the botanical sense. Simple chemical tests prove that they are starch. But the granules are no longer solid; they have been blown up into vesicles, or balloons, and the steam in forcing its escape not only ruptures many of the vesicles, but splits and tears its way all through the mass, making rifts and channels leading to the air. Only the starchy part pops; the embryo, of which I have spoken, simply shrinks and turns brown.

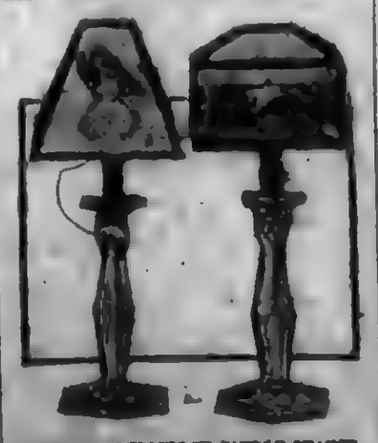
GAMES.



Blind Man's Buff with a Wand. — This can be played by any number of children, preferably ten or more. One player is blindfolded, and given a cane or wand. The other players join hands and dance round him till he taps three times. Immediately the other players stop. The blindfolded player points with the cane at some one in the ring. The one at whom he points must take the end of cane, and, holding it, must answer any three questions the blindfolded player may choose to ask. The player who answers may, however, disguise his voice. If the blindfolded player succeeds in guessing who is speaking the two players change places.

Animal Blind Man's Buff.—This is played just like the above, except that instead of asking questions, the blind man tells the player to imitate some animal. This the player attempts to do. If the blind man says, for instance, "Imitate a dog!" the player responds with "Bow-Bow!"

French Blind Man's Buff in School-Rom.—One player is blindfolded and stands in front of the class. The others are seated at their desks. All of the players are numbered. The one who is blindfolded calls two of their numbers; and the players whose numbers have been called stand up immediately, and answer, "Here!" Two more numbers are called and the players so designated do the same as the first two did. The one who is blindfolded then calls out, "Go!" At once the players who are standing change places according to the order in which they are called, the first two changing with each other, and the second two with each other. As they change, they pass down the aisles, and cross in front of the class, so that the one who is blindfolded may have a chance to catch one of them. If he succeeds, the one who has been caught changes places with him.

Postcard Shades.

A new and very charming use has been found for the hand tinted postcards which can now be obtained in such variety, says the Woman's Home Companion. They come with pictures of dainty Watteau shepherdesses, eighteenth century court beauties or Japanese girls painted upon them, and what could be more attractive than to make them into candle shades. They are made of a fine quality cardboard, so that the light penetrates them and shows up the pictures in delicate relief. There is only one caution to be observed in making a selection, and that is to choose pictures with rather simple motives. Each card must be trimmed a little, and if the figure in the foreground is large or complicated its beauty is liable to be marred by the cutting.

CHARMING EFFECTS IN CANDLE SHADES.

THE FOURTH ESTATE

Novelized by FREDERICK R. TOOMBS

From the Great Play of the Same Name by Joseph Medill Patterson and Harriet Ford.

COPYRIGHT, 1909, BY JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON AND HARRIET FORD.

Dupuy put his overcoat back on the chair. His luck was still holding good, he congratulated himself. Here was a chance to make the acquaintance of the new owner of the influential Advance, an opportunity to pave the way possibly to secure future favors from him for his clients when emergencies arose. Needless to say, emergencies frequently arose to disturb the peace of mind of the varieties of people who sought the versatile aid of Mr. Ed Dupuy. He turned to face McHenry and said:

"Oh, the new owner! I'd like to meet him. If you don't object I'll wait." Dupuy seated himself at the extreme left hand corner of the office close to the rack containing files of the daily papers. He took down a file and began to read. McHenry, laughing at the patent anxiousness of the lawyer to meet Nolan, put on his coat.

A heavy step was heard, and the bulky form of the new owner of the Advance stood before the managing editor.

"I am Mr. McHenry," explained the latter.

"I am Mike Nolan," the newcomer remarked bluntly.

At the sound of the big man's big voice Dupuy, whom Nolan had not noticed in the corner, stirred and turned his head to gain a better view of him. There was something familiar in the ring of that voice. There was something familiar in the features and the poise of Mr. Mike Nolan. Surely he had met him somewhere. He pondered and pondered and finally gave up the problem in disgust.

"This is a nice looking place you've got here," he remarked to McHenry.

"That you've got, sir."

A feminine voice from the outer hallway was heard to exclaim breathlessly, "I refuse to climb another step."

McHenry turned inquiringly, whereupon Nolan explained: "My family's just outside. I wanted them to see me take possession." His voice was tinged with pride. He stepped to the door. "Come in, mother," he called gayly. Mrs. Nolan, a tall, well proportioned brunette, attired in the costliest of imported garments, entered the managing editor's office with a pronounced flourish, followed by the two Nolan children, Sylvester and Phyllis—the son about twenty-two years old and the daughter probably a year or two younger. "Oh, mercy, them stairs!" exclaimed the mother, endeavoring to catch her breath. Nolan presented his wife and son to McHenry. Mrs. Nolan called to Phyllis to draw near. "This is my daughter, Phyllis," she said. "She went to Bryn Mawr." Phyllis and the managing editor exchanged greetings. "My son, Sylvester," went on the mother proudly, "went to Harvard."

"Oh, you're a Harvard man!" spoke McHenry to Sylvester. "What class?"

The soo, togged in the latest freshman effects in the line of sporty clothes and drawing on an unlighted cigarette, replied, "1909, 1910, 1911."

Mrs. Nolan pointed at a pile of papers lying on a small desk. "I don't see how you ever get time to read 'em all," she addressed McHenry.

"Oh, I read fifty or sixty a day. We've got to know what the other fellows are doing."

"That's just like me," she responded smoothly. "I always like to know what everybody else is doing, too," she went on. "I think what journalism needs is a soft feminine, refining influence. It seems you don't publish anything now but crime, divorces and people's troubles." She laughed.

"Oh, you wouldn't want to read every day that Mr. and Mrs. James Jones were living happily together. You're only interested when they're unhappy."

"Still I'd like to read once in awhile that somebody else was happy, at least for a little while."

It was McHenry's turn to laugh.

"Would you like to look over the plant, Mrs. Nolan?" he asked.

"Oh, yes! What I want to see is the reporters reporting."

When Mrs. Nolan, Phyllis and Sylvester had departed in the wake of the boy who had answered McHenry's ring, Dupuy rose and made a signal to McHenry behind Nolan's back that he wanted to meet the owner. The managing editor beckoned him over. "Mr. Nolan," he said, inclining toward the proprietor of the Advance, "this is Mr. Dupuy."

"I'd like to read that somebody else was happy."

Dupuy bowed, again trying to fix in his mind the occasion on which, somehow, somewhere in his busy past he had met Michael Nolan. He extended his hand, saying, "I am glad to meet you, Mr. Nolan."

The newspaper publisher pierced Dupuy with a glance which, to say the least, was searching. He crouched toward him and compressed his brows as though to render his sight more certain, more penetrating. He had half extended his own hand to grasp Dupuy's. Suddenly, with a half smothered oath, he drew it violently back.

"My God," he exclaimed, "it is Ed Dupuy!"

He continued to stare at the lawyer. After a moment a faint smile appeared.

"Ed Dupuy, that's funny," he continued—"that's awful funny. Well, don't it beat all? Don't you remember me, Ed?"

Dupuy couldn't place him as yet.

"Why—ah, Mr. Nolan! Yes, it must have been. Let's see. Wasn't it Monte Carlo two winters ago?" he ventured.

"No, Ed, no; it wasn't Monte Carlo two winters ago. It was here in this town twelve summers ago. Remember now?"

"Twelve summers ago—twelve summers ago?" Dupuy reflected.

"The street car strike," reminded Nolan.

"Oh, yes, the street car strike!" added Dupuy. Now he began to remember. He began to remember the part he, as the Consolidated Traction company's counsel, played in that war between capital and labor, and somewhere in it all he realized that a face something like the one before him had come to his knowledge; also the name "Nolan" had a familiar ring. "Nolan, Nolan!" he repeated to himself. No, it was "Dolan," he reassured himself; that had been the name of the man he had crushed and driven from the kin of men. Yes, that was it, "Dolan," and that man was a broken down and outer when Dupuy last heard of him.

Jerry Dolan, the agitator.

Nolan saw that Dupuy was perplexed, and he laughed as he said:

"Yes, it was the street car strike, and you and Judge Bartelmy between you sent Jerry Dolan to jail for contempt, and that broke the strike after it'd been won."

"He was a dangerous agitator, was Dolan," pronounced Dupuy, directing an interested glance at the new owner.

Nolan drew a deep breath and, clinching his fists at his sides, replied to his arch foe of twelve years before:

"He'll be a more dangerous agitator from now on. I'm Jerry Dolan!"

CHAPTER IV.

THE declaration of the new owner of the Advance that he was no less a personage than the blacklist victim of years back created the sensation that would a cannon shot in the dreamy solitude of the sylvan dells of Arcady.

Dupuy fell back as though struck by a violent blow. And, indeed, he and his interests would have every reason to believe, he now knew full well, that they had in all truth a new enemy to combat, an enemy that would cost them dearly if he were to be vanquished.

"You—you are Jerry Dolan, and you own the Advance!" the lawyer cried chokingly. "What are we coming to next?" he finally managed to say after a desperate effort to calm himself.

Jerry Nolan, for none other than the old time strike leader it was, enriched by his mining operations in the rock ribbed Nevada hills, thrilled with the realization that he was now in a position to strike terror into the hearts and souls of those who had attempted to destroy him and his loved ones. He knew that he had in his power the men who had almost succeeded in their designs against him twelve years before.

McHenry, at first even more puzzled than Dupuy and who was bending forward, with an expression of deepest interest and concern implanted on his features, began to understand the situation more clearly when he heard his new employer say in a voice that pulsated with determination:

"Yes, Ed Dupuy, I am Jerry Dolan, and I am back in the old town to pay my respects to my friends and—and"—his voice shook—"to my enemies."

The whole truth now dawned upon the amazed McHenry and also upon Dupuy, who had been dealing with men long enough to know that his only successful pose at the present momentous time would be a conciliatory one. He must at all hazards smooth over this dangerous factor in the city's affairs, the returned Jerry Dolan, and persuade him that he was now his friend.

"Well, well," Dupuy began ingratiatingly, simulating a sickly smile, "this is a most interesting meeting—most interesting, indeed." He laughed as loudly as the nervously contracting muscles of his throat would permit. "But it is time now to let bygones be bygones, eh, Mr.—er—ah"— He again thrust forward the hand that the newspaper proprietor had refused to grasp.

"Nolan," answered the newcomer in his deep, strong voice, "N-o-l-a-n, with an 'N' and not a 'D' on the front end of it. That's my name now. I had to change it." He stopped abruptly and again directed his dark eyes menacingly on the face of the man opposite him. After a few moments he continued: "You see, Ed Dupuy, I was blacklisted as Dolan. Likely you'll remember that too."

Nolan reached out and, seizing Dupuy's hand, held it firmly. McHenry, at one side, witnessed with a distinct shock what he understood as Nolan's sudden resolve to, as Dupuy had suggested, let "bygones be bygones," else why should he shake hands with the man? Dupuy also felt a thrill of pleasure, even of triumph, as the one time chairman of the Street Railway Workers' union warmly shook his hand. Dupuy smiled and, bowing pleasantly, essayed to withdraw his hand from Nolan's grip and step away. But his smile turned to a wrinkled contraction of his facial muscles, indicating acutest pain. The giant hand of the ex-striker, ex-miner, was closing with crushing force around the lawyer lobbyist's fingers and knuckles. It did not cease to crush, try as Dupuy might to wrest his hand free. At the moment when he felt that he must scream in his pain or else cringingly plead for mercy Nolan's grip partially relaxed, and he swung Dupuy to one side. A grim smile made its way into the furrows, won by suffering and privation in the Nevada mining camps and desolate gold regions, that marked Nolan's visage.

"You see, I'm stronger than you now, Ed Dupuy, just as you was stronger than me twelve years ago—you and Bartelmy between you." A great sigh escaped him as he finished.

Dupuy, now having freed his hand, rubbed it smartly with the other to restore the circulation to the flattened veins. He wheeled away to pick up his overcoat.

Nolan now addressed McHenry, who had seated himself at his desk.

"You're the managing editor?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I just want to tell you that that was a true article you had about that old hypocrite, Judge Bartelmy, this morning," he stated to McHenry. "Have another tomorrow and stronger." Another idea came to him, and he added, "Who was it got up that one today?"

Dupuy felt that he must come to McHenry's rescue.

"A young man who has since resigned," he interjected for the managing editor. Both McHenry and Dupuy were growing uneasy at the trend of Nolan's thoughts and words. A glimpse into the craniums of them both at this moment would have revealed the same thought to be predominating: "What is he driving at?"

Nolan appeared distinctly surprised at two things—first, that the writer of the story had resigned; second, that Dupuy should be so familiar with the matter. He took a step toward the latter.

"Resigned?" he asked in reverberating tones. "How do you know?" Before Dupuy could answer Nolan wheeled on McHenry. "Is it so, what Dupuy says?" he asked of the managing editor.

"Yes, sir."

"What's his name?"

"Wheeler Brand."

"What did he resign for?"

"Some of the big advertisers forced him to," admitted McHenry calmly.

A look of understanding flitted across Nolan's face. He shifted his glance from McHenry to Dupuy. Then, with a significant smile, he said:

"I see you are still on the job, Ed Dupuy."

"Well, it's business"—began the lobbyist defiantly. But Nolan would not listen to him. Thoughts vastly more important than conjecture as to Dupuy's motives now crowded his brain.

"Where is Brand now?" he asked sternly of McHenry.

"I think he is in the local room now, sir," pointing to the door at his left.

The new proprietor strode impulsively to the doorway and called at the top pitch of his powerful voice: "Wheeler Brand! Wheeler Brand!"

* * * * * * *

As he had hurried from the managing editor's room after his dismissal from the Advance Wheeler Brand struggled valiantly against a wave of discouragement that assailed him and for a moment or two threatened to overwhelm. "Discharged for 'beating' the town on the story of the year," he muttered. "Well, I'll try to get on across the street," he concluded, "across the street" meaning the Guardian, the bitter rival of the Advance. He went to one of the long oak tables in the city room, where he seated himself next to Higgins, the leading police reporter of the paper, and began nervously to finish the story of a new bank merger on which he had been working when summoned by McHenry. When he finished he laid the pages of copy on the city editor's desk. He dragged a chair to a window, sat down and gazed moodily down at the crowds of people hurrying along the street below.

It was not his dismissal from the staff which chiefly concerned him. He was certain of obtaining another position. In fact, his reputation along Newspaper row was such, and he felt justifiable pride at the thought, that he would be at work within twenty minutes after leaving the Advance office if he so desired. But what did occupy his mind to the exclusion of almost everything else was the consideration of what view Judith Bartelmy would take when she heard the news of his dismissal. She had warned him that he was sacrificing his future in his attacks on the powers that be. Undoubtedly now she would be convinced, as some of his friends had already endeavored to convince her, that, after all, he was a fanatic, an impractical dreamer, who could not accomplish his ambition to right what he believed to be great wrongs, who could not, moreover, escape summary dismissal from his paper. But he must go on. He would go on. He would go that very night to a newspaper that would not suppress nor qualify the truth, one that would not distort facts nor misrepresent a situation in order to deceive the public, to which it was its duty to give the truth. Yes, and he would show the big thieves of the city that even if they managed to remain superior to the law at least they could not remain superior to public opinion. The time had come when—

"Wheeler Brand! Wheeler Brand!" The voice of Nolan came to his ears above the ticking of the telegraph instruments and the clicking of typewriter keys. Brand started from his seat. He did not recognize the voice, nor did any one else in the smoky city room, as curious upraised faces around him testified. It came from the managing editor's room, however, so he hastened to respond, wondering what it could mean.

Brand entered McHenry's office and faced the three men, his surprise increasing as he saw from the attitudes of McHenry and Dupuy that a huge, rawboned, bronzed faced stranger apparently dominated the situation.

"Yes?" said Brand inquiringly to the stranger, whom he placed as the owner of the voice, because he knew it had not been McHenry's or Dupuy's.

"I am Nolan, the new owner," greeted the stranger.

Brand stepped forward and offered his hand, which Nolan grasped.

"How do you do, Mr. Nolan?" the reporter greeted him, endeavoring to figure just what the mysterious proceeding portended.

Nolan went straight to the point.

"So you've been fired for that Bartelmy article, have you?" he asked.

"Yes, sir."

Nolan turned and shot a triumphant glare at McHenry and Dupuy. Then he caused the blood to rush almost blindingly into the head of the young reporter when he swung around, grasped Brand's arm, drew him over to the managing editor's chair, beside which that official was standing, and said, "Well, I've got another job for you." Nolan put both hands on Brand's shoulders and by main strength forced him down heavily into the chair. "From now on you sit here," he announced. "You're managing editor now."

Some of the Socialist young men—and what an array of them we have—are getting up a glee club to enliven the next campaign or rather the one which has commenced. Go to it, boys! It's a good thing, push it along. Every Socialist meeting ought to be enlivened by the stirring songs of the Revolution.

A BOOST FROM CORNING.

Corning, Ohio, Jan. 6, 1911.
The Socialist Publishing Co.,
Dear Comrades:

Received sample copy of The Socialist. Like the paper all right. Just the kind we need in this state. I see you did not make the mistake that most Socialist papers have been making in this country in trying to see how cheap they can get it out and not charging enough for subscription. One Dollar a year is not too much for a Socialist weekly, in fact I think it is not enough to get out a first class paper. One of the main faults of the Socialist Party in this country is that they are cheap skates in their newspapers. One of the best ways to increase our membership is through a first-class paper, and the Comrades should be willing to pay a good price. Most Comrades spend from three to five dollars a year for Capitalist papers, which they should use in subscribing to good Socialist papers.

Yours for Socialism,
Jos. A. Siemer.

United Mine Workers of 6th District Meet.

ADOPT RESOLUTIONS CONDEMNING THE IMPRISONMENT OF FRED D. WARREN.

The annual meeting of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America convened at the Odd Fellows' building on South High Street Tuesday morning, and after the reading of the officers' reports, announcement was made of the re-election of the following officers for the ensuing year:

President, D. H. Sullivan; vice-president, John Moore; secretary-treasurer, G. W. Savage; member national executive board, A. R. Watkins; auditors, Conrad Weis, Thomas Crawford and Fred Helle.

The report of President Sullivan reviewed the condition in the district during the year. He said that since last April there has not been a time that one or more strikes have not been in existence. This meant a terrific drain on the relief fund of the district and it finally became necessary to appeal to the International organization for relief.

The report of Vice-President Moore touched largely on the same matters as the president's and Secretary-treasurer Savage reported on the financial condition of the district and, that the membership increased 2500 during the year. The total expenditures for the year amounted to $353,739.07 of which $205,780.50 was paid out in strike benefits. At the close of the year there was cash on hand, $106,712.48.

There are over 500 delegates present at the convention.

The national mine workers will hold their convention in Columbus, beginning next Tuesday. When the national body meets the state convention will probably refer the question regarding the screen and mine lump basis, with the hope that a national law will be formed on the subject.

Indirect raps at the supreme court of Ohio were taken by speakers at Wednesday morning's session.

It was said that legislation similar to that desired in this state and which had been declared unconstitutional by the supreme judges had been upheld by the courts of other states.

Secretary Harry Thomas of Cleveland, secretary of the Ohio Federation of Labor, urged that all the labor organizations of the state get behind the movement to incorporate in the constitution clauses which would permit the payment of compensation to injured workmen by the industries themselves, without contribution on the part of the employe. The sentiment of the meeting favored this proposition.

The convention Thursday indorsed the parcels post bill, now before Congress, and adopted a resolution condemning the sentence of Fred D. Warren of Girard, Kan., editor of The Appeal to Reason, who is soon to begin a six months' term in jail for violation of the postal laws. The resolution protests against the unfairness of Warren's trial and characterizes the court's action as vicious.

The proposed bill to compel weighing of coal before screening was given indorsement by unanimous vote.

JAMES BOYLE ON SOCIALISM.

James Boyle, who years ago was secretary to Governor McKinley and later consul to Liverpool, England, spoke to the Men's meeting at Trinity parish house last Sunday evening on the subject of Socialism. Mr. Boyle objected to Socialism. He said that Socialism was anti-religious and atheistic; that it sought to abolish the home and that it was impracticable and preposterous. Every statement he made has been heard and refuted by Socialists over and over again. He said that the "government" could not engage in the production of commodities. When question by Comrade C. E. Belcher he admitted that that "government" did produce commodities now; that the toilers of the nation had the ability to produce commodities for which they receive wages, but he dodged when asked if the same laborers could not do the same thing for a commonwealth. It was amusing to the Socialists present to see Boyle squirm under the merciless cross examination of Comrade Belcher. The hour was a pleasant one for all who attended.

Gems from Strickland.

WONDERFUL ADDRESS FROM THE SOCIALIST GIANT AT RED LION HALL.

"It is singular that as Warren goes to jail, Berger goes to Congress."

"The decision that imprisoned Warren came from a capitalistic court. The votes that elected Berger came from the workers."

"The same power that made Berger congressman can make Warren President."

"When Fred D. Warren goes to jail we go to jail."

"How glorious it would be if each of us could serve a parcel of his sentence. There would be plenty of volunteers."

"It doesn't hurt so much to go to jail, I've been in jail myself."

"The Appeal to Reason with the 'little man behind the paper' saved Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone."

"Warren goes to jail for a free press and free speech. He struck such a blow for the working class that the capitalists hate him."

"Whom the gods would destroy they would first made mad."

"Who will do the work under Socialism? We will; we are so used to it, only we will make things for ourselves."

"I am now invited to speak in churches and formerly I was invited to the police station."

The above are a few gems culled from the masterly address of Frederick G. Strickland at the Warren protest meeting held at Red Lion Hall last Monday evening and attended by 1000 people who cheered the utterances to the echo. The address was not so much a eulogy of Warren as it was an expose of the rottenness of the courts and the decay of the capitalistic system. Comrade Strickland was one of the original soap boxers, a pioneer in the cause of Socialism. He is in the prime of his strength and usefulness.

The meeting Monday night was presided over by Comrade D. J. Farrell and was one of the most enthusiastic rallies of the working class ever held here.

Comrade Strickland reviewed the history of the Colorado Labor troubles, the arrest and trials of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone, the test made by Comrade Warren in offering a reward for the return of William Taylor to the authorities in Kentucky and the arrest and conviction of Warren after a farce of a hearing. The speaker took up naturally the gospel of Socialism and scored Roosevelt for saying that Socialism made for a condition that would destroy the home and lower the standard of morality.

"Homes are in grave danger now," he said. "The divorce court gets a sixth of them and half more are broken up without the aid of the divorce court. We are not trying to destroy the home, we want to give woman a chance to clean up on society.

"The ministers are worried about the doubled standard of morality. That will continue as long as woman has to beg a crust of bread from a stingy man."

The following resolutions were adopted by the assembly:

WHEREAS, the United States appelate court has confirmed the decree of the federal court in the case of Fred D. Warren, and thereby consigned him to prison and to pay a heavy fine; and,

WHEREAS, the court in doing so has proved the contention that all laws are made and administered in the interests of the owning master classes, in order to rob, plunder and oppress the industrial classes, and strip them of all rights, liberties and powers by which they can protect their property, their homes, their persons and their lives; therefore,

Be it resolved, That we denounce the action of said federal courts in finding a verdict against Comrade Warren on the perjured testimony of an indicted murderer, Wm. Taylor, as arbitrary, unjust, despotic and damnable, making the court a stench in the nostrils of all decent people, a travesty on justice and an outrage on personal liberties; and,

Be it further resolved, that the Warren case is not an exception, but a glaring example of the tyranical action, outrageous injustice of venal, appointive and irresponsible courts; and,

Be it further resolved, That all governmental, legislative and judicial powers are inherent in the people and their prerogative is to make and unmake governments, legislatures, laws, and courts. In the long train of abuses, usurpations, bribery, boodling, crimes and corruptions of class courts making it incumbent on the people to exercise their inherent power and abolish all courts, technicalities and precedents and provide for the submission of all cases to impartial boards of arbitration in their stead.

A collection was taken, amounting to $53.30, and after the expenses of the meeting were paid, about $20.00 was sent to the striking garments workers in Chicago.

STATE SOCIALIST HEADQUARTERS NOTE.

Call for nomination for the purpose of electing seven women to comprise the Woman's National Committee, is now in progress.

Sheffrodsville with 21 members has been issued a charter. Wilmington with 20 members is admitted also, charter having been issued the 11th. These are important centers and will be of much advantage to our movement in the state.

Precinct East Carlisle, Lorain Co., gave the Socialist Party credit for only 4 votes whereas, there should have been 17 votes. 13 were straight votes and four were split votes. The Election Board not looking through Socialist spectacles forgot or overlooked the 13 straight votes, as the abstracts have all been certified too and are in the hands of the printer. The 13 extra votes from East Carlisle will only be an appendage and will be attached, but not printed. If this would be added now some Election Board officers might be accused of swearing falsely.

ONE WAY OF GETTING EVEN.

Pres. David Starr Jordan of Leland-Stanford University, who was born in Gainesville, N. Y., tell a story of an energetic Gainesville character, who was known as "Red Morgan."

"Red Morgan was one day hired to saw three and a half cords of wood at 50 cents a day. The farmer that hired Red was a longheaded skinflint. He said:

"Now, Red, you have no saw of your own, so I'll rent you my saw for this job, and all I'll charge you will be 12 cents a cord. Is that all right?"

"Oh, sure," said Red. "That's all right, and thank ye for rentin' the saw to me."

"So Red went to work and late in the afternoon he finished the job. Then he reported to the farmer for his pay.

"Let me see," said the farmer, "I owe you 50 cents for the day's work. You owe me for the rent of the saw (three twelves are 36 and the half of 12 is 6) you owe me 42 cents. Eight cents balance. Well, Red, old fellow, there doesn't seem much coming to you, does there?

Red studied the matter out in silence for awhile, frowning and muttering to himself. Then his face cleared, and he said:

"How onfornit it is, farmer, that we didn't hev half a cord more to saw, fur then we would' a 'come out jest square.'"

45 PER CENT PROFIT.

By Emanuel Julius.

New York City has just been the scene of a great strike. Thirteen thousands drivers and helpers in the employ of the express companies wanted better living conditions. As we all know—they were beaten.

Today, the expressmen are back at work with the semblance of an effective organization and with wages, hours of labor and conditions as intolerable as ever.

I well remember the tune fiddled by the officials of these great companies while the strike was on. "We cannot afford an increase in wages. Our profits are too small. We would be ruined." That is what they said over and over again.

NOW WE CAN POINT TO THE EXPRESS COMPANIES AND CALL THEM CONTEMPTIBLE LIARS.

The New York Evening Post, the most ably edited and conservative newspaper in the service of capitalism, has the following to say in its issue of Dec. 19:

"That the Adams Express company's business in New England in 1909 yielded a profit representing 45 per cent on the investment, including real estate, and excluding real estate, a net income of more than 33 per cent, came out in the course of a hearing before the Interstate Commerce commission."

These figures were worked out from the company's own exhibits.

What more need be said?

Justice Goff of New York has handed down an opinion that a strike which declared a closed shop is in restraint of trade and is therefore illegal. It is time for the people to reverse the judges.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER OF, BY AND FOR THE WORKERS

VOL. 1. No. 5. COLUMBUS, OHIO, SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1911. PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR. SINGLE COPIES, 3 CENTS.

The Gas Question

The dear people of Columbus are up against a serious proposition. The Columbus Light and Fuel Company and the Federal Gas Company ask a renewal of their franchises and demand 30 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for five years and thereafter 35 cents. There have been introduced in the city council ordinances fixing the price at 20 cents and at 25 cents. At the last session of the council an ordinance was introduced "asking" the gas companies to show by their books what it costs to deliver gas in Columbus. At the same session Councilman Welch declared:

"One of the grandest speeches ever made for the corporations. No lawyer in the city could be bought to make a better one. I disregard the advices of the law department and the mayor—they're playing politics," he urged.

This gives a tip to the dear, common people that should be heeded. Your supposed representatives are "playing politics." The mayoralty bee is buzzing in several bonnets. The public hearing at the council chamber Friday night of last week showed the position of the gas companies. Their attorney, Addison, said: "We offer here a fair proposition, the present rate of 30 cents for five more years, and then a raise of five cents, because we will have to buy our supplies wholesale then. The people of of Columbus can take it or leave it now, just as they please." The other attorney for the companies, Thomas H. Clark, declared that they were at the mercy of the Standard Oil Company which controls the gas fields of West Virginia. Clark said some other things, that were ventilated by those pests, the Socialists, who were present as usual.

This paper is not authorized to speak for the Socialist party, but it can say that Socialists stand for the common ownership of all such utilities as this gas supply. Pending such ownership the people should have, at least, 20 cent gas or a short time franchise. But Addison says "you can take it or leave it." Suppose we take the whole thing one of these days and run it ourselves. Addison arrogantly claims the protection of the courts. We will look after that part of the case some day.

Whom the Gods Would Destroy.

The delegates to the national convention of the United Mine Workers now in session in this city are mad and they have cause to be angry. Memorial Hall, the property of the people of Franklin county, was turned over to the miners for their use during their stay here. By resolution the convention on Wednesday afternoon invited Emma Goldman to deliver an address on "Labor" at 10 o'clock Thursday morning. Thereupon the county commissioners issued orders that Miss Goldman should not be allowed to speak in the hall and when the miners gathered Thursday morning they found all the doors of the building locked. The crowd went en masse to Red Lion hall which was filled to overflowing and Emma Goldman made her speech—a very tame one, indeed. With her peculiar views The Socialist has no sympathy and with anarchists we have no fellowship, but the denial of the right of free speech and the insult to the miners assembled in Columbus calls for condemnation. Memorial Hall is a public institution, dedicated to the use of the people. The miners are guests of the city, induced to come here by most flattering promises. Then a board of pin-headed officials lock the building assigned to our vistors because they asked Emma Goldman to address them. Miss Goldman enjoys such actions. It boosts her cause, and the commissioners of Franklin county have helped her greatly. They have also given a death blow to the prospect Columbus had of securing the national headquarters of the Mine Workers, 380,000 strong. Verily, "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad."

Somewhere near 2,200 voters have been indicted in Adams county for accepting bribes for casting their ballots. These men are being fined and disfranchised as rapidly as Judge Blair can hear their pleas of guilt. Up to the present time not a single bribe giver has been indicted. About 450 men testified before the grand jury as to the votes they bought and the price paid. They received fees and mileage for their appearance, while the poor, ignorant yokels who were bought like hogs on foot, were made to pay fines, lost the right of suffrage and are liable to go to the workhouse if they do not behave. This does not, to an average man, seem like justice. The bosses in Adams county, aided and abetted by the district and state leaders, started this political debauchery, and for thirty years or more have continued it. They deserve punishment. As usual in capitalistic courts the "Man Higher Up" goes clear and the lower offender bears the burden.

It is rumored that a paper is to be started in Columbus to combat Socialism and union labor. This is a sad blow to our cause but we will continue the publication of The Socialist for some time yet, just the same.

The Three-Cornered Man.

Yes, Brother Propriety, there was a time when the "three cornered man" was a conspicuous element in our Socialist movement. But even you, a careful-spoken gentleman, should remember that the fanatic has his place in human progress. He blazes the way through the trackless forest where timid souls, like you, are afraid to tread.

Every new movement, in its most pioneer days, attracts to itself all the cranks of every kind. But their very presence is an evidence that the new movement is genuine.

Here we must observe that the fanatic remains with the new movement ONLY during its pioneer days. As the new cause begins to triumph he moves on to other fields—Sometimes useful, sometimes not. But no genuine crank and endure victory. He cannot move with the mass. He is by nature, suspicious of a majority. Popularity in itself is an abomination to him. He seldom remains to enjoy the triumph for which he himself prepared the way.

So, Brother Propriety, you show yourself a poor historian to condemn us for the presence of the three cornered man. Neither will we exclude the fanatic in order to secure you, Brother P. The true test of tolerance is toleration of the intolerant. If a sprinkling of misfit people in a movement condemns it, then christianity itself, Brother P., should never have been accepted by respectable people at any time in its history, for it has always had at least a few fanatics in its camp.

No, No! Bro. P., accept our cause on its own merits. Is there anything fanatical about justice? Anything ~~[illegible]~~ equal opportunities to all?

Get in then! Never mind a three cornered man here and there!

Frederick Guy Strickland.

The Bosses Are Alarmed.

The Columbus Dispatch last Sunday morning voiced the alarm that prevails in old party circles over the rising tide of Socialism. Under a big heading which says: "Ross Must Step Down and Out is Boyd Ultimatum." "New Deal Wanted by Democats to Stem Tide Toward Socialist Party." "Bachman is Bogie Man," the Dispatch says:

"Unless the Democratic party in Columbus gets together right away by eliminating its old time leaders, and choosing in their place progressive men, I look for the electon of a Socialist mayor next fall," said M. L. Boyd, president of the Jefferson Democratic club, Saturday, in voicing the opinion that Democratic votes were slipping away to the Socialist party. Mr. Boyd recently was re-elected president of the Jefferson club for the fourth time. He was in the nomination fight for city solicitor in 1909, and has been one of the foremost leaders in the anti-Ross Democratic faction.

"The Demborats of the city have reason to be alarmed at the manner in which much of their strength is slipping away to the Socialists," said Mr. Boyd. "Whatever can be done should be done right away. I find that the greatest disaffection is on account of the leadership of James Ross and other men, who are associated with him. For Mr. Ross I have no present antipathy, but I believe that in justice to the Democratic cause he should step aside. With him as leader in the next mayoralty fight the Democrats haven't the ghost of a show, and any man who enters the fight will merely be led to slaughter."

"The statement of Mr. Boyd developed the fact that various other leading Democrats have expressed a fear of the Socialist vote, and have begun an organized effort to stem the reputed slipping away of Democratic votes, by holding mass-meetings of Democrats and debating with the Socialists the various questions at issue. Such debates between Democratic and Socialist speakers are being planned for the near future."

Verily, comrades, there is going to be some "doin's" in this town before Santa Claus comes again.

Columbus is now the "Storm Center of Socialism." The eyes of the comrades of the nation are directed this way. If you want to keep posted on how the battle is being waged here the best thing to do is to subscribe for The Socialist.

Organize! Organize! Organize!

Never before in the history of the world has it been so important as it is now for the workers to organize. Never before has such a host walked to the polls and voted for the interests of the toilers as at the last election. Over $700,000 in the United States, over 11,000 in Franklin county, Ohio, recorder their mandate for Socialism. There is evidence on every hand that the political bosses—both national and local—are frightened at the "menace of Socialist," as they term it. Those who are in touch with the Socialist movement know that the vote cast last fall was no spasmodic uprising. It was the result of continuous agitation on the part of tireless workers in the cause of humanity. There must be no relaxation of effort. What is needed in every county, city, village and township is the enrollment of every known Socialist in the local or ward branch. Tried and true comrades are needed to rally the forces in every precinct, so as to face the common enemy with a drilled and disciplined army of voters.

If you are a Socialist get into line with men and women who are laboring in the party organization.

Of course you have been used to the Republican and Democratic parties. You need no particular form to belong to them. All you have to do is to report to the bosses before the election, carry some torches, drink their cheap beer, smoke their scab cigars, shout yourself hoarse for the candidate and vote their ticket.

You can change as many times as you please and the old parties will welcome you just the same.

BUT THE SOCIALIST PARTY IS DIFFERENT.

When you join the Socialist party you join on principle and for life. You understand what you do and have a reason for doing it. You never change back to the old parties.

You have voted the Socialist ticket straight and you are a Socialist.

NOW GET INTO THE PARTY.

It means much for the party. If the 700,000 who voted the Socialist ticket joined the part at once and took a hand in the management and work of the party, we would have the capitalists on the run in no time.

For a Socialist is a worker. He helps deliver papers and leaflets. He gets the toilers to take Socialist papers and magazines. He hustles for new members. He puts pamphlets and books into the hands of his fellow workers. He contributes to the support of the party in every way.

He also pays regular dues to the party. For when you join the Socialist party you pledge yourself to give both of your time and money as far as you can.

The dues are generally 25 cents a month.

Through these 25 cents a month and our pledge of affiliation, you have joined the local where you live; you have come in to the county organization; you belong to the state organization; you are a part of the national movement, and you are directly connected with the great international body of workers who have banded themselves together to throw off the yoke of oppression and establish a world of peace and justice and brotherhood.

IF YOU UNDERSTOOD WHAT THIS MEANS YOU WOULD GET INTO THE PARTY TODAY.

We do not urge you, but if you are ready we welcome you.

And you need the comrades and their fellowship. You need the strength that they give, because you often get discouraged all alone. You must have the overwhelming joy that will come to you when you can say:

"Here I am. Here is my hand. I want the handclasp of comradeship all over the continent and of my fellow workers across the seas."

ORGANIZE! ORGANIZE! ORGANIZE!

The city headquarters of the Socialist party in Columbus are at 184 1-2 South High street. Elsewhere in this paper will be found a list of the ward branches with the time and place of meeting. Come in and join the Army of the Revolution.

Jimmy and The Janitor.

There was meeting at the First M. E. church last Monday evening which was advertised under the auspices of the Men's Club of that church and all men were invited. James Boyle was the speaker and he roundly denounced Socialism. He was not annoyed by any puzzling questions, for when some thirty Socialists sought admission at the door they were excluded by the janitor who informed them that the affair was a "Brotherhood meeting and Mr. Boyle was present as a guest." Jimmy gets weak kneed when the horrid Socialists are around to disprove his glaring perversions of the truth. Brace up, Boyle, the goblins will get you. A cause must be feeble that dreads the light of reason.

Councilman Baldridge has a plan to reconstruct the city of Columbus so as to pocket the Socialists in one ward. Comrades, that will be a mighty big ward, won't it?

Words of Wisdom From Comrade Tom Clifford.

ANALYZES THE RESULTS OF THE STATE ELECTION IN OHIO.

Editor of The Socialist: I had the pleasure of meeting Comrade E. H. Search, of Columbus, in Cleveland, a few days ago, and he asked me for a contribution to "The Socialist."

I gladly take this opportunity to congratulate the Comrades and the working class in general of Columbus on the magnificent vote cast for the Socialist Party at the last election. While it is doubtless true that comparatively few of these voters have grasped the revolutionary character of the Socialist movement, yet they voiced a vigorous protest against corporate power and greed, and it was one of the grandest manifestations of working-class solidarity this nation has witnessed in recent years. The workers of Columbus have been awakened to a realization of their helplessness under existing industrial conditions and the necessity of political action to secure even temporary relief. During the street railway strike the workers had ample demonstration of the absolute subserviency of the old party politicians to the interests of the capitalistic class when the rights of labor are involved. They discovered that Governor Harmon, when forced to declare his position, did not hesitate to promptly use his political power to buttress the economic advantage of the master class. The most obtuse plainly perceived that the man they had elected to SERVE ALL THE PEOPLE deserted them in the hour of their extremity and identified himself with the oppressors, a PART OF THE PEOPLE, and, in accord with the well-known law of economic determinism, used his political position to assist the masters in quelling the revolt of the slaves. HARMON SERVED HIS CLASS.

But the results were the reverse of expectations. Instead of the usual tame submission to the "powers that be," the workers transferred the fight to the political field, and there demonstrated what can be accomplished through united actions. I regret that Comrade Bachman was not elected to Congress, but hope that in 1912 he will be seated in the national legislative body.

This is my message to my fellow workers in Columbus! The street railway strike was not lost. No strike is lost that has made the workers realize that the only strike that will bring success is the strike at the ballot box. When the workers have learned this lesson THE STRIKE WILL HAVE JUST BEGUN.

I also congratulate the Comrades throughout the State on the splendid results of their labors during the campaign, as evidenced by the remarkable gains in both organized and unorganized localities. When I consider the many sacrifices entailed in the prosecution of the propaganda work, the voluntary offerings of men and women actuated by a lofty ideal, language is inadequate to express my appreciation of and admiration for the loyalty and devotion of my Comrades to the cause of humanity. In the midst of all the sordidness and selfishness of the wolfish competitive system, forgetting for the time the intensity of their own struggle for existence, the efforts of these noble men and women present the most sublime spectacle of all history. A movement supported by such enthusiasm and loyalty cannot fail.

We have every reason to anticipate ultimate victory—in the immediate future, for the signs of the times are both portentious and propitious. The workers, through an awakening realization of his deplorable industrial condition, is marshaling himself under the banner of revolt against the master class. His sense of equity is being quickened. His erstwhile political obliquity, which has ever obstructed his progress toward industrial freedom, is being superseded by a clever perception of his economic interests and the avenue through which they may be secured. Verily, he is beginning to hearken to the message Socialism is bringing to the workers of the world-salvation through class-conscious effort on the political field.

There must be no compromise with the enemy. Let our battle cry ever be: "The earth and the fullness thereof for the working class."

Yours for the Revolution.

TOM CLIFFORD.

CONVICT BANKER GETS COURTESIES.

Far be it from Nolan Gartner, who made false entries as cashier of the Kingston (O.) bank causing it to fail with a loss of $150,000 to its depositors, to spend his time in the pen's idlehouse with the other unemployed "cons."

The first day Gartner spent in the prison was in the idlehouse and he grew sick from the experience. So the officials are allowing him to stay in the visitors' pavilion, which is an unusual privilege for a new arrival.

Michael Hughes, who was arrested a few hours before Gartner, to serve two years from Summit county for the burglary, also "got sick of" the idle house conditions, but he still remains there.

All thinkers have, at times, rejected as absurd, propositions and ideas they afterwards found to be entirely sound.

Commission Goverment.

AN EXPOSE OF THE LATEST POLITICAL FALLACY PRESENTED TO THE PEOPLE.

Because there is no distinction between Republicans and Democrats in grafting, in hostility to Labor and in subserviency to the powers of plunder, the conclusion is drawn that all partisanship is bad.

Laws are being used in the name of reform that make it difficult or impossible to vote a party ticket.

A whole system of municipal government is being urged upon the basis of its nonpartisanship. The commission form of municipal government has as one of its fundamental principles that men and not parties are to be considered in elections. The "short ballot" and the absence of all political emblems is intended to compel the voter to abandon party lines and party principles.

The commission form of government is a confession of the bankruptcy of democracy in the service of capitalism. It is a surrender of the idea of popular government for the sake of a superficial efficiency in administration.

To be sure, the acts creating the commission form of government generally include provision for the initiative, referendum and recall; an effort to maintain the forms, while surrendering the spirit of popular government. But the federal courts in a test case in Kansas have declared these provisions unconstitutional when they do so interfere that they can be of value to the workers.

The commission form of government is an effort to escape from the inherent corruption of a system based upon robbery.

Its nonpartisanship is based upon the idea that the only political parties are those bound to capitalism. On that basis there is no partisanship. Lorimer went to Congress and Busse into the Chicago mayoralty alike upon Republican tickets by virtue of Democratic votes. No chemical analysis applicable to politics can distinguish the degree of subservience to the powers of capital that differentiate a Bailey of Texas from an Aldrich of Rhode Island.

Both parties have the same attitude towards labor. There's no choice between Alabama militia and Pennsylvania Cossacks in their ferocity toward strikers.

Republicans and Democrats in Congress can be distinguished only by their seats on the floor. They vote and work alike. Cannon's power as a Republican speaker is maintained by the Democratic vote of Tammany and of Roger Sullivan's man—McDermott from Chicago.

If these men were the only parties, then, indeed, we would already have nonpartisanship in fact, and we might as well recognise it in our election laws and municipal charters.

But because Republicans and Democrats are rivals for the favors of capitalism it does not follow that the day of political parties, of party loyalty and discipline and power has passed away.

REAL POLITICAL PARTIES REPRESENT ECONOMIC CLASSES.

There is no need of two parties to represent the same class. When the Republican and Democratic parties both try to represent the same class there is no partisanship. Political rivals for the favors of one plundering class become but bands of boodle-hunting pirates, combining for the hunt and quarreling only over the division of the spoils.

There is a real conflict in society between those who live by working and those who live by working the workers. There is a genuine conflict of interest between these two.

ONLY ONE PARTY IS NEEDED TO REPRESENT THE INTERESTS OF THE IDLERS.

This may be either the Republican or the Democratic party or a nonpartisan combination of these two.

ONE PARTY REPRESENTS THE INTERESTS OF THE WORKERS—THE SOCIALIST PARTY.

Between two such parties as these there can be no talk of nonpartisanship. They stand for opposite things:

One stands for the use of government, national, state and municipal, in the interests of those who live by ownership of property rights.

The other stands for the interests of those who produce all wealth.

This fundamental difference lies below all questions of individual merit—of good or bad men.

When men stand for principles they must be honest. When they stand for plunder they are apt to be dishonest.

The Socialist stands for a partisanship that represents his interests, for right principles as a basis of obtaining the right persons, for making democracy efficient instead of surrendering democracy in the hope of getting efficiency.

"The poor woman living in the bare and lonely room, cheerless and fireless, sewing night and day to keep starvation from a child, is slowly being eaten by her fellow cannibals. When I take into consideration the agony of civilized life the failures, the anxieties, the tears and withered hopes, the bitter realities, the hunger, the crime, the humiliation, the shame—I am almost forced to say that cannibalism, after all, is the most merciful form in which man has ever lived on fellow-man."

Resigns As Pastor Because a Socialist.

THE CHURCH FEARS TO OFFEND WEALTH AND IS UNTRUE TO CHRISTIANITY, SAYS THE REV. MR. LOUX.

MERIDEN, Conn., Jan. 16.—The Rev. Dubois H. Loux, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, at the morning services Sunday read his resignation to the congregation. Besides having embraced the doctrines of Socialism he has written a novel. He scored the church for being what he considered untrue to the principles of Christianity.

"If you will understand my terms," he continued, "I hold it without question that organized Christianity to-day is dissolute. It is playing fast and loose with the principles for which Christ died. It dare not be true. A church to-day is a social organization with religious doctrines that are congenial and undisturbing. Out of its necessities it feels that it must keep its ears to the ground to make sure that the world of wealth is not offended in it.

"For this reason, to be true to my ministry, I must stand outside the pale of pastorate that I may voice my protest purely. I have counted the cost. The doors of the churches will be closed to me. Our colleges could not afford to welcome me into a professor's chair. Business doors are also closed. For two months, while occupying this pulpit, I have been testing the fact. I am still knocking for some door to open where I may support my family, doing an honest work while speaking the message of an honest minister."

Dr. Loux was formerly the associate pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle of New York City, and in 1908 was a member of the evangelistic committee which carried on a religious campaign in that city.

SOCIALIST VOTE IN NATIONS OF THE WORLD.

The International Socialist headquarters has just published an interesting list of the number of Socialist votes in the various countries the world over. To these figures have been added the results of the latest elections:

Germany	3,250,000
France	1,100,000
United States	700,000
England	500,000
Austria	1,000,000
Belgium	500,000
Italy	339,000
Finland	337,000
Switzerland	100,000
Denmark	90,000
Norway	90,000
Holland	82,000
Sweden	75,000
Servia	50,000
Bulgaria	9,000
Argentine	6,000
Total	8,210,000

It has been impossible to secure figures from Russia and Australia, and definite figures from the Spanish elections are still lacking. It is known, however, that Pablo Iglesias was elected by 40,000 votes in the city of Madrid. There is a marked Socialist movement in Japan, Roumania and in various other countries, but taxation restrictions and other hindrances have kept the movement from developing.

The Socialists of the world are in greater numbers than the number of votes indicate, since in many countries the workers have not the right to vote. In Holland, half of the workers have no franchise. In Spain and Italy a great many more than half the number are deprived of the right, and even in democratic England several millions are shut out because of poverty.

Italian Socialists have captured the city of Milan—famous for its cathedral—and elected their entire ticket of twenty-five candidates, besides winning four seats in the provincial council. The vote stood: Socialists, 16,000; Constitutionalists, 7,000, and Radicals, 5,000. They have also been victorious in Brescia, Pavia, Bordighera, Valenza, Benevento, Viterbo and Pescia, besides numerous smaller places. While complete returns are yet wanting, the election has been as a whole exceedingly favorable to Socialism, while the Conservatives and Clericals have suffered great losses.

THE HYPNOTIC SLEEP.

Says a writer: "I attended a Socialist convention at Butler, Mo., the other day. After supper I was invited to attend a lecture on hypnotism. The professor is going to hypnotise a lot of fellows,' was the information volunteered by a traveling man. I could not see any use in spending fifty cents to see a lot of hypnotised men when I could see hundreds of them every day for nothing. Two-thirds of the American workingmen are under the hypnotic influence of capitalism. Socialism is gradually awakening them from their hypnotic sleep."

"Most of the donations from the wealthy only weaken the poor. Charity weakens manhood."

"Socialism does not mean the abolishment of all private property. What we must have is capital to be used in the production of more property in the interests of the people."

Notes From Wisconsin.

HOW SOCIALISTS ARE MAKING GOOD IN MILWAUKEE COUNTY.

The Social-Democratic County administration has not been in office two weeks in Milwaukee County, but it has already begun to make good.

At first sight, it may not appear that a Socialist Coroner can do anything for the working people. However, the new Social-Democratic coroner of Milwaukee County has already proved his value in this respect.

Since he entered on the duties of his office, three cases have been submitted to coroners' juries. In each of these, the Social-Democratic coroner by cross-examination brought out the fact that the deaths were caused by the negligence of the companies employing the victims.

One of these men was killed while putting out a fire in the plant of a gas and coke company. He became buried in the coal and his head was severed from his body by a steam shovel.

The company bought witnesses on their side, but no witness appeared for the unfortunate workman. Under a capitalist administration, the company would have had things all its own way. However, the Social-Democratic coroner and district attorney carefully cross-examined the company's witnesses. They finally brought out the fact that proper safe-guards were not furnished by the company, that there were no regular lights or signals, and that counter orders were issued by the foreman and superintendent, and that these conditions were the direct cause of the workman's death. The jury could not do otherwise than bring in a verdict charging the accident to the negligence of the company.

Under former administration, it must be remembered, such verdicts were very few and very far between.

Moreover, our Socialist coroner will establish in connection with the morgue a laboratory in which cases will be direct investigated by the coroner himself. This will mean the saving of thousands of dollars to the county which were formerly paid to outside physicians. But of far more importance than the saving is the fact that the laboratory will investigate the causes of the deaths, with a view to suggesting legislation for safeguards for workingmen.

The coroner's office is also considering the purchase of an automobile, so that when accidents occur the coroner can be first on the spot and get all evidence at first hand.

It is needless to say that the result of all this will be a good deal more care on the part of employers in the future. If they are obliged to pay damages for every workman killed through carelessness, the lives of working people will go up in the market.

The new Social-Democratic sheriff has also been showing the difference between the new regime and the old.

The former sheriff received from the county fourteen and a half cents for each meal furnished the prisoners in the jail. Some of the meals he gave these prisoners cost about three cents. It was a nice little revenue for the sheriff—but it did not fatten the prisoners.

The Social-Democratic sheriff has recommended to put a stop to this game. With the consent of the Social-Democratic supervisors, he has adopted a new system. The prisoners are now fed directly by the county. This will save the county 100 per cent of the expense, and it will give the prisoners much better fare.

Queer people, those Socialists! They are more interested in caring for the "downs and outs" than in making for their own pockets.

The new Social-Democratic deputy court clerks and deputy sheriffs were selected from the working class. They were taken from the shops and the factories. It appears, however, that they are thoroughly competent for their new duties. The judges—capitalistic judges, it must be remembered—admit that they are more than pleased with the way these new men are doing their work. Which is another proof, if proof were needed, that the working people are thoroughly capable of discharging all the various functions of government.

E. H. THOMAS,
State Secretary.

GOVERNOR HARMON'S ECONOMY.

The omission of the parade at his second inauguration by Governor Harmon is not a new thing. The last inauguration for a second term was that of Governor Nash, eight years ago. Who has plainer than he? One would think that Governor Harmon was the only person with sense if he did not have some knowledge of his own. These newspapers that are daily "tooting" the goodness and economy of the governor, forget his action a few months ago in having Columbus filled for days and weeks with thousands of soldiers—all the militia of the state.

It only requires a little effort for us to open our eyes to see and use our minds to keep from being fooled. Let us always be awake.

COMMON MAN.

"How many know" if there is another Socialist in the same block they are residents of? Why not convert your neighbors and get all who are Socialist to meet at some one's home and get acquainted.

Miners Adopt Warren Protest Resolutions.

REPRESENT 60,000 TOILERS WHO STAND FOR FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

The Ohio Miners who met in Columbus last week are class conscious wage-workers. Out of about 500 delegates, a member declares, fully two-thirds are Socialists. The Warren protest resolution which follows, shows that the miners are awake to the real situation:

We, the delegates representing 60,000 coal miners of the State of Ohio, in convention assembled, and 100,000 sympathisers, who stand for the principles of freedom of speech, freedom of the press, equality before the law and unhampered justice, offer the following protest:

Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone, members of the working class, were kidnapped in Denver, Colorado, and hurried by special train, manacled and heavily guarded, two thousand miles away to Boise, Idaho, by the officials of the capitalist class, there to be tried by perjured evidence for the murder of ex-Governor Stunenberg.

Ex-Governor Taylor was a fugitive from justice, having been indicted for the crime of murder by a grand jury in his own native state of Kentucky. He fled to Indianapolis, Indiana, and the state authorities refused to honor a requisition for his return to the state officers of Kentucky, although they offered a reward of $100,000 for his return.

The Supreme Court held the kidnapping of the labor leaders was legal, yet when Fred D. Warren, a member of the working class and a champion of the working class interests offered a reward of $1,000 for the arrest of ex-Governor Taylor to the authorities of Kentucky, his arrest and conviction followed. Warren appealed his case, and after a delay of over two years, and the cost of frequent postponements, Judge Pollock's sentence of six months in jail and a fine of $1,000 was sustained.

We hereby most emphatically protest against the unfair and unjust methods of the trial. We protest against the unjust and unprecedented sentence and the viciousness of the decision. When Fred D. Warren goes to jail on the 31st day of January, 1911, the whole working class goes with him.

We protest against the rank partiality that sanctions the kidnapping of innocent workingmen and the punishment of a working man by a fine and imprisonment for offering a reward for the kidnapping of a capitalist politician who was under indictment for murder.

We believe the time has fully come for the working people to come together for their own defense, and marshal a host of right thinking and fair just minded men with enlightened minds and awakened consciences, who will build a palace of justice, freedom, equality and brotherhood.

COMRADE ANNA K. STORCK STIRRING THINGS AT LORAIN.

Comrade Anna K. Storck, wife of State Secretary Storck, is evidently a live member of the school board at Lorain. She was elected as a Socialist and is fighting for the working class all the time. The following from a recent issue of the Lorain Times-Herald shows that Comrade Storck is very much alive:

Armed with nineteen and a half feet of free text book petitions, Mrs. George Storck, lady member of the board of education, set sail in a new campaign to secure free books at the meeting of the board of education last evening. Mrs. Storck went after the members hammer and tongs and informed them that she intended to keep up the fight for free books until she won.

"You will either adopt free text books or lose the $95,000 bond issue for additions to school buildings to be submitted to the voters", said Mrs. Storck. Mrs. Storck seemed to have an abundant supply of petitions and here she produced a second petition with 28 signers who informed the board that unless free text books were adopted in the schools immediately they would work for the defeat of the bond issue.

And right here the members of the board balked. "We will not be threatened by any bunch like that you have on the petition," they said. "Don't think for a minute that the Socialists can threaten me," said John Jelly.

"I represent the people," said Mrs. Storck, "and you will find that unless you adopt free text books the bond issue will never carry." "You don't represent the people any more than I do," reported Jelly. "I represent the working class or 90 per cent of the people in Lorain," replied Mrs. Storck, "while you represent only 10 per cent of the moneyed class. "It's not so," came back Jelly.

It might be mentioned that the educators became real excited in conducting their debate. They pounded the table so hard that Clerk Bruell became alarmed and had visions of a force of carpenters making repairs this morning. They shouted, turned red in the face and diffused oratory that would make the shade of Demosthenes blush with shame. They sure did go some.

Employers Trick To Escape Liability.

JOKER MAY ENABLE THEM TO PLACE RISKS ON WORKMEN.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Jan. 15. — In an effort to draw the teeth out of the Norris employers' liability act, passed at the last session of the legislature, the Employers' Association of Cleveland last week caused notices to be posted in factories requiring employes to report all defects in machinery under penalty of being presumed before the law to assume the risk from such defects.

Thousands of employes were also compelled to sign agreements which, union officials say, practically amount to releases in case of injury.

The section on which the employers depend is the latter part of No. 6245, which excuses the employer from liability where "by the terms of his employment it is expressly made the duty of the employe to report such violations (defects) to the employer."

The supposed joker was put in the Norris bill by Attorney Jay P. Dawley, who drafted the notices and agreements for the Employers' Association.

"The notices are only in accordance with the requirements of the Norris bill which specifies that employes shall notify employers of defects in machinery," Dawley said.

Dawley admitted that if a laborer did not live up to his agreement he would forfeit his right to damage action in case of injury.

THE WEB OF LAW.

The average American citizen is subject to 16,000 laws.

Some patient crank has counted them.

Lawyers make laws. They make it their business to get into legislatures, and from time out of memory they have ruled there. Lawyers interpret laws. All judges are lawyers. Incidentally many lawyers execute laws. Nineteen of our 27 presidents were lawyers.

Lawyers not only make laws but they make a living from the breaking of them—most by others, but sometimes by themselves. Lawyers that are also judges have been known to prosper through the misinterpretation of laws.

Having hedged us about with the maze of a myriad and a half statutes, all written in words intelligible to nobody but lawyers, the lawyers apply these laws in the light of an astonishing legal principle that they have evolved, to the effect that "ignorance of the law a no excuse."

SIXTEEN THOUSAND LAWS AND IGNORANCE NO EXCUSE FOR BREAKING THE LEAST OF THEM!

Get it? See how they catch us going and coming?

The short of it is that the game of law is a sure thing game—like the bucket shop business. The laweyr, like the broker, is the only one in the game who stands to win.—Columbus Citizen.

THE HOME DESTROYERS.

The press has made the statement that 300,000 families in the city of Chicago are on the verge of starvation, and yet the same press made known to its readers that a gentleman and three ladies occupying a box at grand opera in the same city wore clothes and jewels valued at $18,000.

These conditions are produced under the capitalist system, and these are the conditions which "destroy the home."—Miners' Magazine.

Irving W. Childs, of New York, who inherited $1,250,000 several years ago, has already lost $500,000 in stock speculation. He never did a day's useful work in his life, has been married and divorced in typical capitalist style, as is the rule with rich "never works." Inherited money is a curse. Every child should be educated and compelled to earn its own living. In no other way can real manhood be developed.

The secretary of war wants aeroplanes, more officers and artillery. Workingmen pay all these bills. According to capitalist papers, we have been blessed with unparalled prosperity and should not object to more money for implements of legal murder. Anyway, there are too many workingmen, and why should they not kill each other off? It also makes business good—for the capitalists.

In the Newark, N. J., fire, where 25 girls lost their lives, the stair doors were kept locked and could not be opened until the firemen arrived, too late to save the girls. It was only a violation of the laws, and no one will be punished.

"The man who gives should be honored, not the man who gets. The servant girl should be honored, not her idle mistress. The bootblack should be honored, not the man who gets the shine."

"The time must come when the people must own the capital. Labor must not be paid wages but what labor creates. The conditions must be gotten right. When children go to school hungry they can't learn."

News From the National Socialist Headquarters.

At the city election held the 14th inst., in Medford, Oregon, Comrade C. H. Miller was elected councilman of the third ward by a plurality of 39 votes. H. H. Wolter, Socialist candidate for mayor, received 338 votes. Two years ago our candidate received but 34 votes.

The Polish Section of the Socialist Party respectfully requests State Secretaries and organizers to inform it of places or localities where Polish locals may be organized. Two Polish organizers will shortly be routed by the section. Information as above requested should be addressed to H. Ciszewiski, 1038 Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

To the Editor of the Appeal:

At a meeting of my branch held last evening the following resolution was moved and carried unanimously:

"The Deptford (London) branch of the Social-Democratic Party sends fraternal greetings to the American Socialist Party and desires to express its sympathy with Comrade Fred Warren in having been the victim of such gross injustice at the hands of Capitalistic agents; but heartily congratulates him and all connected, upon the courageous, self-sacrificing battle they are putting up against the forces of Capitalism, and sincerely hopes that their efforts will arouse in the proletariat of America, a recognization of its interest, and succeed in inducing it to range itself on the side of Socialism, by which alone it can gain its emancipation."

"This resolution I was instructed to forward you and I shall be glad if you will see that it reaches our Comrade Warren and the Headquarters of the Socialist Party."

(Signed) FRED C. POPE,
Secretary.

The State Convention of the Socialist Party of Indiana will be held in Kokomo, Saturday and Sunday, January 28 and 29, 1911.

By a recent referendum in North Dakota, Comrade Arthur LeSueur, Minot, was elected a member of the National Committee for two years.

Comrade Branstetter, State Secretary of Oklahoma, reports: "The annual state convention of the Socialist Party of Oklahoma was held Oklahoma City, December 29th, 30th and 31st. It was the most enthusiastic, constructive and successful convention ever held in this state. A feature of the convention was a monster meeting addressed by Comrade Berger, at which we filled the largest auditorium in the town with paid admissions, something which has seldom been accomplished by either of the old parties with their most distinguished representatives, when admission was free. The convention initiated a constitutional amendment re-establishing the dues system, which was abolished last year, "made arangements for a systematic, state-wide distribution of literature, and for a great improvement in the system and effectiveness of our entire work and organization."

Comrade James H. Maurer, member of the State Legislature of Pennsylvania, is going after the state constabulary, better known as the Cossacks. Ex-Governor Pennypacker, the father of this law, regarding the same wrote to the American Federation of Labor Convention in Pittsburg in 1905, the following: "It is a satisfaction to me.....that at my own suggestion a law was passed creating the constabulary, which will, in time, it is hoped make the coal and iron police unnecessary."

Certainly the capitalists were relieved of the expense of maintaining private police and at state expense have the service of the Cossacks free. This is the great service rendered by a capitalist governor to the working class of Pennsylvania. The advocates of the Cossacks now justify their existence on the plea of the protection given to the farmer's hen coop.

Comrade Maurer has circulated among trade unions and all radical organizations a form blank containing questions as to the value of the services rendered by the constabulary and will have some rock bottom facts to present for the consideration of the members of the Legislature.

The following is from a letter by the secretary of Local Deadwood, Alaska, to explain why the local does not meet oftener than once a month:

"Some of our members live great distances from our meeting place, two at seventy odd miles, some at thirty, and while a few live near, the majority have to walk from two to eight miles. I had to cross a divide in a storm with the thermometer at thirty below zero to attend this meeting, a distance of at least eight miles. Even those who have no range of mountains to cross have to walk over the glaciers forming in the creek, always with danger of getting wet feet and the possible chance of freezing them. My intention in mentioning these things is not to show up our zeal—that would only bring down the wrath of the local on my bald head—but to enable you to see conditions as they exists here and overlook any little irregularities in our reports."

The big gains in membership in the Socialist Party in the past have been recorded in the presidential election years. The membership gain in 1904 over the preceeding year was 4,786. In 1908 the gain over the preceeding year was 13,451. For the year 1910, just closed, the gain over the preceeding year was 16,531. In other words, the average membership, based upon the payment of a full year's dues by each, on January 1, 1910, numbered 41,478 and on December 31st, upon the same basis, numbered 58,011.

Blanks for the nomination of candidates for members of the Woman's National Committee have been sent in bulk to the respective State Secretaries, secretaries of locals in unorganized states and to national members at large. All nominations must be sent to the National Secretary and must reach the National Office on or before February 14th.

The National Executive Committee is now voting upon a motion by Comrade Hunter, providing for the issuance of leaflets upon the following subjects: "A Municipal Program," and "A Legislative Program."

Local Philadelphia, Pa., is making special efforts to reach organized labor, and one of their circulars contains the following: "Every wage-worker in the party must be up and doing. No union meeting should be miss. The members should be kept supplied with literature and urged to subscribe to Socialist papers. The immediate result will be a stronger, better organized labor union movement and a larger, more active Socialist Party. The time to start is right now."

The Finnish Socialist local of Bisbee, Arizona, dedicated their new thousand dollar hall with a three days celebration on December 24, 25 and 26.

The Question Box.

Would the Socialist common-wealth abolish the right of the Judiciary, to pass on the constitutionality or the unconstitutionality of the laws passed by the legislature or other law-making bodies?—J. A. R.

The Socialist conception of the co-operative commonwealth is a pure democracy in which the will of the majority is the supreme law. In a real democracy, which has never to this time existed in state or national government, though numerous imitations have been so called, the will of the majority must not only determine the making of laws, but it also say the final word in the interpretation and enforcement of all laws, rules and regulations.

It is evident from the foregoing that society under Socialism would never permit a judge or a court, to set aside the will of the majority as expressed in legal enactments. A court that has the power to set aside and annul the acts of a legislature is essentially aristocratic, though little more so than our so-called representative legislatures. Legislatures, or delegated bodies of lawmakers may be utilized in a democracy to formulate, or enact measures, but if the society to be governed by its enactments is entitled to be called democratic it will retain the right to accept or reject by majority vote, the committee-like work of the delegated body. And the will of the majority so expressed must be final.

It is one of the fictions of the present government of the United States that it is composed of three departments; the legislative or law-making department; the judicial or law interpreting department, and the executive or law-enforcing department. This fiction has resulted in the same absurdity with which the old Roman triumvirate and the French consulate resolved themselves into one-man rule. As Bonaparte made short work of the two consuls associated with him, so has the judiciary and the executive united in practically annuling the legislative functions in the govenment of the United States.

To get an idea of how the executive judicial and legislative power can be retained in the hands of the people, and be exercised by them, you should study the Initiative, Referendum and the Imperative Mandate, or Recall. The Initiative is a proposed provision by which a percentage of voters may have any measure submitted to popular vote and by a majority, accepted or rejected.

The Referendum is a proposed provision by which all measures, whether initiated by petitions, or by a legislative body, may be accepted or rejected by a majority vote. The Imperative Mandate, or Recall is a proposed provision by which any executive officer may be removed and a successor elected at any time that his acts prove unsatisfactory to the majority.

Though it is not for us to say what may be done with reference to details in the Socialist regime, it is likely that measures similar to these will be in force, and they preclude the possibility of either a judge or a president absorbing the authority of others, or of concentrating power in individual hands to the detriment of the many as is done under the present regime of government.

The answer to your question applies not only to ministers and missionaries, but to any other person that individuals in the co-operative commonwealth may choose to support that they may do some special work. Money is now a means of support only as it can be exchanged for things to eat, wear and provide place of shelter, etc. People do not live upon money, but upon the things that money buys. If something else takes the place of money for purposes of purchase, money can be dispensed with just as the sickle was displaced by the scythe and the scythe by the harvester. If money is dispensed with under Socialism it will be because something else can be used for exchange purposes to greater advantage.

Money is nothing more or less than a given quantity of gold with a government stamp upon it to assure its genuineness. The demand for money is simply a demand for gold, and the coinage of gold is a matter of convenience; as are the different forms of paper currency that circulates in lieu of the metal. The abolishment of money will not abolish gold, which will be available for purposes of barter—where it is needed.

Cattle were once used as money because of the facility by which they could be transferred from one to another. In primitive times this cattle money possessed peculiar advantages because it was on legs, but with improved facilities for transportation afforded by wheeled vehicles this advantage of cattle money on legs was not as great as the more condensed form of gold, in which form a great quantity of wealth can be reduced to small weight and size.

Gold and cattle are both commodities in the same sense that every useful thing produced for exchange is a commodity. If a bushel of wheat is worth a dollar, it is equally true that the amount of gold in a dollar is worth a bushel of wheat. So when the coinage of gold is abolished we can yet buy gold, if necessary, by the exchange of other commodities for it.

Even now gold is not found to be as convenient for the practical purposes of trade as is the paper currency, bank checks, and various kinds of commercial paper.

When people become sane enough to recognise the fact that HUMAN LABOR, and not gold, is the true basis of value they will no doubt use labor-checks with which they can buy gold, or any other form of exchangeable wealth.

If it, then, becomes desirable to support someone doing a special work, like preaching the gospel, in a land where nothing but gold will be accepted, those who wish to contribute to that end an use their labor-hecks to buy the gold and forward the metal to where it is needed.

You should read some standard work of Socialist economics like Marx's "Capital," which will make the nature of money clear to you.

WORKING CLASS SLAVERY.

For you workingmen to supply yourselves and wives and children with food and fuel and raiment and shelter, you have got to have money to get those things, haven't you? In order to get money, you workingmen have got to have wages haven't you? In order to get wages, you working have got to have jobs, haven't you? Now, do you workingmen own your jobs, or does the man who owns the shop own your jobs? All of you who think you own your jobs, go up to your boss tomorrow morning and tell him that job is YOUR job and not his job—and see how long it is your job. The man who owns the shop owns the jobs. But you can't live without jobs. And you don't own your jobs. And as long as another man owns that thing without which you can't live, that other man owns you. And if another man owns you, you are not free men, you are that other man's slaves, I care not what flag floats over you. Now, we Socialists propose that you men who do the world's work shall own the shops and mills and mines and tools and things with which you work and then you will be free men, and you will never be free men until that time.—Benjamin Hanford.

Miners' Welcome.

A real live industrial organization is meeting in our city. It's an organization that fights to win, because the United Mine Workers of America control all the men engaged in the mining of coal.

When they go into a struggle for existence they fight as one man. Cheap "craft dignity" is unknown to the miners, for an injury to one of their members is the concern of all.

Experience has taught them that the workers must forget creed, class and nationality when industrial strife is at hand. It has learnt to realize that that these lines of dissension are created by the master class to keep the workers divided.

Some day the whole labor movement must exist along these lines.

For our future welfare depends absolutely upon class solidity. Brethren, we welcome you to our city and we hope that our exemplified spirit of devotion to the cause of real brotherhood will move us forward in closer unity and broader judgment of the things that concern future posterity.

Through the labor unions wages have been raised; better food, clothing and shelter have been secured for the workers; poverty, crime and pauperism have diminished. More education for the workers and children, and every right the American workingmen possesses was won by organizations, and not one was obtained by criticising trade unions.

"IT IS TO LAUGH."

The Daily News last week published a column of political "dope" in which, among other things, it says:

"A fusion is now being planned between the leaders of the Democratic and Republican parties. The possibility of a Socialist victory in the event of a many angled contest is responsible for this movement. Republican leaders declare that they will not support Mayor Marshall for re-nomination because of the general dissatisfaction with his administration. George Harper at present has undeniably the lead of all Republican candidates for the mayoralty nomination. He has even been talked of as the fusion candidate to beat Marshall and the Socialist party.

"Three candidates have been suggested as possibilities for the Socialist nomination. They are J. L. Bachman, who was a candidate for congressman on the Socialist ticket in the recent election; Charles Belcher, who has been prominent as a Socialist leader, and Dr. D. R. Kinsel. Belcher is probably the most favored of the Socialist candidates and other party leaders say he would be a most formidable opponent. In the event that he would decide to run for the office of mayor it is stated by the party managers that J. L. Bachman would aspire to the office of city solicitor. This he is said to prefer to the office of mayor."

All of this is amusing to Socialists. Those folks who write political dope for the capitalistic papers ought to attend a few of the business meetings of the Socialist party branches. We waste no time in framing up "slates" and the man who springs anything like that always is "cast into outer darkness." Neither do our papers boost candidates for nominations nor do we allow old party papers to name our ticket. When the time comes the Socialists of Columbus will place a ticket in the field.

The political bosses in this cty are "seein' things" very early. They will have the regular, old delirium tremens before long.

IS IT POSSIBLE ?

Dr. Gladden preached last Sunday morning on the theme "The Shame of the State," with Adams county as a horrible example. The Doctor, in the course of his remarks, said:

"There are reasons for believing that there is a considerable venal vote in Franklin county, and I daresay there are men in the county who know just where that vote is and what it costs to buy it and how to go after it and get it to the polls. I do not know who these men are; do any of you? What have you to say about the men who are possessors of such guilty knowledge? They would not have gained this knowledge if they did not intend to use it. Do you think that such men are desirable citizens and safe political leaders?"

It seems impossible to even suspect such a thing as that Franklin county politicians would buy votes. The saintly (?) character of the leaders of the Republican and Democratic parties in this municipal paradise forbids such a thought. Anyhow if they do buy votes, the scale is lower than in Adams county. Wonder if the grand jury with that noble military leader, Captain Harold Bush, will get time to probe the vote-buying business? Nay! Nay! The Railway and Light Company has more important business for the courts.

Is the Constitution Sacred? Is the Supreme Court Sacred?

Non-Socialist are apparently horrified by the Socialist demand for a restriction or abolition of much of the power of the Supreme Court; they are shocked by criticism of the Constitution itself. At first glance such doctrines may seem almost anarchistic. From our earliest childhood we have been taught to venerate the Supreme Court as the preserver of our most sacred rights and the Constitution as the bulwark of our most cherished liberties. Away back in the distance we remember, rather vaguely it is true, yet we remember studying about the tyrant John and the famous Magna Charta, of the Petition of Rights and of the Habeas Corpus Acts; and how the imposing structure of American liberties was afterwards founded on these royal grants. How our very souls were thrilled when we read how our ancestors wrung from the English rulers the privileges later brought to the American Colonies, the privileges finally incorporated into "the greatest government document of all times, the Constitution of the United States!" Alas, the little children, how blind their patriotism!

When the colonies emerged from the War of Revolution, civil war stared them in the face. Thirteen free and sovereign states lately fighting against the tyranny of a common enemy, were now about to fight each other. Geographically, religiously, politically, disunion seemed inevitable. There seemed to be no tie to bind the states together, now that the common fear was removed. There was indeed the slight bonds of a league of friendship, the Confederation, but how weak a tie! Jealousies, inharmonies, misunderstandings prevailed. Washington, Jefferson, Hamilton and others saw the need of prompt action. A constitutional convention was called. May praise and thanks be given to those who were instrumental in framing and adopting the constitution for it saved the thirteen states from almost sure disunion and probable anarchy. The Constitution as adopted was the best document of the sort possible at that time. It was passed almost in a frenzy of haste to save the Colonies from bankruptcy, civil strifes, utter ruination. It was a compromise and suited no one. Yet the people saw the urgent need of some sort of government and all consented to yield a little. The Constitution as finally adopted, was then a mutual concession by thirteen radically different and indifferent states.

There were about 4,000,000 people in the country at that time; there are over 90,000,000 now. Shall we say that the compromise agreement of that few shall forever be the ruler of our destines? Let us not make light of the greatness of the Constitution for it has made us what we are. Also let us not kneel at the shrine of our ancestors, as the heathen Chinese. Let us recognize the good in the past, yet let us not give up the struggle for progress.

What did Jefferson and Hamilton know of steamboats and railroads, of autos and aeroplanes? What did they know of trusts and monopolies, of the immensity of our interested and foreign commerce, of an American nation stretching from ocean to ocean and second only to England as a naval power, of millions a year for warships, of open shops, closed shops and child labor? It is trite to say times have changed and yet our 90,000,000 people are bound hand and foot and gagged as it were by 4,000,000 people who lived over a hundred years ago.

If the interpretation of the Constitution of 1789 were left to all the people, possibly by a liberal construction it would be expanded to meet our present needs. But it is not so. All the legislation of this country is subject directly to the opinion of nine men who are appointed by the president. The people may pass a law concerning an auto or an aeroplane, but if it is the opinion of five out of the nine men appointed by the president that that law is inconsistent with some clause of a document written by men who never dreamed of autos or aeroplanes, the 90,000,000 people of the present are helpless.

The constitutionality of the power of the Supreme Court to declare the will of the people void is questionable. Did the people of the thirteen colonies intend such an absurdity? No, they probably considered themselves wise enough to know what laws they desired. When shall we cast off the shackles unconsciously forged by them?

THE STONECUTTERS' UNION.

The class that work the workers prate of the high wages paid to the building crafts. They seem to forget the effect of bad weather on the pay check and the body, when landlords figure rent, they add up the cost of repairs taxes, etc., and the sum total the tenant pays as rent. And so with the wage worker in his demand for a living wage. What is good for the master is good for the man."

Socialism Summarized.

By H. M. Hyndman.

Socialism is a conscious endeavor to substitute organized co-operation for existence in place of the present anarchical competition for existence, or the system of social organization calculated to bring this about. This definition, though it gives, perhaps, adequate expression to the active and practical side of Socialism, leaves out of account altogether its theoretical basis. From this point of view, Socialism is an attempt to lay the foundation of a real science of sociology, which shall enable mankind, by thoroughly understanding their past and present, to comprehend, and thus, within limits, to control the movement and development of their own society in the near future. Consequently Socialism in its wide sense is not, as is still commonly thought, a mere aspiration for a better state of society, still less only a series of proposals to mitigate the evils from the present social arrangements.

Modern scientific Socialism essays to give an intelligible explanation of the growth of human society, and to show that as each step in the long course of development from the institution of private property, through chattel slavery, serfdom, and wagedom, was inevitable, so the next step from capitalism to Socialism is also inevitable.

The object which Socialists have in view is that this, the final transformation, should be made consciously by an organized, educated and intelligent people, instead of unconsciously, and therefore tempestuously, by groups of discontented, embittered and ignorant workers. Agitation against the injustice of the present system of production, therefore, is only valuable so far as it educates men and women to appreciate the tendency of the time, and leads them to organise for the attainment of the definite end which the evolution of economic forms has made ready. Whether the great change will be brought about peaceably or forcibly has no bearing upon Socialism in itself, but depends upon the stage of development which has been reached in each civilised country, and the attitude which the dominant class may adopt in relation to the demands which the economic situation impels the producing class to make.

With the establishment of national and eventually of international Socialism, mankind resumes the definite control over the means and instruments of production, and masters them henceforward for all time instead of being mastered by them. By such cooperative industry, whose power over nature is increased by each fresh invention and discovery, a carapace of repression is lifted from the faculties of each individual, and wealth being made plentiful as water by light, wholesome labor, all freely contribute to increase their own happiness as well as that of their fellows. Human nature assumes a new and higher character in a society in which surroundings are such that life is not, as today, a constant struggle against the pressure of want and the temptations of misery. Instead of the personal, limited, introspective, individual ethic is the social, altruistic, broad ethic, in which the duty toward society necessarily involves the highest duty toward a man's self. Woman, relieved of economic and social subjugation, will assume her place as the social equal of man.

So far, therefore, from individual initiative and personal freedom in the highest sense being limited and stunted, human beings will have the opportunity for attaining to a level of physical, moral, and mental development such as the world has never seen. The golden age of society is, indeed, not in the past, but in the future.

IS ORGANIZED LABOR A TOOL OR A FOOL?

We wonder whether our City Council would send for a barber, instead of a doctor, were they to be taken sick. We have reasons to believe it would be the doctor. Yet it is not strange, that considering that one of the councilmen, is an expert electrical worker, that the president of the council would ignore his service and appoint him on a committee to secure passage rates for his wealthy associates to tour Europe, while they themselves discuss, how many more citizens ought to be killed by fallen electrical wires, before the Big Interests be compelled to put their wires underground.

Of course MR. BIG INTEREST would object to a member of ORGANIZED LABOR being placed upon the committee whereby something might be done for all the people.

Wake up and vote for your own interest, workers!

THE ARCHBISHOP AND THE PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER.

Taken from the Catholic Columbian: Archbishop Glennon looks upon the professional soldier as a parasite on the community.

"He is a hired assassin, killing men at so much per head," declares his grace at St. Louis. "His gold lace, epaulets, and tinsel signify nothing but the fact that he is living on public revenues and doing little or nothing for the community. The professional soldier deserves no admiration, and is not one who would be held up as an ideal man."

The man who makes war his life work, says the Archbishop, has not in his heart the spirit of Christianity. War among civilized nations is a barbarous anachronism.

We wonder what the venerable gentleman would say if he saw a tin soldier fighting for blood on a GRAND JURY.

THE TAILORS.

The Columbus Journeymen Tailors Union have a committee at work preparing for a label campaign. Renewed efforts are being put forward to increase the membership and so far good results have been achieved. Demand the label and help abolish the SWEAT SHOP. This extract from their journal gives good advice to all.

Do you prefer progress or stagnation? Of course you want progress, everyone with an ounce of common sense and the least bit of ambition in his make up wants it. We want to kindle that old fire of desire and determination within the breast of every tailor to increase the efficiency of the Journeymen Tailors' Union of America on this continent. Organization is the watchword of the hour. The general interest among our members must be enthused, therefore action is absolutely necessary. What can your local do along that line? Well, at every meeting a speaker from some local union or trades council in your city will help some. A dance where the entire membership can bring their wives, children and sweethearts and friends will help some more. A card party with a little refreshments, ice cream and cake, will do wonders. A concert in which the local talent is brought forth after which enjoy a little refreshments will arouse a great deal of interest and pride. A theatre party will bring the entire membership and their friends together for an enjoyable evening, will necessitate your local to repeat an evening on the same order. Develop the social side of your union and you will be surprised at the result. What else can you do?

Here is some more. Be sure to join the Central Labor Union or Trades Council of your city or town. Elect some live delegates who are not afraid to open their mouths. Let the trade unionists in your locality know that the tailors' union is a live wire. Create a demand for our label and all labels. Don't be an icicle in the labor movement. Come out of your shell and do things, even if you have to start a scrap. Do not forget also that you should join the State Federations. Get acquainted with the movement and delegates at their convention. It will do you good. In other words, get out of your Rip Van Winkle sleep and get busy. Pull; if you can't pull push, and if you can't push get out of the way for the cars will surely run over you if you don't. Forward, all together for a live up-to-date organization.

WE DARE THEM TO REPEAL THE WERTZ LAW.

Every time the master-class meet at the banquet they always shed a few crocodile tears because the convicts at the penitentiary are liable to be idle.

Don't think for one minute they are interested in the prisoners welfare. It's a question being able to secure an able-bodied man, labeled, INFIRM for sixty cents a day.

Why don't they interest themselves in the unemployed free labor question?

There is a growing and well founded feeling that many of our prisons are being conducted not so much to reform the inmates as they are to exploit the labor of the unfortunate convicts and enrich private contractors and manufacturers of prison made goods. The twentieth annual report of the United States labor commissioner shows that in 1904 there were 51,172 convicts employed in producing $24,276,205 of goods that were placed upon the market in competition with free labor and free factories.

Our penal institutions are for protection of society by confining prisoners to prevent further misdeeds and to make better citizens by training them and strenghtening their weak, diseased, vicious or otherwise defective natures. It is the purpose of the law that all prisoners be discharged as stronger and better men, equipped to battle with the world more effectively.

Any system that weakens the arm, dwarfs the mind or poisons the soul is a gross perversion of our penal system. Prisoners must be employed in some honest and productive service. They were self-supporting before incarceration and to continue in their old, or kindred lines of employment would cause no disturbance of the industrial conditions. In their free life they raised their own food, built their own houses, made the roads, drained the swamps, felled the forests and performed other useful servic. They worked at diversified employment, mostly in the open air.

The modern prison contract system confines men in their cells or stuffy factories at work which many do not like and which they will not follow when free, producing goods for firms or corporations who pay from 20 to 75 cents a day for their labor, to make goods that will be placed on the markets on terms that reduce prices of articles made by free labor below reasonable rates and yet yield an enormous profit to the prison contractor, who not only gets his labor cheap but has his factory furnished him free, with heat and power thrown in for good measure.

This disturbance of the market in the garment line, for instance, brings down the wages of the shop girl to a starvation basis, reduces the wages of the molder, cabinet maker and others so low that the children must be taken from school and placed at work at such early ages that their efficiency as citizens is seriously imperiled.—Henry W. Bullock, of the Indianapolis Bar.

WARN FOREIGNERS IN THE WORKSHOPS.

"Stop, Look, Listen." This familiar sign could be seen at a railroad crossing and yet many people have been killed in view of the sign post. But in the last few years the grade crossing has taken the place of the sign post. Grade crossings cost more than sign posts. But we are beginning to realize that LIFE is MORE VALUABLE than PROPERTY.

Our State Inspector of Workshops and Factories proposes to have signs printed in foreign languages, placed in factories where foreigners are employed, to warn them of danger. This move reminds us of the fact, that the punishment cellar at the Ohio penitentiary has a sign tacked on the door, which reads "No admittance". Those who have heard the groans and shrieks ascending from that torture chamber realise that some one was hurried by the "No admittance sign."

Until the factory inspector's department is lifted above the spoils system and its officials recruited thru the merit system, the workers can have little hope for a more rigid enforcement of existing laws, which today, is the crying need of the hour.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF BOOKBINDERS.

The last meeting of the Central Body brought the Bookbinders into action. This organization is one of the early pioneers of trade unionism. The British Friendly Society of Bookbinders celebrated its centennial in 1894. It is therefore one of the oldest unions in existence.

The National Body informs the membership of the change of National headquarters to Carpenters Building, 122 E. Michigan Street, Indianapolis, Ind.

THE WORKERS IN HORSE GOODS' UNION.

The recent convention of this body went on record as being against prison labor entering into competition with free labor. They appeal to their brethren for the support of their label. Let us get together and give them a boost boys.

ORGANIZED LABOR PROTESTS.

We are informed that the labor unions of Columbus have made a protest against the employment of non-union labor on the structures being erected for the Corn show at the State Fair Grounds. Organized labor proposes not to patronize the show in any way.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

When a Congressional committee appointed to investigate the fact and the uses of the police "sweat box" (vol. xiii, pp. 435, 444, 587, 724, 750), had entered upon its duties, it was blandly assured by the veracious police authorities that there is no such thing at all as a police "sweat box." We beg, therefore, to call the attention of that committee to the Chicago newspapers of the 5th. The committee will find—in the "Tribune," for instance,—that "Leslie Carlson, 12 years old, after defying Inspector of Police P. D. O'Brien, Capt. John McWeeney, and Lieut. Patrick McCauley for two days, last night confessed," etc., etc. "The confession came after a series of conflicting stories told by young Leslie, in which he stoutly maintained his innocence," and "it was not until near midnight that he finally broke down."

Some such inquisitional proceeding ought, it may be, to be authorized by law. Possibly a due administration of justice demands it. But we are not considering that question just now. The question we have to ask is, Where did those policemen get their authority in the law for "bullyragging" a twelve-year-old boy, a prisoner in their custody, for two days and far into the night? A judicially protected course of legal procedure for the examination of persons under arrest upon accusations of crime, is favored by the public policy of the continent of Europe; the public policy of the English speaking peoples, has long opposed even that. But whether that policy be sound or not, who can justify such examinations by irresponsible policemen, with no protection for the prisoner through judicial supervision, and absolutely in defiance of the existing law?—The Public.

Because members of the Industrial Workers of the World are peaceably using the streets of Fresno, Cal. to organize and educate the working class, the Herald and Democrat, a paper published by John Hamilton Gilmour comes out editorially in a recent issue and advocates that the whipping-post and cat-o'-nine-tails seasoned with brine be used to suppress the right of free speech and punish those of the workers who are attempting to organize the wage slaves. The above shows to what extent this kind of parasite and so-called molder of public opinion will go in order to continue to bleed the workers. Any and all similar attempts upon the part of the workers to peaceably assert their manhood and to secure the full products of their toil will be met with violence, torture and murder by the master class who will refuse to get off your backs. He who advocates the lash shall be whipped.

WHY DO WOMEN OBJECT TO SOCIALISM?

Many times we have heard this expression: "Mr. ..... is such a good Socialist, but his wife is not, and objects to him taking any part in the work." And, of course, our sympathy will go out to him. Once in a while he may be deserving, but not always. We should always study a question carefully before we venture upon a decision, and instead of treating the effect, find the cause and remove it. That is what I propose to do in this article.

In religious matters we have been so accustomed to sing and talk about the "Sweet By and By", and of the "Home Over There", that we forget all about the here and now. We are so busy thinking of the "Home Over There", that we neglect the home that could be a heaven here.

And so it is with a great many Socialist; they are continually looking toward the future and neglecting the present, forgetting that we are now making conditions for the future, "for weal or woe," and that the future is only a culmination of the past. Even as we today are reaping all the efforts of the past. The culmination of all the struggles and hardships and battles of the past are lying at our feet today, making it possible for us to enjoy the benefits of those struggles.

In every occurrence in life there is an underlying cause. Should inharmony exist, there must be a cause, and in order to harmonize conditions we must find and remove the cause—and now the question: Why do women object to Socialism? One great reason perhaps is because they do not understand it; then they may be governed by prejudice owing to past influences and teachings. But even such cases are not hopeless if the right treatment may be applied. Having made a careful diagnosis of the case, I have come to the conclusion that in the majority of cases, the man himself is to blame. Having found the cause, we will suggest the remedy. It is very simple and easily applied, and I hope the men who call themselves good Socialist will "Sit up and take notice." I want them look themselves right square in the face and see if they are good Socialists. Being a good Socialist is like being a good Christian, there is no other kind. You are either a Christian or you are not; the same, you are either a Socialist or you are not. A bad Socialist is as impossible as a bad Christian. You may have religious tendencies or be inclined toward Socialism. But to be either we must live it and apply it in our daily life, and the best place to begin is in the home. It is in the home that all the good to be derived from Socialism is to culminate; the home being the foundation for all things else.

And now, Mr. Socialist, can you look yourself squarely in the eyes and say, "I am a Socialist?" If so, you are living it every day and practicing its beautiful teachings; and, therefore, you are not the subject of our sympathies; for if you apply Socialism in your home life, there is not a woman under the sun, if she is normal, that could hold out against Socialism for any great length of time. And if those of you having wives who are not Socialists will stop trying to convert them by preaching Socialism to them and will put it into practice, she will grasp it much more quickly, for a demonstrated problem is much easier understood. Instead of fixing your gaze way off in the future, while you tell her of the great and glorious blessings that are coming to the woman and children of that future time, and elaborate on how the future woman will be the equal of man and will be granted many privileges she does not now possess, and when husband and wife will be real partners, having equal rights. When she will be entitled to what she earns, and all will have a say in the home, even the children will be considered. Just stop talking of that future time and future woman for a while, and remove that distant gaze and let it gently rest upon the woman of the now who has stood by your side in the years gone by and helped you to bear the burdens of life; she who is the mother of your children — the children of today, of the now. Apply a little of that Socialism in the home. Let her enjoy at least a very small portion of the good things that are to come to the women of the future. Form a little band of Socialists right at home and practice comradeship right now. Let each one have a voice in the affairs of the home; they will soon learn to appreciate it and will take to it eagerly and with surprising results.

If you believe that your wife is your equal,—and you will if you are a Socialist,—and that you are partners in the maintaining of the home, you being the earning part of the concern, and she the purchasing agent; then place to her account the means to conduct her part of the business and just as you would treat any other business partner. But sometimes it is said of the wife she cannot be trusted with money. If she is incapable and cannot beentrusted with the are of a few paltry dollars, how in the name of reason can she be trusted with the welfare of yourself and the responsibility of raising your children? Such cases are rare indeed, and would not obtain under proper conditions at all.

Let her realise that you have confidence in her judgment, and being partners you will have little business talks that will be beneficial to all and will bring about the very best results. Treat your wife and children just as women and children of the future are to be treated, and you will realise the blessings of Socialism now on a small scale.

But really now are you a Socialist? Or do you compel your wife to beg or steal that which by rights is her own? That which she has earned just as much as though she worked in a store or factory. Did you ever stop to think what a wife is to a man? She is the companion of his joys and sorrows, his nurse in sickness, cook, housekeeper, laundress, maid of all work, nurse girl, governess to his children, seamstress, and the performer of a hundred and one duties that he knows nothing of. Besides this, every few years she goes down to the very gates of death, and endures and suffers and risks all that children may bless their home. And for all this she receives—what? the magnificent income of a place to stay and something to eat and few clothes, in many instances grudgingly given.

Often the man who would scorn to let pay day go without paying his hired help, or have them ask for their pay, will compel his wife to humiliate herself to the level of a beggar for every dollar she needs to use in the home. How the soul of a true, sensitive woman suffers each time she is compelled to ask for money. It places her in the position of an inferior, crushing her spirit, and sooner or later causing her to lose respect and consequently love for the man she calls her husband, and misery is the result. Such a man could preach Socialism until doomsday, without the desired result. I maintain that the husband has no more right to compel his wife to beg money from him than he has to compel her to beg money from some other man. Many a good woman really suffers all manner of inconviences rather than ask her husband for the money it is his duty to furnish. He has no right to make a beggar and perhaps a thief out of the loving, trusting woman he has promised to love, cherish and protect, for she may resort to stealing from his pockets rather than be forced to account to him for every penny she received from him, and by so doing cause their children to be born thieves, because the mother is compelled to do things against which her very soul revolts.

Woman is by nature a reformer. In history we find her in the very front ranks, if not leading the van, in every social reform, every read to make sacrifices and help bear the burdens in the interest of humanity.

But she will take very little interest in the theories and pratings of her husband about the great blessings and good times to come, for which he is giving much time and money and much vocal power, to bring about to the women and children of the future, while the same earnest advocate of these good things neglects her and her children, their needs and their rights at the present time. But just demonstrate to the average woman, according to your abilities, the beautiful truths embodied in the principles of Socialism and I will venture to say that you will soon have another working member added to your local, willing to work and sacrifice too, for the good of humanity, and the future women and children. But you will have to show her for she may be "From Msapuri."

I have found a very serious cause and have suggested the remedy, which, if applied, would make all women Socialists, and our sympathies could go out in other directions. Women would then no longer oppose, but be the most ardent advocates of Socialism.

STRANGE DRESS FOR WOMEN.

No more radical change in the dress of woman has ever been heard of than that recently cabled from Paris declaring that one of the largest French dressmaking establishments has relegated petticoats to the attic and the swell dressed woman of the moment will wear a modified oriental Turkish trouser costume. The short lived hobble skirt lasted just long enough to give the dressmakers and modelers of woman's fashion time to invent a garment a little more cute and extraordinary. When Mary Garden arrived here a few weeks ago, she had in her wardrobe one of these new Turkish gowns. She declared at the time that it was not made especially for her, but was "the mode."

COLLEGE GIRLS DO WASHING.

The University of Missouri this year will compel all young ladies in the home economic department to roll up their sleeves and wash clothes. This, however, is only to teach the effect that starch, blueing and other chemicals have on different fabrics, and also to prove which is the cheaper method of laundering, hand or electricity.

Incidentally, another lesson vastly more important to the fair co-eds might be taught at the same time along with chemical actions etc. It would be well if their college professors took the view of Tolstoy, who declared that the first condition of a good education was that the child should know that all he uses does not fall from heaven ready-made, but is produced by other people's labor. Let them do all they can for themselves. But how can a child—as yet untried and unable to do anything—explain to himself that others do for him what he naturally should do for himself? The only explanation for him is that people are divided into two classes—masters and slaves; and however much we may talk to him in words about equality and brotherhood of man, all the conditions of his life, from his getting up, to his evening meal, show him to the contrary.

If the teachers and parents of our land taught the youth the nobility of all labor for one's own needs, there would immediately be created a far higher standard of moral education, and a rapid hastening of the time when all will brothers and equals.

The performance of all useful labor should shed a radiance about it, whether it be the discovery of some new star in the vast firmament, or the laundering of one's own gowns.

A GOOD RESOLUTION.

Last New Year's a woman I know made one resolution—only one—and kept it. The result is that in this year she has accomplished more than in any other three years of her life.

She happens to be a writer. But had her work been in any other line, she says her progress would have been the same.

"To make a detailed program each night of the work to be done the next day—and to follow it conscientiously." At first she made out her schedule on a daily memorandum pad, crossing off each item as accomplished. But after a few weeks she evolved a better plan. She took a medium sized note book (a diary with two pages for each day is excellent), and the first page she headed: "What I should do tomorrow;" the page opposite: "What I have done today," and so on through the book.

Every night she would compare what she had done with what she should have done. And whatever was left undone was put down again on the program for the next day.

In this way she was constantly incited to clean up each day's work, to leave nothing to be carried over.

To you who have never worked by schedule, if you will begin the year with this plan you will be amused to find how much more you will accomplish.

I think I can safely promise that if you will make and faithfully follow this resolution for one month, the results will be so advantageous that there will be no question as to your keeping it up.

BRANCHES SHOULD ELECT A WOMAN'S COMMITTEE.

Just as each local elects a literature committee to attend to the circulation of literature—just as it elects a program committee to arrange the programs—even so it should elect a Woman's Committee to arouse the women, the wives and sisters and daughters of the men comrades, and bring them into the local. This committee is usually composed of all the women members of the local. That they may understand the cause for which they are working, these women hold study classes and take up certain standard books for systematic study. That they may reach others they distribute literature—especially for women. To interest those who will not attend a lecture, they give Socialist entertainments. Incidentally, through various means they raise money for propaganda purposes.—Progressive Woman

"The sewing machine didn't save work; it only made ruffles. A dressmaker once said to me, 'It's a good thing for me that these women haven't sense enough to spend their time and money on themselves, in making their bodies free and strong and beautiful. But no; they would rather have a stylish dress than a graceful body. They don't care to be beautiful themselves; all they want is a handsome gown to cover their ugliness.'

Isn't it strange that we never seemed to realize that the Greek fashions were immortal because they were beautiful?

"A good complexion is rather to be chosen than many fine dresses, and glossy and abundant hair 'cometh way wrath.'"

Iowa, Illinois, Washington and Arkansas have secured a Woman's State Correspondent. Oklahoma at its last convention, elected a Woman's State Committee. How about the other states in which no such action has been taken?

NO COOKS AT VASSAR COLLEGE.

When the cooks at Vassar College went on a strike recently, there was a splendid opportunity for some of the girls to demonstrate the culinary skill, which it is hoped their mothers had taught them, but instead of volunteer cooking, there was a stampede for restaurants, lunch-counters and tea-rooms.

Remember, girls, that "civilized man cannot live without cooks."

CURE FOR A "NAGGING" WOMAN.

Having advertised as a widower in search of wife No. 3, a man of St. Gall, Switzerland, showed the fifty replies and photographs which he had received to his wife, and, stating that if she did not want him there were others who did, he effectively cured her of her "nagging" habits.

Without the resolution in your hearts to do good work, so long as your right hands have motion in them, and to do it whether the issue be that you die or live, no life worthy the name will ever be possible to you; while in once forming the resolution that your work is to be well done, life is really won, here and forever.

A press dispatch says Mr. Schwab will re-open his $7,000,000 New York home and entertain on a lavish scale. The regular up keep of the house will cost $250 per day. In the meantime 15,000 babies die in New York city annually for lack of proper nourishment, and charity associations are unable to relieve all calls for help. It is just such ostentatious displays that breed anarchists and the only wonder is that there are so few in this country. Under Socialism, necessity will first be relieved and Mr. Schwab, deprived of his power to exploit the working class, will not be able to make sub display of his stolen wealth.

WINTER MOTOR BONNETS.

Mighty Natty Models For Cold Weather Spins.

BONNETS OF VELVET AND SILK.

Motoring is now such a usual mode of transit that automobile fashions are in a class apart, and both dressmakers and milliners make special designs to meet the needs of the fair autoists.

In the sketch are two fascinating bonnets for winter spins. Brown velvet is the material of the attractive model with wide strings of ivory satin. This same satin is used for the face quilling and for the choux.

The other bonnet is of shot taffeta silk in a queer pooked shape with veil to match and rosette of iridescent tissue.

The Quality Girl.

She is none other than the strictly up to date business woman. C. D Larson, writing in the Progress Magazine, says:

It is necessary to be attractive as well as competent, and to be such you should aim to be a quality girl. Many a faithful girl has been left in the rear because she neglected her personal appearance, and many a girl whose appearance received the best of attention has failed to realize her ideal because she did not give expression to her best. Your appearance depends largely upon what you put on, but real quality comes from what you are, how you act, how you conduct yourself, how you express yourself and how you have improved all those things in your nature that can be expressed. To be a quality girl, therefore, in the truest sense of that term, it is necessary to do your best, be your best and appear your best.

Thousands of good positions are open to the quality girl, and thousands of desirable young men are looking for just such girls to become their wives. Be a quality girl and you need not be disturbed about the future. You may have good positions in the world's work as long as you like, and you may have a worthy husband and good home whenever you like.

A CURIOUS BOY.

There is a little boy
Who lives somewhere around,
I don't intend to speak his name,
You've met him, I'll be bound.

A nicer looking little chap
You couldn't ask to see,
It's just the things he sometimes says
That make him queer to me.

"I'll jump out of my skin," he cries,
When he is asked to wait;
Or else, "I'd rather lose my ears
Than be a minute late."

And when his hair is tangled up,
And must be pulled and hauled,
He cries, "I wish I had no hair,
I wish that I were bald."

Now if these things he often says
Should suddenly come true,
This skinless, earless, hairless boy,
Whatever would he do?

THE MAKING OF A JAPANESE NEWSPAPER.

By Pauline S. Winfield.

The interior of a newspaper office in Japan presents a sad spectacle of the struggle of the compositor with difficulties unknown elsewhere and possibly unnecessary here. Their system is called Kana, and the characters in use consist of Chinese ideographs, complicated square figures made up on an apparent jumble of zig-zag crosses, dots, triangles, and ells.

Their vocabulary contains 36,000 of these characters, and no less than 4,000 of them are in daily use. Hence the Japanese compositor has to be prepared to place in his stick any one of the 4,000 different types—a task truly appalling. To be able to recognize all these instantly and accurately he must be something of a scholar. His eyesight, too, must be very sharp, and so great is the strain on the vision that he is often obliged to make use of huge magnifying goggles.

Another difficulty which the printer would readily perceive is that it would be utterly impossible for one man to reach 4,000 types. To meet this situation a totally different case arrangement from the ordinary one must be devised. The type therefore (there are only three of four on a paper) sits at a table at one end of a large room with a case containing forty-seven Kana syllables before him. From one end o the room to the other rise tall cases of type arranged like the shelves in a crowded library, a passage three feet wide being left between each row. The compositor received his copy in large sheets, which he cuts up into little "takes," handing one to each of a dozen boys who are his assistants. The boy then proceeds to walk about among the cases until he has selected each of the picture words or Chinese ideographs required.

While the boys are running to and fro; jostling each other in the narrow aisles, they keep up a continual chant, singing the name of the character of which they are in search, as they cannot recognise it until they hear its sound. Likewise the Japanese coolie cannot understand his newspaper until he reads it aloud. When the boy has collected all the characters of his copy he takes his stick to the compositor, who then arranges them in proper order, adding the connecting syllables from his own case in front of him.

The next step is taking the proof, and for this purpose two readers are required, one of whom sings the copy aloud to the other.

Such is a Japanese composing room with its bustle, noise and laughter of the boys, and the singing of the copy, the only serious figure being the long-haired type seated afar off at one end of the room poring over his queer type, like some sage entomologist with a new bug under his microscope.

The total number of persons employed in a typical Japanese daily newspaper office, for instance the Nichi-Nichi Shinbun at Tokio, the leading offical organ of the Empire, is about one hundred and seventy men and boys.

This staff, though large, is not a very great tax upon the resources of the paper, since the wages these men receive is a mere pittance compared with the usual cost of such service in other countries. The editors-in-chief receive thirty yen per month, and their assistants not over half that sum. Compositors, reporters, and others of the staff, get from five to ten yen, type setters and coolies three to four, the yen being equal in value to only fifty cents in gold. The wage of the reporter, moreover, is dependent upon the amount of news gathered, and as their facilities for obtaining authentic copy are meagre, the Japanese papers having little foreign correspondence, they are often compelled to rely largely upon their imaginations for requisite matter.

The first page of a Japanese newspaper would be our last; its columns run from bottom to top instead of across; it has few illustrations, and until recently scarcely any advertisements.

When completed, fresh from the old fashioned hand presses still in vogue, the papers are delivered by runners sent to every part of the country. They carry a bundle of neatly folded papers under ther arms and announce their coming by the incessant tinkling of a bell fastened to the girdle of the kimono.

RUNNING DOWN A TIGER.

It has often been said that a wild beast will not attack a human being unless the latter shows signs of fear or the beast is very hungry. The following anecdote, told by an exchange, offers some evidence to support that statement.

Some years ago the manager of a menagerie in Moscow required an extra assistant to clean out cages. The manager, a Frenchman, knew no Russian, and the Cossack whom he hired knew no French; but by dint of vivid and practical pantomime on the part of the one and ready attention on the part of the other, they got on admirably. While demonstrating how the work should be done, they came finally to the cage of a very tame antelope, which was the pet of all the keepers. Rake, broom, sponges and buckets were carried into the cage, and the manager, without any idea of setting an example, but merely as a treat for the antelope, brushed and sponged the animal. He then turned the instruments over to his new man and went to his office.

On returning an hour or so later, he was horrified to discover the Cossack inside the cage of a full-grown tiger—a splendid, untamed brute, recently brought from the jungle, and considered the most dangerous in the collection—standing calmly astride the great, striped body and vigorously scrubbing its thick fur.

Transfixed, the manager watched while the powerful body stretched itself out at full length on the floor of the cage, the great paws sprawled comfortably, the fierce eyes closed, and the savage throat emitted a series of mighty, but whole-souled and grateful purrs.

The Cossack did his work thoroughly, and when it was completed to his entire satisfaction, he gave the beast a good-natured pat on the head, gathered up his tools and walked unconcernedly out and locked the door.

Fads For Women.

Now that bamboo furniture is used so universally a suggestion about cleaning it may not go unnoticed. This cleansing should be done with soap and warm water to which salt has been added. And the mixture must be put on with a brush and then wiped off with clean rags until the article is dry and glistens.

Ordinary laundry soap will remove the natural gloss of the wood and leave it dull if salt is not added.

An authority on shoes says that patent leather should never be kept in a cold closet or one unduly warm, for the reason that both degrees of heat and cold cause the leather to crack.

Instead of these extremes a spot where the heat is medium should be found.

Cold is worse than heat for patent leather. When the shoes are to be put on the feet it will preserve them if the hand is passed over the shoes, smoothing them until they feel supple.

They are then less apt to crack. This gradual warming should never be omitted when patent leather shoes are first put on.

CHAPTER V.

A YEAR passed since the eventful night for Wheeler Brand when Nolan made him managing editor of the Advance. In these months Brand made a showing with the paper that was never dreamed of by the owners preceding as being within the range of possibility. Made absolute master of the paper and consequently dictator of its policy, the young man set a pace that the paper's rivals found difficult to equal, much less to outstrip. His exposure of the scandals in the exclusive world of high life insurance finance has thus far proved the most vital reform of his administration. As a result of this crusade, which drove a half dozen leading officials from almost as many companies, the president of the United States stated publicly that "the vast life insurance business of this country is now on the soundest financial basis it has ever had."

But Wheeler Brand in the press of stirring events had not forgotten Judge Barteimy. In fact, certain activities of that estimable individual were just now under close scrutiny by the one time reporter, who, if he could be prevailed on to speak concerning it, might possibly observe that the judge was very soon to have an opportunity to make a few explanations which would be received with undoubted interest by the public. The young editor's suit for the hand of Judith Barteimy might be said, since we are dealing with a judge's family, to be in statu quo. She was still waiting for him "to become sane," as she had expressed herself to him. A girl of lofty principles and of decided strength of character, she could not see his duty from his viewpoint. Perhaps it was all quite natural, quite womanly, quite daughterly, that she should subscribe absolutely to her father's side in the momentous case of "JUDGE BARTELMY VERSUS THE PEOPLE, WHEELER BRAND AND THE ADVANCE."

She was loyal to her father, and she was trying to be loyal to her lover, and the task was becoming more and more difficult. Yet she waited, and Wheeler Brand waited, and each prayed that the other would end the ordeal and heal two breaking hearts.

Today we find Wheeler Brand proceeding toward the luxurious Nolan home on a fashionable residential thoroughfare to visit the proprietor of the paper to hand him a statement of the Advance's progress, to discuss matters of editorial policy and to confer regarding a certain development concerning Judge Barteimy.

At the Nolan home a reception had been announced, hundreds of invitations sent out, but the responses did not encourage Mrs. Nolan in her social aspirations. Society passed her by. That was the whole story in brief. Society, as usual, was ever so much pleased with itself and was too busy to include Mrs. Nolan, Phyllis and Sylvester in its diversions. The husband and father cared very little for society, had no time for it, but he fondly loved the courageous, warm hearted woman who had uncomplainingly shared with him the onerous hardships of his early days, and it was his desire to gratify her ambitions as well as those of his daughter. The fortune he had plucked from Nevada's dinty bosom enabled him to be generous, and he smiled approvingly on every new extravagance of Mrs. Michael Nolan. Therefore if she was socially ambitious she must have her way and be allowed to carry on her campaign for recognition in whatever fashion she chose. Certainly the home he had established was a fitting vantage ground from which to wage a war of dollars against the precipitous embattlements with which the city's Four Hundred had encircled its camp. Palatial in size, the Nolan residence was equally palatial in its furbishings, and only the magic word from the magic lips of a single member of the magic realm of "the aristocracy" was necessary to send monogrammed coaches in long lines to the Nolan doors, to fill the costly rooms with distinguished faces, to fill to overflowing with happiness the yearning heart of Mrs. Michael Nolan.

But the word had not yet been spoken.

It was now late in the afternoon at the Nolan home. Phyllis walked across the drawing room, irritation plainly marking her pretty pink and white face. The music of a string orchestra stationed in the conservatory ceased. She addressed a servant who stood at attention at a door at the right which led to the dining room.

"Pitcher," she said discouragedly, "I don't think any one else will come, so tell the musicians they can go."

"Yes, Miss Phyllis."

At this point Mrs. Nolan came storming in, carrying a huge bunch of hothouse grapes in her hand.

"Pitcher, I noticed those caterer men are drinking all the champagne, and I want it stopped," she ordered loudly.

Pitcher bowed and went out.

"If our guests won't come here to drink it, at least we will drink it ourselves," Mrs. Nolan announced to Phyllis. "Well, we have done it—sent out 400 cards, and who's been here that anybody wants to see? This is the second time we've gone to all this trouble and expense for nothing and nobody, and if you'll take my advice it will be the last."

"Mamma, Pitcher will hear," the girl protested.

The mother bit a grape from the bunch. She deposited the skin and stones in a Sevres vase on the marble mantel.

"Phyllis, what did you have to pay that musician?" she asked.

"Well, his price is a thousand dollars."

"Good gracious!"

"But I got him for $750. I promised the Advance would help him."

"Seven fifty for playing twice. I'd rather hear the band." Mrs. Nolan bit off another grape.

"You don't understand, mamma. Everybody's wild over that violinist."

"It seems there wasn't nobody wild enough to come here."

"There wasn't 'anybody,'" spoke Phyllis, correcting her mother.

"Well, was there?" retorted the mother as she dropped the grape skin in another vase.

"Oh, dear," Phyllis wailed disconsolately as she seated herself before a small stand. "don't rub it in, mamma! I can't help it."

"Now, who's blaming you, child?" consoled the mother. "There, don't cry. I'm not so disappointed about myself, but I can't bear to see you snubbed right and left. You are good enough to go with any of these people, and you shall too. It's that newspaper that's at the bottom of it. People won't have it, or is because of it, and I mean to tell your father so too. And that's why these 'at homes' is no good."

"Are no good, mamma," tearfully.

"Well, are they? It would have been better to put your $750 into suffragetting. That's what gets you in with the right people—not that I care to vote, but I don't want the men to say I can't."

Sylvester Dolan interrupted the conversation between mother and daughter by appearing before them with his bosom friend, Mag Powell, who believed himself to have the makings of a master poet; it was with deepest pride that the Nolan son presented Powell, long haired, sallow faced and seedily dressed, to his mother and sister. Sallow faced? Indeed, his countenance had that sickly greenish yellow hue that comes from long devouring of the muses and long abstinence from the devouring of food.

"Nobody was wild enough to come here."

"Hello, mamma!" he cried enthusiastically. "Here's a friend of mine I want you to know—Mr. Powell, the poet."

"How do you do, Mr. Powell? You look as if it would be easy for you to write poetry. Do you know, poetry just sets me wild?"

Sylvester patted Powell on the back. "Well, this lad's going to make a big noise in poetry some day. Phyllis, you must have heard of Powell. My sister, old man!"

"Won't you have a cup of tea, Mr. Powell?" invited Mrs. Nolan, visibly impressed by the presence of a poet at her home.

Powell started confusedly to utter his thanks. He did not seem overdelighted at the offer.

Sylvester saw the difficulty. "Tea!" he exclaimed. "Absinth for Powell!"

Mrs. Nolan expressed her regret at not having any absinth and left the room, followed by Phyllis, to arrange for something for Powell to eat. "Poor fellow! He looks hungry," she whispered to Phyllis.

Sylvester caught the poet by the arm.

"One minute, Powow," he cautioned. "Be sure you don't mention anything to the folks about my little actress friend. I don't want them to know that I am going to take a crack at uplifting the stage. The little girl will be all right. She'll just make your libretto hum. She'll fill it with personality. Build up all those weak places. You know, Powow, there are some. Where's that poem for her? Finished yet?"

"Yes, it's here somewhere," fumbling in a pocket.

"Have you made it amorous for the little girl?"

"Judge for yourself. Of course I tried to write in your vein as well as I could, so that there would be no doubt to the authorship."

Sylvester read the lines:

Oh, Guenevere, how sweet my dear!
My spirit soars in dreams denied.
Worlds beyond worlds with thee, my bride—

"I don't like that much," he announced when he had finished. "Bride! Is it necessary to put that in writing? Besides, it don't sound as if I wrote it. Now, does it, Powow, old chap? Fess up."

"I hope it doesn't sound as if I wrote it."

"I thought you'd see it. Now, change that and it's a knockout drop. Can't you change it now? And I'll send it to the little girl tonight on a bed of orchids. Make it something beginning with 'ruby lips'—you know the sort of guff—and then here and there 'eyes like night, full of delight,' something on that order."

"Ruby, ruby—rougey lips!"

Powell sat and wrote for a few minutes. "Here," he finally said. Sylvester glanced over the shoulder of the rising young genius, who read aloud these inspiring words:

So bright and beaming are thine eyes
The very stars twink in surprise.
Thy hair so like the dusky night,
Thy kiss so vibrant with delight,
I thrill unto my finger tips.
Oh, ruby, ruby—rougey lips!

Powell literally writhed in agony as he listened to the doggerel.

"It's great!" cried Sylvester ecstatically. "And now come get your tea. Gee, I'd like to take a crack at being a poet!"

The two conspirators hurried into the dining room as Wheeler Brand and the owner of the Advance came into the drawing room.

"You're right, Wheeler; you're right," Nolan was saying. "This is a better showing than I hoped for. Look in your stocking next Christmas. There'll be something for you. When I got into the newspaper business, Brand, they told me it was the beginning of my finish, that it sucked ten fortunes down for every one it built and no middle aged man ever went into it and came out again without teeth marks all over him. But look at that." He held up a typewritten statement. "I'm richer for going in—twice as much advertising as last year at this time."

Nolan seated himself on a settee.

"The big advertisers never pull their ads. as long as they are getting returns from them," put in Brand. "Look at Dupuy. Remember how he threatened us and how his clients took their ads. out for two months?"

"Yes, but they put them back again."

"Why? Because they need us more than we need them," Brand laughed.

"Well, he's got something else up his sleeve now," remarked Nolan. "He telephoned that he would come to see me this afternoon."

"Are you going to see him?" Brand asked curiously.

"I thought I might as well. He'll be here. Maybe he wants to fire you again." The newspaper owner looked up at Brand and laughed heartily.

Mrs. Nolan and Phyllis re-entered the drawing room, and Brand became the especial object of their attentions.

The mother desired to have him print the list of her invited guests who had never attended the reception. Phyllis requested him to print a story about the violinist and was vastly annoyed when Brand informed her that the subject was a matter for the musical editor to attend to.

"And there's something else, Mr. Brand." A look of despair came into Brand's face. "Phyllis went to Miss Barteimy's musicale the other day, and you didn't even include her name among those present," the mother said.

"Why, I'm sorry. That was an oversight, I assure you. I suppose they made up the usual list in the office."

"I hope it won't happen again," remarked Phyllis indignantly.

"Yes, and the way it's handling this Loris divorce case is all wrong," snapped Mrs. Nolan. "I know Mrs. Loris. She is no better than she should be, and people who live in icehouses shouldn't throw hot water."

"We have no policy in the Loris case," remarked Brand in defense. "We merely print the facts."

"People who live in icehouses shouldn't throw hot water."

"Facts!" Mrs. Nolan cried. "That paper upsets me for the whole day every morning."

"There now, mother; I guess the paper's all right," ventured Nolan soothingly.

"You've got another guess, Michael. Nobody reads it but shopgirls, who spend a penny for the Advance and another for a stick of gum and hang on to a strap with one hand and the Advance with the other while they're waggling their jaws all the way down to work. That's all that reads it!" She paused for breath, then went on, "And I must say I think it's scandalous the way you attack Judge Barteimy every little while."

"Yes," contributed Phyllis, "and his daughter's one of the most exclusive and sought after girls in New York. She's the only one of her set who has been at all nice to me. Isn't that so, mamma?"

"Yes, and why the paper should go for her father just as it does for every other prominent man in town I can't see. She must think it's very funny that such things should appear in the Advance after what she's done for us."

"Oh," suggested Brand, thinking to soothe his employer's wife, "she probably knows that you have absolutely nothing to do with the policy of the Advance!"

"Is that so?" ejaculated Mrs. Nolan indignantly. "They certainly are very kind hearted people to act the way they do in the face of that paper."

"Judge Barteimy is first and last a politician," explained Brand.

Michael Nolan bent forward intently. The conversation had now reached a point where he realized an issue of vital importance to himself and to the Advance had been touched on.

"Well, I suppose he has been coddling up to us a little," he began, then paused.

Brand drew a deep breath, stood up erect in the middle of the drawing room and daringly explained the situation to the owner of the paper.

"Barteimy handles people better than any man in town," he declared. "He has studied the Advance, dissected its position and—I will be frank with you—discovered its weaknesses. He knows he can't reach you through your cupidity or political ambition because you lack those qualities. He now realizes that his only hope of influencing us lies in an appeal to"— He hesitated.

Let us get busy Comrades with the sale of those tickets of the Lyceum Course. The first lecture is by C. B. Hoffman, January 27, at Board of Trade Auditorium. The time is short. Anybody desiring a ticket for the course and who cannot find an agent, will find tickets at City Headquarters, 184½ South High Street.

At a meeting of the 9th Ward branch last Thursday, January 12th, arrangements were made to begin a series of entertainments, beginning about February 10th. Comrade Gayton addressed the meeting on Jan. 19th, and every Thursday evening thereafter, there will be an address and discussions. All persons, whether members of the party or not, are invited to attend these meetings. Come out and see what the Socialists stand for. Three new members were obligated and several applications for membership were received. A committee was appointed to draft resolutions pertaining to the courts in general and this county in particular. Comrade Gayton read the paper, which the branch decided to have published in The Socialist.

The Twelfth Ward branch will have an oyster supper and card party at the home of Comrade A. C. Eby, 174 East 5th Avenue, on Thursday evening, January 26. Admission 15 cents. Everybody invited.

The Fourth Ward branch had a well attended meeting at its hall at Tenth and Mt. Vernon avenue last Sunday evening. The question for debate was "Should the tools of production be taken over by confiscation?" The discussion was a lively one as is always the case at a Socialist meeting. The Fourth Ward branch is active these days.

EIGHTH WARD MEETING.

Socialism and What It Means to the Workers," will be discussed by Comrades J. L. Bachman and Charles E. Belcher, Monday evening, January 23, at Hertenstein's Hall, 752 West Mound Street. Meeting will be held under auspices of the Eighth Ward Branch. O. G. Van Schoyck, Sec.

SECOND WARD MEETING.

Second Ward branch had a rousing meeting on Friday evening last week. Comrade T. J. Johnson gave an address on the subject, "What has been done for money." Comrade Johnson talked plainly about the methods of professional men in their lust for wealth. The branch voted in favor of an increase in the initiation fee for party membership.

A PIONEER GONE.

Comrade Charles Daugherty, aged 68, a pioneer Socialist of Columbus, died at his home, 118 South 18th St., last Saturday morning after an extended illness. Comrade Daugherty is survived by his wife and three children. The funeral was held Monday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock at the residence. A noble worker has passed away but the memory of his unselfish devotion to the cause of the emancipation of humanity will linger long with those who knew him.

Brown County Heard From at Last.

ELECTION BOARD EVIDENTLY IS GUILTY OF GROSS NEGLECT OF DUTY.

The only blank in the tabulated report of the Socialist vote in Ohio at the last election is the line where Brown County appears. State Secretary Storck of the Socialist Party has received the following letter which sheds some light upon the subject:

Macon, Ohio, Jan. 6, 1911.

Dear Comrade:

I am just in receipt of the November issue of the Ohio Socialist Bulletin in which you have marked an item by Dr. Kinsell, of Columbus, in regard to the report from Brown County that there were no Socialist votes cast here at last election. The doctor is right. There were 7 votes in Eagle township (my township), 2 in Jackson, 1 in Washington, all certified to by the township boards of elections and returned to the county board. I guess that is as far as they ever got. There are 17 other voting places in the county and I estimate that the vote was about 50. It seems strange that the old party politicians should suppress the vote where they have everything to lose and nothing to gain.

Yours truly,
Julius Juilbrat.

WARD ORGANIZERS AT WORK.

The Ward Organizers have adopted the plan of visiting the various branches in turn as a body. On Friday evening of last week they visited the First Ward branch and gave the cause a boost. The appearance of ten comrades from every section of the city was an inspiration to the members that will result in good. The organizers have sprung a good idea and its results will be soon in the future.

Last night the organizers called in at the meeting of the Second Ward branch and added to the interest of the evening.

SOCIALIST LYCEUM COURSE.

The Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course of Lectures has been secured for Columbus and the first lecture will be delivered at Board of Trade Auditorium, Friday evening, January 27, and the speaker is C. B. Hoffman, on "The Philosophy of Socialism."

The entire course is as follows:

C. B. Hoffman, "The Philosophy of Socialism," January 27.

M. A. Richardson, "Our Industrial Problems," February 14.

Geo. R. Kirkpatrick, "The Present Class Struggle," February 28.

John W. Slayton, "Unionism and Socialism," March 7.

Fred and May Strickland, "The Socialist Party," March 14.

Socialist Quartette Concert Co., "An Evening of Music," March 21.

Season tickets have been placed with the Ward Branches for sale or may be obtained at City Headquarters, 184½ South High Street. Each purchaser of a ticket will receive the Chicago Daily Socialist for four months, in addition to the enjoyment to be derived from the six evenings of entertainment and instructions.

SOCIALIST GLEE CLUB.

The Socialist Glee Club met at 184½ South High Street last Tuesday evening and held a preliminary session. All the Socialists who can sing are urgently requested to attend a meeting next Tuesday evening at 184½ South High Street.

GULIVER'S JINGLE.

There was a man named Foty,
Whose defense was quite doty;
Who now has a new phonograph—
It was dear old E. K.
Who made that grand "Play"—
(He's not on our Editorial Staff.)

Now I think you and I,
A new "record" should buy
To play—when next he may call—
That anthem so dear,
::HAIL! THE GANG'S ALL HERE."
Behind our Old Workhouse Wall.

GUILIVER TATTLE.

A worker was killed at the Buckeye Steel Casting Co. The death did not affect Wall Street Stocks, because the dead worker's tools were turned over to another one of the unemployed army. This is not the first death at this plant. But corporations put no value on human life in the mad rush for dividends.

The devil-doctrine seems to have been common to all barbarous and semi-savage people.

It is said that indifference, prejudice and ignorance are the main barriers to the world's progress. We must know in order to act intelligently. We are not likely to know without honestly investigating? Lincoln once said: "To know but one side of a question is to be only half posted."

United Mine Workers Stronger Than Ever.

MEMBERSHIP INCREASES IN SPITE OF BITTER STRIKE STRUGGLES PAST YEAR.

Facing momentous and difficult questions, more than a thousand delegates representing the membership of the United Mine Workers of America gathered here Tuesday for the opening session of the twenty-second annual convention of this organization.

James T. Liddy, business agent of the local machinists' union presided during the opening exercises. Mayor Marshall made an address of welcome in which he went almost to the limit in expressing radical ideas as to the rights of the toilers. He spoiled the effect of his remarks by declaring that the interests of labor and capital were identical. The miners long ago learned, by bitter experience, that capital's interests are opposed to those of the workers. Hunger, prison and death have made the miners one of the most class conscious labor organization in the world.

This annual convention marks the passage of another year's rapid and substantial growth in this second largest labor union in the world.

As just announced, the membership of this organization for December, 1910, the month just passed, was 308,600.

This is the highest paid up membership for any corresponding month in the history of the organization.

This record-breaking membership follows close on the heels of many months of bitter struggle, all of which has not been by the united organization against a common enemy.

The optimistic spirit prevaded the big gathering as President Tom L. Lewis called the convention to order in Memorial hall, where the sessions will be held.

In reviewing the history of the United Mine Workers the official journal has the following to say in part:

"Twenty-one years is a long time to look back, and there are few who can remember the handful of delegates who in 1890 met in the city of Columbus and, after years of repeated effort—and failure—resolved to make one more effort to unite the miners of the country into one organization.

"Those delegates who assembled in 1890 were in hope and fear—hope that this effort would bring success; fear, because of failure of all previous efforts.

"Nevertheless, they determined to make one more effort to smooth over the rough places and bring the opposing factions into line in the interest of the rank and file.

"That they finally hit upon a plan that commended itself is apparent in the splendid organization we have today—not so strong as it could be, not so strong as it ought to be, but a power for the good of those organized and a terror to the evildoers among the coal operators.

"The organization is twenty-one years of age. With this convention it reaches its full grown age, but not its stature.

"There are new fields to win; there are new worlds (unorganized) to conquer. The mission is not complete, nor will it be until we claim as members of the U. M. W. of A. every coal miner in the United States and Canada."

Probably the greatest question that will come before the convention will be that of closer affiliation between the United Mine Workers of America and the Western Federation of Miners.

This matter was up last year before the convention at Indianapolis and resulted in the passage of a proposition afterwards accepted by the western miners by a referendum vote.

This proposition included affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, on the part of the Western Federation, a matter that proved a stumbling block at the recent convention of the American Federation at St. Louis on account of the jurisdictional claims made by various organizations, especially the machinists.

There has been some talk of the coal miners seceding from the American Federation and joining with the metalliferous miners in one big organization.

BACHMAN AT THE WORKHOUSE.

Comrade J. L. Bachman spoke to the workhouse last Sunday afternoon at the regular "community" meeting in which the prisoners discuss and vote upon the internal affairs of the institution. Comrade Bachman sought to make it plain that he rejected the idea of total depravity and believed that people would be good if they had a real chance. He favored a system which would make it as easy as possible to do right. The audience gave the speaker a very cordial reception.

Brave soldiers have died on the battlefield and holy martyrs have gone smiling to the faggot and the sword, but the children of their murderers have erected monuments to their memory.

HERE'S THE ANSWER.

First Lawyer, quizically: "What's the difference between murder in the second degree and assault and battery?"

Second Lawyer promptly: "The jury in the Foty case."

RESOLUTIONS OF REGRET.

Whereas, it has pleased an Almighty Providence in his infinite wisdom to remove from our midst one of our most loyal and beloved comrades, C. E. Daugherty. Therefore, be it

Resolved, that in the death of comrade Daugherty, the Socialist party has suffered a keen loss, as he was a loyal member and faithful worker for the emancipation of the working class.

Resolved, that we extend our most heartfelt sympathy to his distressed family in this hour of bereavement.

Be it further RESOLVED that a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes, a copy be given to The Columbus Socialist for publication, also be it further resolved that we drape our charter in mourning for thirty days, in respect for our Comrade.

State Party News.

State Secretary Storck has received applications for Socialist locals the past week from Medina, Maynard, Crescent, West Wheeling and Greenville. Wapakoneta has also re-organized after a dormant period. Verily Ohio is advancing.

The state convention of Ohio Socialists will be held April 28 and 29. The executive committee is now voting upon the location.

Local Sandusky organized for effective work this week by electing permanent officers. The cause of Erie county is on the up grade.

A new local will be organized shortly at Lakeview by Comrade J. F. Allen, o Lima. Comrade G. A. Seelig is the disturber at Lakeview.

Local Toledo is initiating an attempt for a referendum on the advisability of adopting a constitution similar to that which exists in the states of New Mexico and Arizona. Since at the last election it was deemed wise, as the votes demonstrated, to create a more modern constitution, organized labor has taken a decided stand to be represented in the coming convention held for the purpose of formulating the new document.

The constitution of the states of New Mexico and Arizona seem to meet the progressiveness of the Socialist party, hence the desire of Local Toledo to have it duly considered by the comrades of the Socialist party of Ohio.

The Socialist cause in Lima and Allen county is moving ahead in step with the general progress of the party. From 319 two years the vote increased last fall to over 700. This was in the face of the most deplorable industrial conditions and the oppositions of as heartless a set of labor crushers as ever oppressed the toiler. Comrade L. H. Bogardus is the self-sacrificing and indefatigable secretary who has nobly worked for years to advance the cause. Keep your eyes on Lima.

A DAMN COUNTY.

As we take a survey of the above named county from a political and intellectual standpoint, we are surprised, and ready to exclaim, "How can these things be"—bribery galore; rich and poor alike selling their birthplace for a mess of pottage. Natural fools, devoid of common sense and decency. The county is a "dam" county and a disgrace to the civilization of the 20th century. I would suggest that the citizens (I mean the few who are left) consult with the missionary societies and have them provided with missionaries who have had experience in the conversion of the heathen in darkest Africa. This county is certainly as dark, morally as Africa ever was. We are told by travelers that the Kaffir is a wise man. Suppose you obtain a number of Kaffirs to come to Adams county and try their method of government among the people of that county.

The Ohio State Journal reports that ministers of the gospel are among the bribe takers. Will these ministers now become "Billy Sundays", continue on in their plodding, sinful ways or will they have decency enough for themselves and their church to "step down and out."

There is truly "Something rotten in Denmark" as Shakespeare expresses it! Extremely rotten. We often hear the expression "Socialism is no good", but no Socialist, even in that rotten county, sold his vote. It certainly must be awful when a judge who was elected by these same vote sellers cannot stand the stench and ordered a probe to clarify the atmosphere. Why did he not order a probe of the bribe givers? Was he afraid it might be injurious to some of the best citizens (officers), and was he afraid the county would lose all its officers?

Was he not elected by these same persons he is fining and disfranchising? Did he not furnish part of the funds to bribe these voters? What have the school boards and teachers been doing the past twenty years, towards making better citizens of the children who came under their charge? If every officer of that county, including the county prosecutor and judge, will make a full confession and agree to resign in the event it is shown that they were elected by bribery, I would have a great deal more faith in their pretensions."

The Rail-Light Juggling.

The Rail-Light is up to its old tactics of doing the people. Its auditors have prepared a report of its business for the past year, in which it is claimed that the strike of last summer has cost the company $750,000 in round figures. Despite this there was a surplus, according to their figures of over $36,000. The officers refuse to talk about the report, except to say that the receipts make it impossible to give eight tickets for a quarter, which, under the terms of their franchise was due the people when the gross receipts reached $750,000. The total receipts for 1910, according to the report, were $2,378,720.65 and the total NET receipts were $777,805.17. By what process does the company figure that the people of Columbus should be denied eight tickets for a quarter, because Czar Stewart tried to crush the employes? The people should not forget that 550 employes of the Rail-Light petitioned for an increase of wages because they could not live on what they were getting. Their request was refused with the advice to eat beans and rice. The men organized and struck. The company signed an agreement granting a slight increase in wages and promised not to discriminate against the strikers. The men returned to work, and found as fellow employees hired thugs who assaulted them. Union men were discharged and the word came from Stewart that not a man who signed the petition for more wages would be working for the company after six months. Then the men struck again. The story is fresh in the minds of all.

What is the answer? Let the people own the means of transportation. No corporation will then have a chance to juggle figures to rob the public.

Foty Defeated.

is doing time in the workhouse for murder, was given a shock last Sunday. The inmates of the workhouse have the privilege of chosing their librarian who, by reason of his duties, is excused from other work. Foty aspired to the place, and aided by the liberal supply of tobacco furnished by his "great and good friend" E. K. Stewart, carried on a vigorous compaign. He lost out getting 96 votes to 129 cast for the successful candidate.

Woe On Wall Street.

A cry of woe comes from Wall Street. The lambs are not flocking to the slaughter as of yore. The New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer says:

"The oldest wall streeter has never seen things as they are today in the street. It is safe to say that in a year and a half not an outsider has bought nor speculated in a share of stock. So hard has been the going with them that most of the men in the street have quietly disposed of their automobiles and are now bending every effort to make sufficient money to keep up household expenses."

Shocking, isn't it! The charitable societies in the metropolis should hasten to help these suffering ones.

Comrade Fred G. Strickland spoke at Zanesville two weeks ago and the next day the Times-Record of that city said editorially:

"To one who has not kept in touch with the local growth of the movement, a visit to Memorial hall Wednesday night would have been a distinct surprise. That the Socialists have gained such a strong grip on Zanesville in the past year or so surprises even those who are intimately acquainted with local affairs. The same growth is noted in every section of the north. The writer happens to be somewhat informed on conditions in Columbus, and ventures an opinion that the state capital will have a Socialist mayor within the next five years. Whether their rapid growth is merely a bit of political phenomena, due to temporary conditions, or is a normal growth that will eventually develop a great political party, time alone will tell."

The unions organize, but the banks Morganize,

The Socialist is a labor paper that will not sell out to the politicians in any politicl campaign.

The Master-Class will do much for labor in the way of small concessions, but will not give up the system that takes four-fifths of labor's product until forced to do so. Socialists understand that and the Masters might as well get ready to be dumped.

A Missouri painter named Mason inherited a mythical fortune of $300,000, and on the strength of it got over $100 worth of clothes and two automobiles. Now he has been arrested for fraud. What he should have done is promote a mythical company, pull in real investors, and declare, for himself, actual dividends. He could have gotten away with that.

Socialism and the Home.

Yes, Brother Heavy Laden, we have come to help you, and all the toilers like you. The most of us came into Socialism because we realized the serious problem of providing for a home.

The "skeleton in the closet" of nearly every home is the fear of going to the "poor house." We are not destroyed by want but by the FEAR of want.

To have beautiful homes we must be rid of this gnawing fear. And we must have sufficient leisure at least to get acquainted with each other.

Besides, we need a better motive for home-building. When men and women marry only through mutual love and fitness, the divorce court will grow unpopular. The "home" is being shattered under capitalism because both men and women are marrying for support, or for social position and power.

Socialism will protect the child, not only by helping to bring better homes, but by eliminating child-labor and providing all the boys and girls with a suitable education. We are friends of liberal education everywhere.

Let us tear down the shacks and build homes. Let us root out the slums and put parks and play-grounds in their stead.

Let us have air and sunshine and health and happiness. Let us give the home and home-love a chance to be and to flourish.

The editor of The Cleveland Leader rises to make the following naive remark: "The surest cure for a Socialist is to give him a comfortable amount of property and make him a director in a profitable corporation." Sure! If capitalism could give every one a comfortable amount of property and make us all directors in profitable business corporations there would be no such thing as socialism. It is because capitalism cannot do this; because it is a necessary part of capitalist production for profit that one-third of the available force of workers be kept in constant unemployment; because as a result of capitalist exploitation millions of people are poverty stricken; because children are mercilessly ground into gold in the capitalist race for profits; because the lot of average workingman under capitalism is a constant struggle to get the necessities for a mere living; it is because of these things that socialism is growing. Capitalism cannot give economic security and comfort to the great rank and file of the workers. Socialism can, and, therefore, capitalism must give way to the industrial democracy.

The finger of a nation's scorn has been lately pointed at Adams County, Ohio, because of the wholesale confessions of people who sold their votes. Ohio is not alone in its shame. The Grand Jury at Danville, Illnois, the home of J. G. Cannon, speaker of the House of Congress, has unearthed bribery that makes the Adams County scandal look like two bits. The close friends and lieutenants of Cannon are implicated in the bribery. Socialists do not rejoice over this new disclosure of debauchery. It is nothing new. It only confirms the knowledge which all who study condition have had that the social, commercial and political systems now in power are rotten to the core. The conviction and punishment of a lot of bribe takers or even the punishment of the "men higher up" will not lift any of the burden from the shoulders of the producers. Socialists do not seek vengeance on violators of the laws. They seek to inaugurate an industrial republic in which there will be no chance for political graft.

Dr. Kotoku, his wife and ten other persons were executed at Tokio, Japan, last Tuesday for an alleged conspiracy against the life of the emperor. The trials were held in secret and counsel denied the prisoners. The dispatches allude to the victims of the government's wrath as anarchists. Enough is known upon which to base the statement that they were simply protestants against the greed of the ruling class in Japan. Dr. Kotoku and his wife were Socialists and several others were scholars and students of modern tendencies. Our comrades have passed into the silence of the ages past. Their deaths will only hasten the dawn of a new day in the Orient.

The State Journal ran a story on its first page one day this week with the startling headline in big type "Rich Man In Penitentiary." This is so unusual as to be really sensational.

Warren Not In Jail.

When The Socialist went to press Fred D. Warren was still at Girard, Kansas, and the cell in the Fort Scott prison intended for him is unoccupied. The news comes from Washington, that President Taft, at the request of Congressman Campbell of Kansas, has asked for the papers in the Warren case. The congressman asks for the pardon of Warren. Comrade Warren sends word that he seeks no pardon, he demands vindication. If the President issues a pardon without Warren's request, it means vindication. The powers that be now realize that the most monumental mistake they have made in this century, was the conviction of Fred D. Warren on a trumped up charge supported by false witnesses. The storm of protest that has arisen all over the nation has had its effect. Here is Comrade Warren's manly statement:

"I have violated no law. Only the guilty ask for pardon. I have not asked nor shall I ask for pardon. My indictment, conviction and sentence is the result of political persecution. This is plain to all familiar with the circumstances and admitted by everyone but the members of the courts through which this case has dragged its weary way for nearly four years. This persecution had for its inspiration the suppression of the Appeal to Reason, whch has for more than a decade waged relentless war on corrupt capitalism and its servile judges."

David Graham Phillips, the famous novelist, was fatally shot by F. C. Goldsborough, an eccentric musician in New York last Sunday. The murderer then killed himself. The first dispatches in the daily papers spoke of Goldsborough as a Socialist. Later it was found that this was untrue, but that makes no difference to the capitalistic papers. Even if the slayer of Phillips had been a Socialist that proved nothing against Socialism. Harry Thaw, who killed White, was a Republican. Will the

An old pension for workers, may become a reality if a bill which Congressman Victor L. Berger, the first Socialist ever elected to that high position, is enacted into law.

That the government lawmakers will be called upon to place themselves on record on the proposition is assured, for Berger expects to introduce such a pension plan immediately he takes his seat in congress. Comrade Berger will place members of the next Congress on record on a good many questions before the session adjourns.

That distinguished Columbus citizen, Robert Wolf, is devoting much of his time to making things pleasant for members of the Ohio legislature. Robert is very much interested in the eight hour law for women, the employers' liability law and other measures proposed for the benefit of the toilers. He is forninst them all and, with others of the Master-Class, will seek to defeat all such legislation or else allow the bills to pass in such form as to make them of no effect. Just keep your eyes on the cunning lobbyists like Wolf.

George Harper, who is working overtime to manufacture campaign material for his mayoralty fight, was sat down upon awful hard at council meeting Monday night. He introduced a resolution asking for detailed information in regard to the municipal electric light plant but could not get a second to his motion. The blow almost killed Georgie, who had about convinced himself that he was the whole works. This is a hard cruel world even for candidates who are able to open headquarters nine months before election as Harper has done.

It is announced from New York that the corporations are cutting down some of the fancy salaries heretofore paid the big men of the trusts. The United States Steel corporation will only pay its new president $50,000 a year, instead of the $100,000 paid W. E. Corey who resigned. The Equitable Insurance trustees offer $50,000 to the successor of Paul Morton, deceased, who received $80,000 annually. There seems to be scabs even in high finance.

Why should one man have to work for another? One hog doesn't have to root for another. Yet it is sometimes said that men are hoggish in their dealings with one another. We apologize to the hog for our part of this system of human industry.

Wisconsin also has a "Lorimer case." Senator Stephenson is suspected of having bought his seat, but so far the Socialist in the Wisconsin legslature have not been able to swell their bank accounts or buy costly mansions.

Because of the failure of Roosevelt's suit against it, the World continues to trumpet about the "freedom of the press" being safeguarded. But in that other and more important case, the Fred Warren case, the World is silent. Yet, until Warren is free—and not on a technicality, either—there is no such a thing as the freedom of the press being vindicated or maintained.

Is This The Method of Promoting Peace After Two Thousand Years of Christ's Teachings?

During a recent discussion of the Boy Scout movement, a question arose as to whether the Scouts were drilled with arms and also to the real purpose of the movement.

There are probably many persons interested in learning the truth; hence this article.

The information given therein has been gained by a study of the official literature of the movement. It may not be generally known that there are two distinct organizations of Scouts in the United States, namely: The Boy Scouts of America, and the American Boy Scouts.

The similarity of names is rather confusing. The two organizations, though, backed by different men, are governed by laws which are identical in meaning, and with very few exceptions, in phraseology. The "Scouts" Oath," by which the boys are sworn to obey the "Scout law," is the same in both organizations. Both are sworn to obey their employers, and to "stick to them through thick and thin against one who is their enemy or who even TALKS BADLY about them."

Both are sworn to obey all orders, no matter how repugnant they may be, "without question." In Bulletin No. 5 of the Boy Scouts of America, under the general heading "Subjects of Instruction," we find eight sub-divisions. No. 5 is headed "Chivalry," which includes loyalty to employers. No. 6, "Patriotism." Under this head we find "Marksmanship. Helping Police, etc." General Sir Robert Baden-Powell says: "One form of bad citizenship among many is evident around us on the part of the people themselves, who not having even thought of the future, or of their country allow themselves to come under the despotic power of a few professional agitators whose living depends on agitating (whether it is needed or not); and, blinded by the talk of these men, they attack the hand that finds the money, until they force employers to spend fortunes, either in devising machinery that will take their place and not go on strike, or in removing their business to other countries, leaving ..... a mass of people unemployed and starving, and unable to provide for the crowds of children they continue improvidently to bring in the world."

Right here we would like to ask Sir Robert Baden-Powell how many instances he has known where the business of the employer was carried on for the benefit of his employees? Can he cite a single case where a manufacturer has hesitated to install money-saving machinery because to do so would displace men and cause their families to suffer? Is it not a fact that human labor is employed only when it is cheaper than machinery? Do employers ever hesitate to close their mills or to remove them even when there is no strike, and leave "a mass of unemployed and starving people" rather than to operate them without profit?

Notice, he (Sir Robert) speaks of the employer as "the hand that finds the money." Finds it! Not earns it, that's true enough. The Boy Scouts of America is associated with the Y. M. C. A., William H. Taft (Injunction Bill) is honorary president. Colonel Theodore Roosevelt—under whose administration, and with whose approval three innocent working men were kidnaped, railroaded to prison and but for public opinion (roused by Socialist papers), would have been hanged—Theodore Roosevelt is honorary vice president.

Notice the combination and judge for yourself if we have any reason for our opinion that the Boy Scout movement is not what its backers would have the working class believe, but rather a shrewd scheme to train the boys of the working class in the way the capitalist class "would have them go." Here is the combination: Loyalty to employer, an oath to obey without question, Injunction Bill, Teddy, hunter of working men's scalps; Baden-Powell of the English movement and officers of the United States army and navy whose profession is wholesale murder. "Helping the police, etc."

Think what the police are used for in every place where a strike is on and then let your boy become a "Scout"—if you are fool enough.

The "American Boy Scout" movement "was originated and backed up by William Randolph Hearst and his newspapers throughout the country."

"Recently, because of irregularities in the collection of moneys, Mr. Hearst resigned from the presidency, and his resignation was followed by nearly all of the prominent men who were backing the movement." In reply to the question "are the boys drilled with arms?" James F. McGrath, managing director, says: "Our boys are drilled in the United States infantry tactics as laid down in the United States Infantry Manual and where practicable the boys are drilled in the manuals of arms."

"In this way the boys can obtain a high degree of proficiency in the manual of arms. Our officers also use the sword and are instructed in the use of the same." The New York American, October 2, 1910, describing a parade of American Boy Scouts, says: "There were Scouts who drilled with arms with the alertness and precision of West Pointers." The same paper (October 9) in referring to a Columbus day celebration to be held in Brooklyn, again mentions "Scouts under arms." Under date December 4th, "The Seventh Dismounted Cavalry of American Boy Scouts has been designated by national headquarters to represent the organization in a drill with arms. This organization claims to be as proficient as our own famed West Point cadets."

The Boy Scouts of America disclaim the use of arms, yet in Bulletin No. 5, under the heading, "Marksmen," we read: "A Scout must pass the following tests for miniature rifle shooting from any position," etc.

There are many good things in the Scout movement, but that oath of loyalty to employers to the extent of refusing to allow any one to even so much as criticise them, and to do their bidding "at once and without question" is a pill that needs a lot of sugar-coating to make it palatable. The attractive things in the Scout movement are the sugar coating of the pill.

What is to hinder the working class organizing a Scout movement of its own, with all the good points of the existing movement, and instead of the oath of fealty to an employer (whose only interest in them is to make a profit on their labor), have the boys bind themselves to be true to their own class—the working class? Is there a working man in Columbus who will take this up and organize the boys? Surely there is some one among us who is capable of doing this.

It would be interesting to note what would happen if the working class, or Socialists, organized a Scout movement and drilled with arms. Would the capitalists class take our word for it that it was not a military organization? Would they feel no alarm? It is a safe bet that immediate steps would be taken to nip such an organization in the bud.

Supreme Court Packed by Trusts.

LAWYER SAYS REPORTERS GAVE INFORMATION TO SILENT NEWSPAPERS.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Jan. 23.—"It was commonly talked by Washington newspaper men, and so reported to their offices, that the United States Supreme Court was to be packed for the next twenty-five years in the interests of the corporations."

The above statement was made in this city by Charles F. Adams, a Brooklyn lawyer, during an address before the Hungry Club, which is composed of business men who take lunch together.

"Whether the constitution follows the flag or not, the Supreme Court will always follow the election returns," was one of the points in the speech of Adams, whose subject was "Government of Judges."

Adams said it had become a pastime of judges to write opinions. These, he said, were no part of the legal determination of the case, but only some reasons advanced by the judge to explain the order. "I will venture to say," continued Mr. Adams, "that at any given time in the last one hundred years there have been better constitutional lawyers in the United States senate than in the Supreme Court. Their opinions have been of more value to the people, and their advice in the making of laws more valuable than the judges' interpretation of them."

The speaker sketched various opinions on the income tax case. He said the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York had passed a resolution to pay the income tax, and then some one enjoined them from doing it. It was a plain case of collusion, he said, and a government of men rather than a government of laws.

Patronize business men who advertise in The Socialist.

One of the most singular things about the working class is their readiness to fight everybody's battles but their own. Just observe them when a capitalist war is brought on, or on election day, see them fight and vote for a capitalist ticket; just as earnestly as if they actually stood to lose something in either event.

The international character of the Socialist movement is realized somewhat when the Voice of Labour, devoted to "Socialism, Industrialism, Unionism and Politics" reaches our table from Johannesburg, South Africa. It is a sixteen page publication with four columns to the page and is intensely English, but just as intensely radical. The banner of Socialism floats on every continent and almost every nation of the world.

Tax Dodgers Fight Socialist Assessors.

MILWAUKEE CAPITALISTS GET INJUNCTION AGAINTS SPECIAL PROBERS.

MILWAUKEE, Jan. 23.—Rich men who have dodged their taxes in this city with impunity under capitalist administrations have decided not to permit a squashing of the graft without a fight. They have enjoined the Socialist city officials from uncovering their thefts by the use of experts specially employed for that purpose.

The work of the tax ferrets was enjoined last Saturday, the order being issued by Court Commissioner F. Harper on the request of Paul D. Carpenter and Benjamin Poss, who handle the case on behalf of Charles F. A. Hintze.

Make Specious Plea.

The document is a voluminous one. It is directed against each of the aldermen as members of the common council, the president of the common council, the mayor, city attorney, city treasurer, city clerk, tax commissioner, each of the assessors and Workman & Higgs.

The injunction order falls into two parts. First, the proper city officers are restrained from entering into the contract, if they have not already done so, with Workman & Higgs, and second, if they have done so, they are to do nothing toward carrying it out.

Hintze appears as a taxpayer for himself and "others similarly situated," making the proceeding a taxpayers' action. It sets forth the various titles of the city officials and cites that Workman & Higgs are nonresidents of the city and of the state.

It sets forth the laws of the state relating to the duties of the several city officials, and relating to the assessment and collection of taxes by the city, not only for city purposes but as an agency for the county and state. It explains the duties and powers of the tax commissioner and of the assessors, the board of review and the board of appraisers.

THE AMALGAMATED ASSOCIATION OF IRON, STEEL AND TIN WORKERS.

The committe appointed to examine the sales sheets of the Republic Iron and Steel Company and the Union Rolling Mill Company for the 60-day period ending December 31, 1910, found that the price of boiling and finishing mills for the months of January and February, 1911, will be based on the 1.25 cent card rate.

Sheet and tin plates rates will be on base match.

KILLING IN WAR AND INDUSTRY.

"The killing of men as the mode of settling international disputes is earth's greatest disgrace."

So says Andrew Carnegie to a chorus of cackling applause from a well-tuned press.

I would not seem to interpose a discordant note on this pleasant occasion, but a few questions seem pertinent.

What kind of a disgrace is it to kill men as a mode of making profits?

What kind of disgrace is it to compel men to work under the conditions that prevail in the Carnegie works at Pittsburg and Homestead?

What kind of a disgrace is it to draw interest and dividends from such conditions?

What kind of a mind is it that can be horrified at the barbarities of war and view with complacent indifference the barbarities of the present industrial system, infinitely worse than any war?

How can it be any worse to be mangled on the battlefield than to be mangled by a rolling mill or crushed by a steel beam or burned at the forge?

Why is it terrible to have a man's arm cut off by a cannon ball and not terrible to have it cut off by saw or crushed in a press?

Mr. Carnegie and his sappy kind fill the world with pratings about the horrors of war. I am looking for somebody that will make a noise just as loud and insistent about the horrors of peace. If we are going into the horror business let us have both kinds. And I move to begin with the horrors of the iron and steel industry from which Mr. Carnegie gets his income and his opportunity to preach about peace. I am not much of a scene painter myself, but I will engage to produce before Mr. Carnegie some witnesses about the horrors of peace that will make all his horrors of war look like a child's book of fairy tales.

It does seem as if we had heard about enough of the Carnegie brand of bosh—from that particular source. If the man really wants to stop human slaughter why on earth doesn't he begin in his own mills?—Charles Edward Russell.

We Socialists say that the wage system must be abolished; that as all the wealth is created by the workers, it should belong to the workers; and, to do that and that this may be accomplished, Socialists to a man stand for the collective ownership of the tools of production and the democratic management of them.

THE SCHOOL EXTENSION MOVEMENT.

The Fourth of a Series of Four Articles by E. S. Martin.
Director of Public Recreation, Columbus, Ohio.

ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF SCHOOL EXTENSION SOCIETY.

The School Extension movement was started in Columbus in the fall of 1906, by Dr. F. A. McKenzie of the Sociology Department of the State University.

The objects of the Society are:

1. To widen the scope and meaning of education, both physical and mental.

2. To emphasize the value and importance of education, and its power to secure both equality of opportunity and democracy.

3. To center community interests in the school house, thereby strengthening the home by uniting parents and children in a common endeavor.

During the winters of 1906—1907 and of 1907—1908, the work was centered and developed in the Medary Avenue School. In the fall of 1908 the Chamber of Commerce, through the Charities and Corrections Committee, lent some assistance in gaining from the Board of Education permission to use the Front Street School Building for the purposes of the Society. This building was opened in January 1909, and night school held five nights a week from 7 to 9, the Board of Education paying the salary of the teacher. Some athletic work was carried on at the same time with both boys and girls. The work at the Medary Avenue center continued during this winter also.

In the summer and fall of 1909 a co-operative organization was formed including the several playground organizations and the School Extension Society, to unite in raising funds and in employing a single director for all the indoor and outdoor activities. The director began his work February 1, 1910. Before his appointment the work at the Front Street School had been given up owing to change in the plans of the Board of Education, but in January the Reeb Avenue building in the South Side factory district was opened as a social center, to continue until the first of June, when indoor work, both here and at the Medary Avenue building, ceased for the season. The work of the School Extension Society thus far has been largely educational in developing a public sentiment sufficiently strong to back the Board of Education and other city officials in promoting the general educational activities of the city.

The prospects for the present year are bright, and there seems to be every reason for the natural growth and development of the School House Social Center Movement throughout the city.

PHYSICAL WORK FOR BOYS.

The physical work of the boys consists of formal gymnastics, freehand, wand, dumb bell exercises, and marching. Basket ball and volley ball with other team games furnishes wholesome recreation. The library and reading rooms under the supervision of a committee, consisting of Misses Allis and Wilkison of Columbus School for Girls and Miss Murray, furnishes the boys and girls opportunity for study and reading. Last season an average of 65 per cent of all boys attending the Reeb Avenue center were interested in this work chiefly through the story hour conducted each evening. The reading room was also used for quiet games by those who did not care to read. Two boys clubs were conducted, one for boys under sixteen years of age and one for those over sixteen. These clubs conduct their own meetings, and carried out literary programs in some cases.

Classes for foreigners are conducted two evenings per week under the direction of the Board of Education. The great value of this feature of the work cannot be over-estimated, it being a necessary step toward the Americanization and assimilation of the foreign population, which is destined to be come an integral part of our body social and politic.

GIRL'S ACTIVITIES.

The work for girls is organized with the idea of a social evening once a week, as well as gymnasium for physical work. The activity of the gymnasium, the rythm of the folk dancing and singing games, the influence of sympathetic leaders appeals to the girls and they are begging to have the building open oftener. Not only these activities, but the domestic arts appeals to them, and many girls who were utterly unable to sew made good use of the opportunities afforded last year.

THE ADULT WORK.

Many a man is safe only when at work. When he is too engrossed in his task to think of himself. He is not discontented and hence not unhappy. But when he comes home from his labor and finds nothing congenial to occupy his mind, he begins to brood over his lot and is in danger of losing heart, and once having lost heart, he soon loses everything. But imagine this same man having a taste for reading good books and how different his life might be. Many a home is deserted after dark because it is a dull home; and a dull home is never a happy home. If the school for adults will stimulate interest in and cultivate a taste for reading wholesome literature it cannot but prove the greatest blessing to the American home.

Nor will the child be the least benefitted by such an extension of the school to his parents. How many children fail for no other reason than that their parents are neither in sympathy with nor responsive to the appeals made for the child by the school or settlement. In order to make the work of the latter effective, the home must be brought into harmony with them and that will be accomplished only when the atmosphere pervading the home will be as stimulating and refining as that of the school and social settlement.

In view of these facts, the School Extension has decided to assume this larger work of extending the school instruction and influence to the adult. As a beginning we hope to have at least four centers, located in different parts of the city, where classes are to be taught such branches of study as will be most useful and interesting. As the idea takes a firmer hold on the minds of the people and the benefits of this work become apparent, as we trust they soon will, other such schools will be opened and the branches of study increased. We cordially invite all to co-operate. Come and help us make better citizens, happier homes and a more perfect humanity.

The adult work is in charge of a committee of which Rabbi Jos. S. Kornfeld is chairman. One hundred lectures on topics of vital interest are arranged.

Notes From Wisconsin.

A Socialist official often finds some of his duties far from pleasant. This has been the experience of the Social-Democratic sheriff of Milwaukee County, who entered his office with the beginning of the new year.

One of the duties of the sheriff's office is to seize furniture bought on the installment plan, which is forfeited because the payments have not been kept up. One of the new Social-Democratic deputy sheriffs was sent out last week, on an errand of this sort. He soon telephoned in that the family from whom he must take the furniture was in distress, that the father of the family had been suffering from typhoid fever and had been out of work for many weeks. The Socialist deputy said he would rather throw up his position than to seize this furniture.

The sequel of the story was that the Social-Democratic sheriff went down into his own pocket, and the furniture was saved to the needy family.

Now here arises a very serious problem. Given the present system, which may not be abolished this year nor next year, and there must be "down and outs," men and women physically, mentally or morally unfit to compete with their stronger fellows. What shall we do with them?

Shall we leave the offices touching the lives of these poor people in the hands of hard and dishonest old party politicians?

Or shall we fill these offices with Socialist who will mitigate as far as possible the application of the system to these unfortunates?

The unfortunates themselves would certainly answer the latter question in the affirmative. When the Social-Democrats carried Milwaukee County, among the mass of congratulations received, one of the most touching was from the prisoners in the jail. They reached their hands through the gratings and eagerly shook hands with the new Socialist sheriff, expressing their gratification at his election. And in fact they had cause to be pleased. Our Socialist sheriff is giving the prisoners better food than they had under old party rule. He has abolished the grafting system by which the sheriff could line his own pockets at the expense of the fare of his prisoners. In many ways, they are more humanely treated, as for instance, they are not subjected to the humiliation of handcuffs when taken to court.

So long as the system turns out these delinquents and deficients, it is better that they should be in the hands of those who will treat them like fellowmen.

The Milwaukee Social - Democrats have met a heavy loss in the death of our Comrade, Alderman Sultaire. For man years he had been equally active in the Socialist movement and in trades union circles. A machinist by trade, he was a fine type of the workingman in politics. His death was deeply felt by his comrades.

It will now be necessary at the spring election to fill the vacancy caused by his death. School directors and judges will also be elected at the same time. It is much to be hoped that Milwaukee will n w secure Socialist judges. This has become a real necessity for the working class of Milwaukee. The election will take place in April.

E. H. THOMAS,
State Secretary.

News From the National Socialist Headquarters.

The National Executive Committee is now voting upon a motion authorising Comrade Hillquit to prepare a statement concerning the Keir Hardie-Vaillant resolution, upon which an expression has been requested by the International Socialist Bureau.

The Socialists of Fallen, Nevada, desire to get into communication with an all-round printer and newspaper man, address: J. E. Worden, Secretary.

At a special election, held Jan. 14th, in Oil City, Pa., the following Comrades were elected over the combined opposition of the old parties: C. E. Martin, selected council; A. G. Felck, common council; N. G. English and W. B. Wilson, school controllers.

Comrade J. H. Dunbar, member of the National Committee for the State of Vermont since August, 1907, died suddenly of heart disease at his home in North Hartland, on Dec. 25th. The Comrades of Vermont will greatly miss the services of Comrade Dunbar who has long been active in the work in that state.

A referendum is now in progress for the election of his successor. Comrade Mary B. Sanford, of Bennington Center, has been re-elected to the office of State Secretary.

"The Masses," a monthly magazine devoted to the interests of the working people appeared with the initiated number dated, January 1911.

The purpose and scope of the magazine may be best understood by noting the names of some of the capable contributors and their subjects, as follows: "The American Co-operative Movement", by Wm. J. Ghent; "Must It Be So," by Leo Tolstoi; "United in Buying as in Selling," by Eugene Wood; "The Tendencies of German Socialism," by Paul Louis; "The Increased Cost of Living," by Gustavus Meyers. The publication office of "The Masses" al located at 112 East 19th St., New York.

By recent referendum, Frank H. Streine, Dumfries Ave., Ft. Thomas, Ky., has been elected a member of the National Committee, and Walter Lanferslek, 5th and York Sts., Newport, has been re-elected as State Secretary.

The Russian Agitation Bureau of the Socialist party has issued two postal cards of general interest, "Finland and the Two Headed Eagle" and "Bloody Sunday, Jan. 22, 1905, Petersburg". The proceeds will go to raise funds for organising and propaganda work among the Russians in American. The price of these cards is 3 cents each in any quantity over five. Order from the Russian Agitation Bureau, 180 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

It will be remembered that a few years ago we exposed a man named John Basil Barnhill, who was attempting to exploit the Socialist movement, under the guise of wanting to debate with the Socialists. Devoid of a following himself his plan was to secure debates and make arrangements to divide the gate receipts, the Socialists supplying the audience. This man, no doubt finding that he has been thoroughly discredited, so that his own name has no weight, is now parading under the name of the Anti-Socialist League, of Xenia, Ill. He is publishing a communication in such papers as will publish it, entitled, "Why Are Socialists Afraid to Debate?" As everybody knows the Socialists are anxious to debate and are always willing to give their opponents the advantage in order to induce them to enter into a discussion. But this man is not opposing Socialism on principle. He is in it for revenue only. A number of our speakers have had debates with him and have found him the easiest mark imaginable.

COURAGE!

Courage, brother, Courage, Courage,
As the storms of trouble break—
Gird your armor for the battle,
Show the world that you're awake.
Slavery days are dead and gone, so,—
Why do you remain asleep?
Listen to the warning sound, then,
For the road is long and steep.
Courage, for behind the darkness,
There will come a brighter day.
"Labor's" Sun, will shine and drive, soon,
All the "Capitalist Clouds" away.
Don't be found a running coward—
Fearing either night or day.
Fight, until the Victory's won, and
All the clouds, have rolled away.

About the Chicken Tax.

Columbus, O., Jan. 28, 1911.
Editor of Socialist,

I understand there is to be a law passed (city law) to compel all who own chickens to pay $1.00 tax on them, that is in our City, the city of Columbus. "Where Mayor Geo. Marshall rules and reigns." Our mayor told us before he was elected that he would do everything in his power to save the poor a dollar—"Yes, a Penny." Now we all know the "RICH." of Columbus do not own chickens, and even if they did—that law would not be passed—they do not have to own chickens. They can afford to pay 50 cents per dozen for eggs, that is they settle for their 30 cent eggs, 40 cent Porterhouse steak and etc., but we have to pay for it in a round about way, that they at one time thought we would never detect. But thanks to the Socialist party for opening our eyes and urging us on. Thanks to some of the Pioneer Comrades for sacrificing their homes, children and selves for the sake of free speech to enlighten the great common people of America—to warn them of the repeated grafts that were and are going on yet. "Now Comrades it is up to us." There is not a member of the Socialist party but what can show some poor fellow the right road. Therefore I would suggest that each one of us try and show some of our fellow workman when he is being robbed each day of enough to keep him in clothes, and as to the chicken tax I guess we can stand it until November election. But remember I am fighting that so-called chicken tax, (Graft). I urge you all to fight it.

Respectfully,
G. H. Lusk,
173 Hayden Avenue.

The Question Box.

When private enterprises are absorbed, under Socialism, will their owners be paid for them? How will this apply to those who have treated their employer well?—D. W. S.

What will be done when Socialism is established, most probably, will be determined by the people at that time. There are many who will take part in that reorganization that now either are indifferent or are opposed to the change, and it would be as impractical as wrong, to try to settle the question in advance.

It is pertinent to state, however, that there is a growing conviction that the workers already have paid for the wealth invested in private enterprises. Inasmuch as labor has produced all wealth, the laborers feel that all wealth belongs to them, notwithstanding the fact that most of it has been withheld from them.

There used to be a reckless old brood sow on the farm that made a business of upsetting beehives to get honey. She was persistent in such efforts, but the bees always drove her away before she had done much damage. The human workers don't sting the capitalists who upset their little hives of industry and thus reduce them to wage slavery. They have the ballot to sting with, but don't have the courage to use it. If the bees had been as kind to the sow as the workers are to the capitalists they would have let her come every day and take all of their surplus product. Then, if the bees had been as conscientious as our human workers, and the sow as much of a hog as our capitalists, the cloven hoofed animal would have sold the honey back to the starving workers at Christmas time.

If you were to decide the question you have asked, would you advise the workers to buy stolen goods—goods that not only had been stolen, but stolen from the very ones who are expected to buy them?

Those employers who have been exceptionally kind to empolyes might fare much the same as a highwayman who had been exceptionally polite in his manner in holding up wayfarers. It is no doubt more pleasant to be robbed in a genteel way than in a boorish fashion; but matters of etiquette have little hearing on problems in economics.

An investigation of the facts show that it is the capitalist who has enenjoyed the exceptionally kind treatment in that he did not get stung when he began to exploit labor and has been permitted systematically to rob the hive of human industry for centuries.

But if the few who have taken the honey can make the working class think the robber should be paid for stolen goods, perhaps the workers will be as kind as ever and pay for whatever they already have earned.

In France the Socialists control more than one hundred cities. In the great city of Lille they have established a free marriage service. Since this measure was passed thousands of marriages have been sanctioned that would otherwise never have been legalized. In France the fees of the clergy have been so exhorbitant that many of the people merely made an announcement to their friends and do without legalization. In Socialist cities children do not go hungry to classes and faint in school from want of food, as frequently occurs in American cities.

Coming Events Cast Their Shadows Before Them

If our intellectual part is common, the reason also, in respect of which we are rational beings, is common; if this is so, common also is the reason which commands us what to do, and what not to do; if this is so, there is a common law also; if this is so, we are fellow-citizens; if this is so, we are members of some political community; if this is so, the world is in a manner a state. For of what other common political community will any one say that the whole human race are members?—Marcus Aurelius Antoninus.

Under the threat of withdrawal from the parent body, the United Mine Workers of America, compelled the American Federation of Labor to admit to membership, the Western Federation of Miners.

The U. M. of A. control the coal mining industry, the W. F. of M. confines its efforts to the metallic regions.

The A. F. of L. stands for the principles of trade autonomy, (right of self government,) while the Miners, Printers, Brewery Worker's Unions, stand for industrialism, a state of society marked the predominance of industrial pursuits.

This does not signify an internal conflict, but it does indicate an external awakening of the world's workers, judging from the standpoint of organization.

The increasing wealth of the few, and the increasing poverty of many has caused the economic pendulum to vibrate. The question is of vast importance in the social movement of the human race, hence in Australia, England, Egypt, Germany and France, the workers are demanding justice by means of the sympathetic strike.

The recent tie-up of the French railroads was an example of its power. The question of political action failed to stem the tide of righteous indignation. The great mass rose up and demanded redress by the force of industrial stagnation. The horrors of war are tame alongside the ravages of hunger and poverty and judicial coercion. The Labor Problem today represents a captive balloon, tugging at its anchors, and each day the great monster, slips an anchor. View the beasts of the field, huddled together during a storm. The same instinct that taught the dumb brutes, teaches man the neccessity of industrial fellowship.

The Miners won a great victory for progressive laborism. The spirit of democracy has been revived. The events of the week, signify greater unity, stronger courage and a determined effort to wipe out the greed of capitalism by united efforts.

The North Market.

There is no place where sanitary regulations should be more strictly enforced than in Market houses. A visit to to the North Market in Columbus reveals conditions that are revolting to say the least. In one corner of the structure is located the men's closet, from which comes a stench that is nauseating. There is no roof to the closet and the effluvia permeates the air all through that quarter of the building. Market men say that even this place is nailed up half the time. Right at the entrance to the closet are stands where dressed poultry is exposed for sale. The women who are engaged about the market are accorded the privilege of the use of the toilet room in the janitor's office up stairs or seeking the saloons across the street. Complaints by market men seem to have no effect for "kicks" lead to the "kickers" being barred from the use of the stands. It is stated there is ample means in the market fund to provide decent sanitary conditions. It would seem that the health officer ought to make a visit to the North Market.

The market men of the city declare that there is a conspiracy on foot to cripple their trade and drive them out of business. They allege that the Wholesale and Retail Grocers' Association dislike the competition of the men and women in the stalls and are using all their influence against them.

Confidence in the capacity of the people to govern themselves gets a jolt every time we see a majority of working men, each holding in his hand the ballot of a sovereign, casting their ballots in such a way as to continue rather than break the industrial slavery under which they groan. Is a working man really qualified to vote who cannot see that supporting the Democratic and Republican parties he is taking from his needy family the major portion of what he earns and turning it over to the Morgans and Rockefellers and Carnegies?

The Corner Grocer Did It.

Charles Edward Russel in the Coming Nation.

We are by instinct and training a people much given to scientific thinking about our affairs; we take naturally to political economy and can't hardly do a thing to it. Here, for instance, is Prof. J. Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, and he has been thinking about this increase in the cost of living until he has found out all about it. So now he has told us, and we can all know the heart of the mystery and think just as he thinks.

What makes the cost of living high, the professor discovers, is the middleman; the corner grocer, you know: the butcher, the store-keeper, retail merchant and the rest of that vile crew. They pile on the price and take all the profits, hang them. It isn't the farmer; on the other hand it isn't the railroad company, nor the trust nor the banks nor Mr. Morgan, nor his express companies. What does all the harm is the corner grocer. He is such an insatiable cormorant that he makes everything dear. He may not have noticed this and you may not hve noticed it, but it is a fact. Prof. Wilson says so, and you can wager, the professor knows. Everytime. These wretched middlemen are raking off the big money. Of course they are concealing it—hiding it in their cellars, I suppose, or burying it in their backs yards, but they have it, nevertheless. They are so deceitful that they can't tell the truth about their wealth. As a matter of fact, every corner grocer is a millionaire. He pretends to be poor, but he is a millionaire. When he tells you that he has a hard time to get along and that the trust and the "chain" store and the mail order house are driving him out of business he is fooling you. But he can't fool your uncle, the professor. Not once. The professor sees through all these little tricks. He knows perfectly well that the groceryman is hoarding vast wealth and adding to it—by increasing the cost of living.

Good for the professor! As I said before you can't fool a grand thinker such as he is. Other persons imagined that the over - capitalization of the railroads and corporations, the development of the trusts and the increase in the gold supply have had something to do with the increased cost of living. Prof. Wilson has looked into all these vain imaginings and now sweeps them away. To his powerful mind they are but bosh. He knows what is the matter with us. It is that vile middleman, pushing up the prices of everything and getting enormously rich at our expense. That is what is the matter.

And now what are we going to do about it?

Again the giant-minded Wilson proves himself the man of the hour. He has his remedy all ready.

Abolish the middleman! Down with the corner grocery! Down with the abominable retailer, now fattening upon the hearts and gizzards of the people! Away with the whole detestable crew! Let the consumer buy directly from the producer and thus outwit these diabolical and piratical grocers!

That is the professor's idea of a remedy. It seems so simple that you almost wonder no one has thought of it before, but you must remember that the grandest discoveries are always the simplest when you come to look at them.

Let us proceed at once to put this noble device into practice and bring to naught the devilish wiles of the middlemen, already laughing at their victims, while they despoil us. But let us remember that he laughs best that laughs last. It is now our turn. Observe how easily under the professor's guidance we shall put these villians to rout. Do you, poor victim of your grocer's tyranny, desire a sack of flour? Go to the mill and get it. Do you wish five pounds of sugar? The refinery is just across East River in Brooklyn. Do you wish a roll of butter? Hike out for the dairy; it is only five miles up the road. Do you wish a side of bacon? Walk down to the packing house; the fresh air and balmy odors will do you good. So will the packing house. Do you want some oil? There's the tank down by the railroad station. Soap? Get it at the factory. Potatoes? Take your trusty basket on your arm and walk out to Farmer Jones'. A ten-mile walk is just the thing for the sedentary.

Buy of the producer. That's the idea. Buy of the producer and watch the price of pork chops slide down. It's a wonderful discovery, Prof. Wilson. We are pretty good thinkers when it comes to subjects of this kind, but not up to you. Truly you are the hot stuff.

STRIKE COST RAIL-LIGHT $750,000 LAST YEAR.

Figures made public by Auditor Burington of the Columbus Railway and Light company after the annual meeting of the stockholders at the company offices Tuesday morning does not contain the figures separately relating to the business of the street car system, but the totals for the holding company—the Rail-Light company—shows that the strike the past summer must have cost the company in the neighborhood of $750,000.

There was a deficit for the year, for the Rail-Light company of $224,170, which was taken care of by the accumulated income account fund.

The officials of the company refused to make any statement as to the cost of the strike or the business of the street car company the past year, but made the statement that the loss during the strike would prevent the receipts of the street car company from reaching $1,750,000 by April 1, at which figure the public is, under the franchise to get eight tickets for a quarter.—The Citizen.

THIRTY THOUSANDS DEATHS IN MINES OF COUNTRY.

Bulletin Issued by National Bureau Shows High Rate of Fatalities.

The national bureau of labor in the department of commerce and labor has just published bulletin No. 90, which is a study of the fatal accidents in coal mining by Frederick L. Hoffman. It is based chiefly on the facts given by the state mine inspectors, but with much personal inquiry beside. He found that no two states carried their data in the same way, a fact that suggests strongly uniformity in this matter, so that the compilation was a task of some difficulty.

The study covers the fatal accidents of the decade ending with 1908. The number of deaths thus caused in the mines of North America in the two decades ending with that year was 28,202, or at the rate of 2.11 per thousand employes. The rate of fatalities in periods in which comparison can be made with other nations in this respect shows that it has been much higher in North America than in European countries. While it is over 2 per thousand here, it is only 1.39 in the United Kingdom, 1.35 in Austria, 1.81 in France and 2.12 in Prussia.

It is shown that while the rate for the central section of the United States — Ohio, Illinois, Kentucky and Indiana—is only 2.25, it is 6.4 in Colorado, New Mexico and Utah. In Washington and British Columbia it is 7.

The rate fluctuates from year to year, but since 1899 it has never fallen below 2. In 1907 there were 2200 lives lost. In 1908 over 700,000 men were employed in mining and there were 2782 deaths, or a rate of 3.82. It is only the great mine disasters which cause the death of hundreds, that attract general attention, but as a matter of fact such disasters take but a small percentage of the total death roll in mines. The vast majority of accidental mine deaths occur singly. Fall of coal or roofs cause the majority of deaths—46 per cent. of the deaths in a ten-year period being due to that cause. Explosions caused 25 per cent. and mine cars 13. Lack of experience has much to do with it, for of 1669 persons killed in West Virginia mines in such a period, one-fifth were men who had been working in mines less than a year.

The average age of those killed in mines in 1909 was a little less than 32 years, and the net years of life thus cut off is estimated at 34,000. Though child labor laws are being enforced, children under 16 years of age were among the killed in 1908.

Rev. Frederick Guy Strickland of Anderson, Ind., a member of the Socialist party, has been appointed one of a committee of nine on social service by the executive board of the American Christian convention. The term is four years.

It is said that indifference, prejudice and ignorance are the main barriers to the world's progress. We must know in order to act intelligently. We are not likely to know without honestly investigating? Lincoln once said: "To know but one side of a question is to be only half posted."

Brave soldiers have died on the battlefield and holy martyrs, have gone smiling to the fagot and the sword, but the children of their murderers have erected monuments to their memory.

LABOR DISFRANCHISED.

Comrade O. A. Carpenter has compiled a very valuable table showing the extent to which voters are disfranchised by residence restrictions, primar law provisions, etc., in the several states. The article first appeared in the Sunday edition of the New York Call, under date of Dec. 25, 1910.

Comrade Carpenter very distinctly points out the fact that it is the working class which is particularly discriminated against, as shown by the following quotation :

The Poll Tax and Other Qualifications.

Alabama—All poll taxes must be paid.

Arkansas—Paid up poll tax required.

Florida—Registered citizens become voters only on payment of $1 poll tax; exempt from tax after the age of fifty-five years.

Georgia—All taxes due state, county and city, including poll tax, must be paid before voting.

Louisiana—A receipt covering two years of poll tax paying must be shown; must possess $300 worth of property; must be able to read and write.

Maine—Must be able to read.

Mississippi—Must have paid poll tax two years; all poll taxes must be paid February 1, preceeding election.

Oklahoma — Grandfather clause enacted.

Pennsylvania—Paid up poll tax thirty days previous to election.

South Carolina—Poll tax must be paid six months previous to election.

Tennessee—Prepaid poll tax of $1 required.

Texas—Poll tax must be paid before voting.

Virginia — Prepayment of three years poll tax, six months before election.

Wyoming—Poll tax required.

The table shows that the Southern States are the worst governed in America. The Southern States have restricted suffrage the most. Group them together. Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolinaolina and Virginia require a residence of two years in the state, and various tests as to property, etc. It is so fixed that practically any one considered undesirable can be prevented from voting.

Then we have Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Tennessee and Texas, requiring one year's residence and placing several other restrictions in the way.

The Southern States, positively the worst in America, have by urging the fear of Negro domination securely tied the hands of both the black and white workers.

THE WOMAN'S EIGHT HOUR BILL.

That girl or woman that stands crouched up in some doorway on a dark drizzling morning or night, awainting a street car, may be occupying the position that your Wife, Daughter or Mother may some day occupy. This measure demands that women be protected. It demands the right to save the race from degenerated animalism and to regenerate with the milk of humanism.

This is the second presentation of the bill. The last time it came before the legislature, it could have fared better at the hands of Caesar's tribune. Those who live off of the labor of women and children packed the legislative chamber, intoxicated with their own power their frantic exultations reminded the supporters of the measure, of the "Feast of aStan." The same HEROD is on the ground this year surrounded by his own courtiers he will again defy the rights of womanhood.

History relates that a Queen's favorite once threw a richly embroidered cloak on the ground so that the Queen would not have to step in a muddy puddle. WATCH this measure in the HOUSE. Be there when it comes up. Inquire when it will come up, then help the women workers by asserting her demands by your presence.

IRON MOLDER'S UNION.

We were well pleased to see such a large attendance at the last meeting of No. 98. Two members were received by card. Shop committees report work good in most shops. The most interesting feature of these meetings is the general discussions on the regulation of dips and the hours of molding. At the late conference meeting the stove plate molders in general, were granted an increase of 5 per cent on the dollar. Brother Craner got 2 first and 3 prizes on his chickens at the poultry show. Brother Fackler will exhibit his chickens at the next show. Brother Fred Stinegar has accepted a position with the corn show. Stiney is "Johnny on the spot" when there is any country product on exhibition. Brother O'Neil was called to West Virginia this week.

OHIO STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR BULLETIN.

The Executive Board of the Ohio State Federation of Labor met in Columbus Thursday of last week for the purpose of taking up with the Employers' Liability Commission a bill drafted by them that will be reported to the Legislature in the near future.

The Board met with the chairman of the Commission at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and with the labor members of the commission in the evening. The Board went over the difference of the commission particularly as regards to Section one of their proposed bill, which reads as follows :

"Section 1. The State of Ohio and any County, City, Township, Village, School District thereof and any employer of labor who has paid into the State Fund the premiums provided by this Code to insure him against the liability for injuries or death caused to each and every workman employed by him, shall not be liable to respond in damages at common law or by statute for injuries to or death of workmen occurring in employment described in Section 2 and 3 of this Code, and the employee who with the knowledge that his employer has paid into the fund the premium provided by this Code and continues in the service of his employer with such knowledge shall not have nor shall his beneficiaries or dependents have any right of action aginst his employer for damages caused by injuries to or death of such employe."

The Board after thoroughly discussing the matter decided that they could not accept any section in the Workmen's Compensation law which in any waived rights to sue under the present common law or the Norris and Metzger statutory laws and as this section makes every employed workman waive his rights under these laws, they refused to sanction this section as drafted. Mr. Winans, Legislative Agent of the B. of R. T. was instructed to draft out the necessary changes desired.

Herbert Bigelow, secretary of the Direct Legislative League of Ohio and Representative Crosser of Cuyahoga County attended the meeting on behalf of the Initiative and Referendum Bill and also to plan out a general campaign for the ipitiative annd referendum in reference to the Constitutional Convention program.

The matter of electing the delegates to this Consitutional Convention as proposed by the bill of Senator Green was taken up and it was decided to ask Senator Green to insert a provision in the bill providing that nomination should be made by parties. The bill already provides that the election shall be carried on a non-partisan ballot, as there will be considerable opposition to this measure, unions should also write to their Senators asking them to vote for Senator Green's bill.

The matter of electing a legislative Agent was taken up, the labor group having reported that their members had been placed on so many committees that it was impossible for them to attend to the details of the work necessary for a Legislative Agent to do and the matter was left in the hands of President Voll and Secretary Thomas to look over available candidates and try and have some one there a week hence.

Secretary reported that donations to the Legislative Fund were being responded to very favorably by the unions and that new applications were coming in for membership nearly every day. He had hopes that the membership will nearly double itself by the time the Cleveland Convention is held. Affiliated unions and Central Bodies are urged to do everything possible to bring the unaffiliated unions into line.

TOO OBSCENE TO PUBLISH.

Reports on Conditions in Southern States Are Suppressed.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—That Secreary Nagel of the department of commerce and labor has suppressed much of the reports of agents of the labor bureau because of their revelations concerning the private lives of people in North Carolina and other Southern States, was asserted in the senate today by Senator Overman. He said some of the reports were so revolting in character that, if printed, the law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature would prohibit their transmission through the mails.

The statement folowed an inquiry by Senator Beveridge as to the publication of the investigation into the employment of women and children made a few years ago by the bureau of labor.

"It seems that some of the agents went into the mountains and took it upon themselves to investigate the private affairs of the people, when the law authorized an inquiry only into labor conditions," said Mr. Overman.

The inquiry was made at the cost of $200,000.

ONE GOOD TURN DESERVES ANOTHER.

We are given to understand that murderer Foty is still making mouse traps at the City Workhouse. Considering the number of convictions for selling cancelled tickets by street car employees, we would suggest that "Foty" be taught to make rat traps. They could be used to catch some "rat" street car employees, who apparently, try to live honest lives by stealing.

MINE WORKERS VICTORIOUS FOR INDUSTRIAL UNIONISM.

Progressive Element Controls Convention on Every Question.

MINERS' NEW OFFICERS.

John P. White, of Oskaloosa, Ia., president. Majority over Tom L. Lewis, 26,742½.

Frank J. Hayes of Springfield, Ill., re-elected vice president. Majority over E. S. McCullough, 18,376.

Edwin Perry of Oskaloosa, Ia., re-elected secretary-treasurer. Majority over William Green, 21,050.

Delegates to the American Federation of Labor were elected: John Mitchell, Spring Valley, Ill.; T. L. Lewis, Bridgeport, O.; John H. Walker, Springfield, Ill.; E. S. McCullough, Bay City, Mich.; Frank J. Hayes, Springfield, Ill.; John P. White, Oskaloosa, Ia., Duncan McDonald, Springfield, Ill.

The notable feature of the annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America in session in this city is the fact that the progressive element controls it. President Tom Lewis has been outvoted on every question for which he and his friends have contended. Delegates have been seated or unseated after strenuous fights but the "administration" has lost ground steadily. When this was written Lewis conceded his defeat for re-election by White of Iowa. The Mine Workers Friday morning last week passed a resolution demanding that the Executive Council of the A. F. of L. issue a charter to the Western Federation of Miners. Before night fall that day Gompers and his "cabinet" granted the application. President Moyer of the Western Federation was here Saturday as honored guest of the United Mine Workers.

At noon Saturday, just when the dinner hour was at hand, "Mother" Jones appeared at Memorial Hall and the boys went wild. They would not let her stop talking until nearly 1 o'clock. She was cheered as no other speaker has been cheered at this convention.

She classed the members of the United States supreme bench, bankers of Wall Street and Governor Harmon of Ohio as the real anarchists of the country.

"Governor Harmon undertook to lick the steel workers at Bridgeport and the street car men at Columbus by calling out the State troops to shoot us down, but we will down him yet," she said.

Much to the delight of her audience she advocated the calling of a general strike in Colorado, the Irwin field, the condemnation of the Civic Federation, which she termed a "gang of robbers from Wall street," and the supression of internal troubles in the U. M. W. of A.

Miss Agnes Nestor made a plea Monday for the Garment Workers of Chicago, now on strike. The officers and delegates from Illinois met Tuesday and voted $5000 to aid the Garment Workers.

The convention Wednesday voted $500 from the National treasury.

In the battles that have marked the convention thus far, it is needless to say that the Socialists who number fully 500 have lined up for progress at every point. With such leaders as Frank Hayes, vice president, John H. Walker, president of Illinois, Duncan McDonald, secretary-treasurer of Illinois, Adolph Germer of the same state, former president Van Horn of Indiana, W. H. Crawford of Ohio and others, the Socialists are making this convention one that marks an era in the history of trades unionism.

THE "WHY AND WHEREFORE."

During the car strike this heading appeared in one of our morning papers :

"BANKERS PLEDGE
$10,000 TO FUND.

With Amount Subscribed by C. of C. Total Law and Order Cash Is $12,500."

About this time the press of the city was appealing to the citizenship for funds to help the sick babies.

The Bankers as an association never contributed one cent. Recently we read a new heading !

"MILLION AND HALF
WAITING FOR TAKER.

Ben Harmon Urges Bankers to Exert Themselves to Bring Miners' Deposits Here."

Apparently the bankers have some conscientious scruples. Perhaps they realize that labor is united in times of oppression. Anyway, it would have taken a good deal of gold to have appealed for the use of that million and half dollars at this time anyhow.

BARBERS' UNION.

The Barbers had a rousing rally at Federation Hall, Wednesday evening last week. Among the speakers were J. C. Shanessy, general organizer, F. Fischer, secretary-treasurer of the International Union and J. H. Henderson.

When a judge grants an injunction against you when on strike, don't kick, but remember that you authorized him to do so. You voted for the system that creates these judges and gives them the power to knock you clean off your pins.

SOME REASONS WHY WOMEN SHOULD VOTE.

Women should vote:—

(1) Because it would help the country for them to do so. The influence that sustains the home and church is needed in the government.

(2) Because laws for the protection of homes and children would result. Women are logically more interested in legislation making for purity and moral uplift than men.

(3) Because laws which operate unjustly to women would be amended more rapidly. In all states where women vote the age of consent is high, equal pay for equal work is the rule; co-guardianship measures are passed etc.

(4) Because women are subject to the same law, both civil and criminal as men, and should therefore have a voice in saying what that law shall be.

(5) Because women are as mentally competent to exercise political opinion as men. Sex and race are unreasonable and unnatural tests for suffrage. Education should be the test. "The high schools of every state in the Union are graduating more girls than boys—often twice or three times as many." (Report of Commissioner General of Education.)

(6) Because every day women are being forced in larger numbers into the field of labor. As workingmen need the protection of a ballot so do the 6,500,000 working women of the country. A century ago few women were forced to earn their own living, today even married women are often compelled to add their abilities to help sustain their families.

(7) Because the decent, law abiding vote would be increased. Only five and one-half per cent of the prisoners confined in the prisons of the country are women.

(8) Because the women themselves need it. Women could not help becoming more broad-minded and sympathetic by an enlarging of their view point. The social slave and household drudge would see things never dreamt of in their philosophy.

(9) Because taxation without representation is tyranny. In many places women tax payers outnumber the men yet the minority have the power to say for what the majority's money will be used.

(10) Because the several million child laborers of the nation need it. Where the mothers of the land are permitted to vote you may be certain the children are protected. In Colorado where women vote, they have the greatest system of Juvenile Courts in the world.

(11) Because the practicality of women voting has been fully tested and found successful and expedient. The women vote in Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho and lately Washington. Why not in Ohio?

(12) Because it is just and right that those who bear the responsibilities of government, should also enjoy its privileges. (Lincoln.)

(13) Because the growth of dishonesty in politics shows that men have not been particularly successful in governing the land. Let the women try. When they have been given the right they have exercised it in large numbers with intelligence and ability and none of the terrible things have happened which anti-suffragists feared.

(14) Because the influence of a woman, if good at all, is good applied directly and not indirectly by personal persuasion. The argument that women are represented by fathers and brothers is absurd. What if father is a Democrat and brother a Prohibitionist and YOU are a Socialist? YOU are in no better position than if you were an unmarried orphan with no brothers.

(15) Because, in short there is no reason against it. Women are as mentally and morally competent to vote as men, need to vote as much as men, use the vote as much as men when permitted to do so, are needed in government as much as men and because only good has or could result from women voting.

ELLA JUNE PURCELL.

Painesville, Ohio: Perry farmers at their institute declared for woman's suffrage in a resolution favoring the granting of the ballot to women in Ohio on equal terms with the men.

The action was recommended to the delegate to the next constitutional convention. The resolution was adopted following an address by Mrs. Harriet Upton of Warren, Ohio, one of the foremost suffragists in the United States.

Sandusky, Ohio: In order to become better acquainted members of various women's organizations in northern and central Ohio will hold what has been christened a "reciprocity meeting" in this city under the auspices of the Sandusky Federation of Women's Clubs, which arranged the unusual function.

NORWAY: THE ONLY SOVEREIGN STATE WHERE WOMAN VOTE.

Norway boasts of an area of only 125,000 square miles and a population of but 2,500,000 souls; yet to this tiny, mountainous land belongs the distinction of being the first, and at present the only, country on the face of the globe enjoying sovereign power, to give woman the full privilege of citizenship. With this single exception, no other part of the world where the female sex has been granted the parliamentary vote—be it Wyoming, Idaho, Utah and Colorado, or Australia and New Zealand—is complete master of its political destiny, but bends its haughty head to some Federal or Imperial Suzerain. Even Finland, the only other European country besides Norway that has enfranchised its women, is not its own political master, the yoke of the Czar of all the Russians pressing heavily upon the Finns.

In addition to securing the municipal vote, the women of Norway were also given other important citizenship rights. For instance, she could sit on juries, and even act as "foreman" of a jury. She could be appointed head of a taxation committee. As a municipal voter, city councilman, juryman and member of taxation committees, the Norwegian woman has acquitted herself creditably. Her municipal vote has done a great deal to minimize the drink curse in the country, for she has taken full advantage of the local option law and has driven the dive-keepers out of business so far as it lay in her power to do so. The influence of the feminine municipal councilors has been exerted in the same direction, and also has proved instrumental in improving the sanitation of the cities and the hygienic conditions of the home. As jurymen the Norwegians have been particularly severe in cases where a member of their sex has been maltreated of assaulted, in some cases actually recommending such drastic punishment that no one can ever point to excessive emotionalism in the "weaker sex" as being a bar sinister to her giving an impartial hearing to a case in which she may be acting as a member of a jury. On taxation committee, too, the women of Norway have proved themselves to be capable and conscientious performing their duties without fear or favor.

Co-education probably has hastened the enfranchisement of the women of Norway, for all schools, from the kindergarten to the university, are open to both sexes on perfectly even terms. One of the first fruits of women's emancipation has been the opening of schools where all branches of domestic science are taught. The "kitchen schools", as they are called, now are maintained in connection with all common schools, and here the girls learn cooking. Separate schools also have been established by the State to teach all branches of housekeeping and to practically educate the wives of the peasants. The more advanced among the Norwegian women now are agitating for the founding of State schools where girls will be taught the laws of health, marriage, motherhood and the nursery, so that, grown to womanhood, they will not enter upon the duties of wife and mother without the necessary knowledge.

Many feminine voters of Norway are attending classes of political economy and lectures on civics and parliamentary law, so that they will know how to make the best use of their votes and creditably discharge their duties as jurymen, municipal councilors or members of the Storthing (the Norwegian Parliament), if they are called upon to fill any of these offices. These political positions now not only are open to Norwegian women, but they are obliged by law to accept them if they are elected by popular suffrage.

Advanced as Norway is in the matter of womankind, the institution of equal suffrage is destined to still further emancipate the Norwegian woman and insure her happiness and welfare.

SAINT NIHAL SINGH.

THE PASSING OF MARY BAKER EDDY.

Gone into the mystic silences of the shadow world beond,
Death's sunbeam touched her lightly and a glorious morning dawned.

A wonderful work has been accomplished by this great religious leader, a woman whose deep spiritual understanding of the Christ truth has made beautiful the lives of thousands of human beings. One, though not a believer in the cult she taught, must recognize the nobility of such life, and give her place along with the greatest moral teachers the world has known.

Tirelessly through many years she has given her message of love and healing forth to the world. She has rekindled in countless hearts the old faith of the early Christians,—that faith that once made the church an invincible power for good.

And to her was the promise fulfilled: "I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him and honour him. With long life will I satisfy him, and show my salvation."

SOME MATERIAL MEANS.

Breathing exercises are important for the women who want to stay young. Deep breathing and fresh air are absolutely necessary to women who wish to retain youth. Plenty of fresh air keeps the flesh firm, and the eyes bright and the cheeks rosy. These are impossible in an ill-ventilated room. Breathing over the same air is filthy, and a beauty and health destroyer.

Too many women breathe only enough to sustain life. Their short gasps because of tight clothing, do not take the place of deep, abdominal breathing which cleanses the lungs of poisonous gasses, and fills them with the life-giving oxygen which puts red corpuscles in the blood. Naturally that makes roses in the cheeks and joy in the heart.

It is fortunate that the woman who is accumulating years can wear almost any color if she allows her hair to turn white naturally. That softens the face as nothing else can, and with the soft blues, greens, white and almost any of the pastel shades can be worn with beautiful effect.

Growing old is only a matter of habit. American women have learned that this is one of the very bad habits, and they have given it up just as men do tobacco or any other objectionable thing. If they do not think of themselves as old, they will never grow old. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." That is Biblical authority for the women who wish to stay young. And so long as she follows that idea, she will retain much of the charm and beauty of youth, rounded into a lovely maturity which no youth can equal.

MAUDE MURRAY MILLER.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE NOTES.

The campaign for woman's suffrage in the State of Ohio opened in Cincinnati recently at a banquet given in honor of Mrs. Frances Squires Potter, by the College Equal Suffrage League of Cincinnnati.

Mrs. Potter is one of the National American Woman's Suffrage Association, having resigned the Deanship of the Department for Women in the University of Minnesota for the former position.

A significant fact is that the date of the banquet should have been set on the day that National Council of Women Voters of the five suffrage states had been called at Tacoma, Washington, the newest state to grant to women the right of vote by Governor Borah of Idaho.

E. L. Hitchens, representing the Ohio State Federation of Labor, was the first speaker introduced, and he pledged the support of his organization for the cause of votes for women, and promised to work actively for it. "Women," he read from a writer who had penned the words 138 years ago, "have been through the ages adored and oppressed."

Plans were discussed for the best methods of campaign to make Ohio the sixth woman suffrage state. It was agreed that no stone should be left unturned to convert the newly elected legislature to vote for a woman's suffrage amendment to the state constitution.

TOLSTOI'S ESTATE TO BE SOLD TO UNITED STATES BANKERS.

Does it not seem almost a desecration that the estates of the late Leo Tolstoi will soon pass into the hands of United States Bankers who propose thereon to erect a permanent exhibition of American agricultural machinery to demonstrate to the Russian farmers how they can produce twice the amount of crops on their lands and save labor and expense?

Could Tolstoi have foreseen this invasion of Capitalism upon the grounds whereon he worked as one of his own peasants, preached the sweet lessons of universal peace and taught the ennobling beauties of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man, he would have died protesting against the outrage with his latest breath.

Tolstoi was one with the peasant millions of Russia. He took their yoke upon him and lived their life of hardship. Plainly to him, this was the supreme lesson of life as taught by the Nazarenne; and by its living, he not only found the "perfect peace that passeth understanding", but awakened the spiritual vision of thousands until life glowed for them with a new and holier meaning.

Now the grounds whereon this illuminating prophet preached will echo to the blighting sounds of commercialism.

Is there not in all this world some holy of holies sacred from the searing trail of Capitalistic greed?

Tacoma, Washington: The first meeting of the National Council of Woman Voters called by Governor Brady has been held, and Mrs. Emma Smith Devoe, of Washington, was chosen President. Governor Brady in opening the meeting said the convention represented 400,000 enfranchised women, and that it was for them to work for the granting of similar rights to their sisters in other states.

In Virginia—that stronghold of conservatism—there has been such a demand for literature on the subject of woman's suffrage that the State Librarian has been compelled to publish a list of books, periodicals and pamphlets containing such material.

WEEKLY SERMONETTE.

"Judge not that ye be not judged."

Did you ever pass judgment on anyone, scathingly, soundly and roundly, and then feel good over it and proud of yourself? You never did. There is no art, no science, no beauty, no good in the passing of judgment upon our kind. It does not make us healthier, wealthier or any wiser.

"Judge not that ye not be judged" was not given as a threat, but laid down as a fact based upon the scientific law of the universe. Whatsoever we give forth will return again unto us. If we have judged, the full measure of that sentence will come back to rest upon our own heads. This is the law.

After all, what human being is qualified to judge another? Thorough qualification would mean an intimate knowledge of the one to be judged from his birth, and an intimate knowledge of all of his ancestors from Adam; for the act we would condemn is but the culmination of this life long heritage,—surely not sufficient evidence for a conviction at our hands.

JOKERS OF THE MENAGERIE.

In one of the cages of the zoological gardens at Central Park, there is a miscellaneous and rather incongruous collection of birds, made up, as it would seem, of the odds and ends of the feathered portion of the menagerie; for it includes such dissimilar birds as the wood-duck, the egret, the sickle-bill, a chicken with no bill at all, a crow without any tail, a dilapidated adjutant-bird, a roseate spoon-bill (which spends the greater part of its time in standing on one of its spindling legs,) a curassow, and several other equally ill-assorted fellows.

Except a sulky heron, which seemingly passes its gloomy life in nourishing a passionate hatred for the tailless crow, these chance companions associate very amicably together, bearing each others' whims and fancies with philosophy and good temper. And it must need a large supply of both those virtues to get along in so mixed a company; for each bird follows the bent of its natural habits without regard to any other consideration.

Some of the results of this condition of affairs are more amusing to the spectator than to the actors; as, when the sickle-bill becomes possessed by the idea that something of great value to him is hidden under the hen without a bill, and that he must relieve his curiosity by removing the hen. Accordingly he thrusts his long bill under that patient bird and lifts her unceremoniously out of the comfortable dust-hole she has made for herself.

Many of the pranks played in that cage are, however, so imbued with an air of conscious humor and enjoyment that it is hard to believe that they are not meditated jokes. The crow, for example, is always a funny bird; but this particular crow has the manner of a bird that knows himself to be funny and even seems to consider the loss of its tail a very laughable thing. Not that it has any appearance of laughing, but far from it. Like a professional joker of the first order, it is solemnity itself. So, too, is the adjutant-bird, which combines with the crow, to make fun for the cage. And when this incongruous pair are in a mischievous mood there is certain to be fun.

One day, when the crow was hopping about the cage in its misguided way,—misguided for lack of a tail,—it noticed the pair of pretty little wood-ducks contentedly eating some scraps of meat. The adjutant bird stood in seeming slumber, a picture of solemn ugliness. The crow skipped by the adjutant once or twice, with a knowing cock of the head, as if inviting that solemn bird to some fun; but the adjutant only opened one of its eyes in a way inexpressly sly and then shut the eye again and took no further notice of its fellow mischief-maker. For a moment the crow looked doubtfully at its big friend, well knowing the adjutant's wily ways, and then with a series of sidling hops made up to the wood-ducks, cocked its head leeringly at them, snatched a piece of meat and scurried off. The crow buried that piece and came back for more and yet more, until there was no more to be had. Then the crow returned to his buried treasures and unearthed and re-buried them very gleefully. But now it was the turn of the adjutant. It slowly stretched itself and then stalked to where the crow was making his rounds of inspection. As the crow would bury a piece of meat, the adjutant would dig it up and leave it exposed; thus undoing the work of the crow as often as the latter would perform it. And so they continued around and around the cage, the one burying, the other unearthing, and all with such droll solemnity that the spectators about the cage were kept in roars of laughter. The hilarity they caused seemed to spur on both birds, as applause inspires actors, and the feathered comedians continued their drollery for round after round.

Of course there is always fun in the monkey cage, but probably the sense of humor is not more developed in the monkey than in many other animals. The elephant, for example, can enjoy a joke as much as any animal. Mr. Meredith Nugent, an artist, tells of one of these jokes noticed by him in the zoological gardens in Paris, while he was sketching there. This elephant had made friends with the hippopotamus and was permitted to visit the latter, and it was in the inclosure for the hippopotamus that he developed a fondness for practical joking, which seemed to give him peculiar pleasure.

He would reach over the big tank when the hippopotamus was lolling in the water, suddenly catch one of the little ears of the latter with the finger of his trunk and give it so mischievous a tweak that the huge river-horse would rear out and angrily open his huge mouth. Then the hippopotamus would be upon his guard and sink out of sight, to come up again further away. But, for all his seeming annoyance, he apparently liked the fun himself; for, when he had come up to the surface quite too far away for the elephant to reach him, he would sink and try again to reappear just out of reach of the waving trunk. The elephant evinced his enjoyment of the sport, by swaying to and fro in the manner of his kind, and occasionally too, he would open his mouth in a comical resemblance to a laugh,—though it must be said that the resemblance is purely accidental, for, though the elephant may laugh he does not do it in that way.

Another joke enjoyed by this elephant was to stand over some particularly choice morsel, meant for the hippopotamus, and thus prevent him from eating it—to tease him, in fact. So great was the elephant's enjoyment of this feat that he would not only sway to express his pleasure, but would make a rumbling sound which, with the elephant, is more than anything else indicative of delight. And the vexation of the hippopotamus was as evident as the enjoyment of the elephant. The hippopotamus knew he was powerless to coerce his friend, and so he would go away and sulk until it was the pleasure of the elephant to move from the coveted food. Occasionally, however, the elephant would pretend to leave it, and then return just in time to cheat the hippopotamus.

It was an Indian elephant that betrayed a taste for fun in this instance; but in the same menagerie there in another case known, in which an African elephant showed a similar disposition. Only, in this instance, the elephant caught a tartar and was temporarily cured of his jocular attentions. The African elephant had formed a friendship for a zebra; and though the zebra was shy for some time, it yielded at last to the advances of its gigantic friend and permitted his caresses without giving way to paroxysms of fear. By and by the elephant became emboldened and grew a little rough, pulling the sensitive zebra's legs and tail and ears. One day the zebra wearied of its ponderous friend's teasing and incontinently caught one of the elephant's great flapping ears between its teeth and bit so hard and pulled so sturdily, that the elephant was fain to sue for mercy in a series of shrill trumpetings. Thereafter the big elephant was respectful as well as affectionate to the zebra.

It ought to be said in the elephant's behalf, that he is not always so fond of joking at the expense of his friends. It is a singular fact that a friend or pet seems to be a necessity to a captive elephant. In most cases that friend is selected from among the smaller animals about it. Frequently the friend is a dog belonging to the keeper, and in many instances a helpless little human baby has been selected as the object of the elephant's affection. When the elephant's chosen friend is clearly helpless, the great beast has never been known to tease or injure it, even in fun. Its tenderness with a baby is one of the most pleasing sights imaginable.—J. H. Coryell in St. Nicholas.

"Well?" asked Mrs. Nolan ominously.

Brand found the courage to complete the sentence.

"His only hope lies in an appeal—to your family's social desires"—Phyllis rose from her seat, her cheeks red with anger—"and that's the only reason he has for taking you up."

Mrs. Nolan gave a scream of wrath. Nolan himself, regretting that the unpleasant scene had occurred, rose from the settee and advanced to calm the ruffled waters, but his face was clouded. Its serious expression indicated that he was deeply concerned over the frank statements of his managing editor, and one could instinctively feel that he was convinced that Brand had spoken the truth.

CHAPTER VI.

NOLAN faced Brand.

"Come, come, Wheeler," he said. "Let's drop the subject now."

"Mr. Brand, you are forgetting your place," contributed Phyllis.

"Michael," insisted Mrs. Nolan, "are you going to let this young man ruin the whole of us? I, for one, am glad Judge Bartelmy has taken us up, and if it wasn't for the way Mr. Brand runs wild with that paper"—her voice broke—"others might." She crossed to the door at the left. "Here we've squandered money right and left and nobody would have anything to do with us. I declare I was happier poor. At least when I asked anybody to eat then they came. Look at that table in there"—she pointed—"groaning with good things to eat, and there's $100 for hothouse grapes, and nobody's touched 'em!" She picked up a bunch of grapes from a stand and began to eat them.

"Mother," laughed the husband good naturedly, "I've seen you get away with three bunches all by yourself."

"Well, I felt it was my duty not to let them go to waste." She burst into tears. "Come on, Phyllis," she managed to say, and the heartbroken mother and daughter went from the room.

"You mustn't mind what mother says," Nolan said to Brand. "She's been kind o' lonely since she came back to New York."

The editor's heart swelled with sympathy for the woman whose ambitions for herself and her daughter had caused the bitterest pain that injured pride can give. He saw that it would be difficult for her to learn that social position in a big city can be won only by skillful maneuvering, the ability to do which Mrs. Nolan apparently did not possess.

"Oh, I understand!" he answered feelingly.

Brand and Nolan went into the library to smoke. Hardly had they disappeared when Pitcher entered the drawing room as an escort for Judge Bartelmy and his daughter Judith. Brand had not erred a few minutes previous when in the same room he had pronounced the judge to be the best "handler of people" in the city. The conversation which ensued between the jurist and his daughter as they awaited their hostess well illustrated his reasons for accepting, with his daughter, Mrs. Nolan's invitation. When Pitcher had gone in search of Mrs. Nolan it was the girl who first spoke.

"Father," she said, "I want you to know that I've been to five teas this afternoon. I'm doing you a great favor to come to this one."

"Yes, my dear; I appreciate it, but social duties"—

The girl laughed shortly.

"Now, this doesn't come under the head of social duties."

"Oh, yes," the judge answered quickly, "if you view society in its broader sense. Beyond your little world is a larger one where caste is of small consequence and where all men should be of service to each other."

"But the Nolans—they certainly haven't been of service to you?" questioned the girl.

He glanced sharply at Judith.

"But I wish them to be, and, we're getting on—we're getting on."

"Their paper keeps going for you just as much as ever, father. I don't suppose one ought to mind it, but I do."

"Judith, Nolans have lived in every age in every country," pronounced the jurist. "He's a composite of anarchist and autocrat. Eventually the autocrat in him will triumph. Just now he's bounding old institutions. I, for instance, represent to him the judiciary, and he attacks me. No consequence whatever, but I'm here in defense of the United States bench. My cause is the cause of my colleagues. I tell you, Judith, I know the breed. I know how to get the venom out of his fangs. Diplomacy, my dear—diplomacy!"

Judith became enthusiastic.

"Father, I believe you would have been a great prime minister in the old days!"

The judge straightened up, smiling pleasedly at his daughter's complimentary estimate of him. "Hardly that, hardly that," he protested. He became reflective. "They were feeble old men, for a thousand years courteously moving kings and their armies like pawns on a chessboard. They were always very tactful, Judith, those princes of the past."

"Oh," she admitted, "you never fail to illustrate your point, whatever it is!"

"This doesn't come under the head of social duties."

"Just imagine," said her father, "what one of those old fellows would do in this case."

"Yes, I suppose you're right, and in the end you'll make these people see how wrong they've been about you."

"Oh, yes!" he went on confidently. "As they become accustomed to their prosperity you will find that the demogogism of their paper will be modified and ultimately vanish." He seated himself near his daughter.

"That would be a terrible blow for Wheeler, wouldn't it?" she suddenly asked.

"Wheeler! Oh, Wheeler! He's an entirely different type—the idealist, the fanatical idealist. I'm sorry. I always liked the boy. His heart's all right, but his head's all wrong, and I hope he's merely passing through a phase."

"I don't think you quite understand Wheeler, father," responded Judith, rising.

He took hold of the girl's hands.

"Oh, yes, I do! Just now he has lost himself in a labyrinth, and it will take an Ariadne to lead him out. I believe the right woman might bring him to reason." He paused significantly. Judith lowered her eyes from his. "I forgive him any annoyance he may have caused me, and I hope you will forgive him too. I want you and Wheeler to be friends again and, like the princess in the fairy stories, live happily ever after." He patted her fondly on the shoulder.

Mrs. Nolan entered the room and, aglow with excitement, greeted her guests.

"Judge Bartelmy, I hope you haven't been waiting long?" she inquired anxiously.

"Not at all."

"It is so good of you to come."

"Oh, I wouldn't permit anything to keep me away," he replied. "I've just had the pleasure of adjourning a rather important conference to be here."

This confession filled the fluttering heart of Mrs. Nolan with pure ecstasy. She could barely contain herself as she in turn greeted Judith Bartelmy.

Pitcher announced another name that appeared in the social register.

"Mr. Dupuy," he announced. He had come to keep his appointment with Nolan.

"How do you do, Mr. Dupuy?" greeted the hostess, shaking hands warmly with him. "Here's Judge Bartelmy. He's just adjourned a most important conference to come to our tea. Pitcher, tell Mr. Nolan the judge and Mr. Dupuy are waiting. Say the judge has just adjourned his court to come. Miss Bartelmy, Phyllis will be so delighted to see you." She grasped Judith's arm and led her to a door, speaking rapidly as she did so. "Phyllis wants to show you her new gown Quinlan brought over from Paris. Very smart effect, but $450, and you could hold it in the palm of your two hands—a rag!"

"An amusing character, our hostess," commented Bartelmy dryly to Dupuy.

"Yes; she seems very appreciative of your daughter's visit."

"Well," decisively, "she certainly ought to be."

"I suppose we shall see it in the Advance tomorrow," suggested Dupuy.

"Oh, of course!" Bartelmy laughed amusedly.

"By the way," remarked Dupuy, "did you see the evening papers?"

A serious look came into Bartelmy's face as he said:

"I glanced over them on my way uptown, and their accounts of my decision this morning are not at all objectionable."

"No blood drawn," said Dupuy reassuringly. "A little surprising, too, for the Lansing Iron people have been in pretty bad odor with the public ever since the receivership matter last year."

"That was the beginning of all these attacks upon me. I hope the morning papers will treat me fairly."

"Oh, there will be no trouble about them. They have not investigated the matter thoroughly enough yet, of course, excepting the Advance. But you did just the right thing today to bring Miss Judith."

Bartelmy was showing not the slightest hesitancy at using his beautiful and accomplished daughter as a decoy in his plottings. In the first place, he desired that she should marry Wheeler Brand, hoping that the young reformer's zeal against him would disappear; secondly, by prevailing on her to pay attention socially to the Nolan family he was confident that the owner of the Advance would capitulate and become his friend. As for Judith, she little comprehended the entire significance of her father's attitude, and if she had, her frank, genuine nature, which revolted at trickery and deceit, would not have permitted her to continue to do his bidding. She admired and loved her father.

She knew that her mother before her had aided her father in his work and ambitions to a considerable extent, and now that her mother was no longer alive she felt it her duty to fill her place in every possible way. After all, she had only a young woman's knowledge of the ways of men in the business and professional world, and she could discern in the attacks on her father nothing beyond what he himself had taught her to believe—that they were the efforts of envious men or ignorant reformers or misguided fanatics, who assailed him entirely without just cause. However, it would seem that the judge would in any event have attempted to conceal from others his motives for procuring the presence of Judith at the Nolan home on this day. It would seem, no matter how low he had sunk, that he would have denied that he had ever employed her unsuspectingly as a decoy on other occasions. That was the least this father could do for his daughter. But he made no attempt to protect her reputation, at any rate to Dupuy, for in answer to the lawyer lobbyist's remark that he had done "just the right thing to bring Miss Judith today" he replied with his characteristic coolness:

"Oh, in matters of this kind my daughter is of the greatest help to me!" After a moment he continued, "I don't at all like your idea, Dupuy, of my proposing this man Nolan at the club."

"That's our trump card," insisted the other. "Every man has his price—even this young Brand if we could only find out what it is."

CHAPTER VII.

BRAND and Nolan came out of the library after their smoke and were surprised to find Judge Bartelmy and Dupuy in the drawing room. Brand did not appear enthusiastic at the circumstance and, nodding stiffly in the general direction of the two men, proceeded to circle around them toward the door leading to the hall.

Judge Bartelmy advanced pleasedly toward the newspaper owner, who greeted him courteously.

"Judge, this is an unexpected honor."

"An honor to come—believe me, Mr. Nolan, an honor to come."

Nolan saw Brand's dexterous manoeuver toward the door, and on calling to him not to go he halted, turned toward the center of the room and stood watching the strangely assorted group of men.

Nolan next addressed Dupuy, who expressed his thanks at the granting of his request for an interview.

Judge Bartelmy, always quick to notice every detail or phase of what was transpiring in his immediate presence, saw that Brand was ill at ease. He called to him cheerily:

"My daughter and I were just speaking of you, Wheeler. The reformer sails a treacherous sea."

"The port is in sight, Judge Bartelmy," was the calm answer.

Bartelmy would have made a success on the stage. In fact, he had been acting a part most of his life and proved the truth of Richard Mansfield's aphorism that "the best actors are never seen on the stage." At Wheeler Brand's significant reply, which smote as ominously on the ears of the judge as it did on those of Dupuy, the jurist gave an inward shiver quite imperceptible to the eye and replied in the most jovial of manners:

"So? So? That's good. That's worth while. Stick to the helm, my boy," he laughed.

"Brand ain't at sea, judge," put in Nolan good naturedly. "He's in the clouds. The air up there makes your nose bleed; but, by the Eternal, you see all that's going on down here."

There was much "going on down here" that Bartelmy by all means preferred to have remain unseen, yet he managed to reply, with an attempt at sincerity:

"More power to you, Wheeler! More power to you!"

Nolan stepped toward the jurist.

"You're a generous foe, Judge Bartelmy," he said warmly, deceived by the smooth tactics of the judge.

"Foe? That's hardly the word," responded Bartelmy, and with deference: "Wheeler and I merely energize differently. He is dynamic; I am static, and that is because he is young and I am old."

"He'll outgrow that, judge. You never will," remarked Dupuy, crossing to Nolan's side.

"But under every system of free government," pronounced Bartelmy in his best judicial manner, "there have always been conservative and liberal parties, whose leaders, while they differed perhaps in method, have been stimulated by an equal love of country."

"That is true, Judge Bartelmy," said Brand, "but I can't concede that you belong to the conservative party."

The judge showed surprise.

"But I don't understand you," he stammered, when Brand went on determinedly:

"Are you not seeking to introduce into our country methods of government undreamed of by our forefathers?"

The judge laughed as though in agreeable tolerance. His skill at verbal parrying was standing him in good stead.

"Oh, I had as much enthusiasm myself in my youth," he said, "but my legal training has forced upon me a certain unfortunate exactitude of thought. But come, come. We old lawyers have long since learned that we cannot carry our quarrels out of court. For instance, of a morning my best friend, Judge Culver, may be at drawn swords with me over some point of law, but the same evening will find us hail fellows well met, exchanging stories before a club fire."

Nolan nodded his head understandingly.

"Yes, judge, that's life—that's life," he commented.

"Half the laws of our country are framed up in clubs," interjected Dupuy.

Bartelmy raised his hand and made a gesture of disapproval.

"I wouldn't say that."

Brand saw an opportunity to score.

Socialism means a government under which the means of production, transportation and communication belong to the people as our public schools, highways and postal service now belong to the people. It means that the millions and billions of dollars now and heretofore being looted from the public treasuries, taken over by the great monopolies on watered stock and bonds would be left in the hands of farmers and laboring people. It means that women would be liberated from factories and offices and be permitted to care for the home and the children. It means that the children who are now being ground into profits for plutocracy would be liberated and put into schools and made happy. It means that wars shall be no more, that slaughter of mankind to increase commercial profits must stop, and that the millions of dollars now being wasted for destructive purposes shall be retained by those who earn them.

Socialism stands for a purely democratic government. One in which the people rule. A government in which all officers are elected by the people and are subject to recall at any time if they disregard the interests of the people. A government in which all the laws are subject to ratifications or rejection by the people and when so ratified cannot be set aside by a judge of any court.

The Eighth Ward Rally.

ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING HELD MONDAY EVENING AT HERTENSTEIN'S HALL.

The meeting under the auspices of the Eighth Ward Socialist Party at 732 West Mound Street last Monday night reminded one of a rally in the midst of a hot political campaign. The hall was crowded to overflowing and there was enthusiasm galore. The Socialist Glee Club Forward sang some stirring songs as only the Germans can sing. Comrades J. C. Bachman and C. E. Belcher delivered addresses and aroused the greatest enthusiasm. They not only did that but supplied a line of arguments that cannot fail but convince the workers that it is time to stand firmly in a class conscious array against the capitalistic class which is so small in number but so arrogant in the exercise of power.

SOCIALISTS ATENTION.

We want singers and want them bad for the Socialist Glee Club, at 184½ South High Stret. A rousing glee club can do much for a big victory next fall. Don't fail to come to the next meeting, Tuesday, January 31, at 7:30 p. m.

GERMAN BRANCH MEETING.

The meeting of the German Branch last Saturday evening at Kull's Hall was well attended. The officers of the branch made their semi-annual reports which shows a good gain in the members and finance. The officers for the present year are M. Norvaki, financial secretary and treasurer; G. Konrad, recording secretary; J. Scherl literature agent; A. Nick, organizer.

A committee was elected to find some means to get in better touch with all the German Comrades. An agitation meeting will be held Saturday evening, February 4th, at Kull's Hall, 76 East Mound Street. All are invited to be present. The branch ordered a bundle of The Socialist for distribution each week.

NINTH WARD BRANCH.

The Ninth Ward Branch was addressed Thursday evening last week by Comrade John Gayton, who made clear, among other things, the Central Bank idea lately proposed in this country.

Eleventh Ward Rally.

Walter J. Millard, of Cincinnati, will adress a mass meeting, under the Auspices of the Eleventh Ward Branch at Evans' Hall, Third and Michigan Avenues, Friday evening, Feb. 3rd. Topic: "The Fundamental Principles of Socialism and the Relation of the Socialist Party to Municipal Ownership of a Gas Plant." Admission Free. Everybody Invited.

Mass Meeting.

A mass meeting in the interests of the laboring class will be held at the Board of Trade Auditorium, Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Max S. Hayes, of Cleveland will be the principal speaker.

MASQUE BALL.

The first grand prize Masque Ball of the Socialist Glee Club Forward, will be given Saturday evening, February 11, at Red Lion Hall, 333½ South High street. You are welcome to come. Admission 25c a person.

CARD OF THANKS.

To the comrades of my dear husband Hugh McQuade, the Ninth Ward Socialists:

Impossible as it is to describe how deeply grateful I am for your attention and devotedness in my late bereavement still I must make some gratitude for all your goodness. May Words indeed fail, language is weak to express all my heart would say in gratitude for all your goodness may the God of all goodness open the stores of heaven and shower its richest treasures both spiritual and temporal upon you, and may every hour of the new year and every succeeding one be crowned with success for the Socialist Party, is the sincere and earnest wish of

Yours respectfully,
MRS. ANNIE McQUADE.

GRAND VIEW RALLY.

The people of Grand View are invited to attend a Socialist Rally at Red Men's Hall, corner Third and Grand View Avenues, next Tuesday evening, January 31. Addresses will be delivered by C. E. Belcher and others. Music by the Glee Club. Admission free. There will be literature for sale and subscriptions taken for papers.

State Party News.

The comrades of St. Marys, Ohio, are hustlers if there ever were any. At this point two years ago, the Socialist vote was only twenty-eight. Last fall their vote reached three hundred and twelve against the republican vote of three hundred and five and the democrat vote of four hundred and nineteen. This gives the Socialist judges and clerks at the elections in the future under the law of being one of the two dominating parties. They have stirred up the capitalists in that city to such an extent that one of the papers came out with a half page, heavy bordered, big type article, urging the democrats and republicans to join hands and stop the growing Socialist sentiment in St. Marys. The comrades have unearthed a mare's nest by finding out that the democrat and republican papers were owned by the same parties and that they were taking advantage of the law and getting a double header for printing the city ordinances. They have made a demand for half of the city printing and stand a good show of getting it. All of the comrades in St. Marys give a great deal of credit to the paper, The St. Marys Socialist, for the growing Socialist vote. The first of each month they make a systematic distribution of a thousand copies. They are discussing the advisability of starting a daily in the spring. The chances are they will carry the city of St. Marys next fall even if the two old parties do combine.

Sherrodsville with 21 names, Wilmington with 10 names, Wapakoneta charter reissued to 26 applicants, Amherst with 16 names, Sandusky with 24 names, W. Wheeling with 8 names, Greenville with 15 names, Murray with 11 names, Medina with 9 names and Fremont 4th 10 names have been granted charters. There were also 8 membership at large cards issued so far during the month. Applications have been received from Crescent, Creston, and Maynard during the last few days.

Marked copies of the Ohio State Bulletin have been sent to the subscribers of the Appeal to Reason in Brown County and letters are now coming in denying the fact that there were no Socialist votes cast in Brown County. Comrade A. B. Shinn assisted in this work and if present plans can be carried out, he will be in that territory organizing and getting facts concerning the late election.

Much encouraging news is coming to the State Office proving that the comrades are working hard to enroll the toilers into our movement. The applications show that there are many farmers coming in as members of our party.

FEDERATION OF LABOR

Elects Officers.—J. H. Henderson (Pitchfork) is President.

By a vote of 47 to 21, James H. Henderson of the machinists' union last evening defeated J. M. Suddick of the carpenters' union, candidate for re-election in the race for the presidency of the Columbus Federation of Labor.

The vote on C. C. Appel and George Dimel, candidates for financial secretary, was tied, but Appel won out by the flipping of a coin. Other officers elected were: Harvey Peck, vice president; Herman Mertz, recording secretary; Geo. Deibel, treasurer; J. Beitsch, librarian; F. Bentz, A. L. Leavitt and George Phrem, trustees; Carl Roth, sergeant-at-arms; J. B. Mass, doorkeeper; H. E. Bailey, W. F. Hauck, W. C. Jenkins, George Phrem and Al Stephens, members of the executive board.

Resolutions were adopted condemning the action of the secretary of the navy in advancing the construction of the United States battleship New York by contract. The resolutions stated that by a law passed in 1910, the government is required to build its own battleships in its own navy-yards.

The question of voting money for the striking cigarmakers in Tampa, Fla., was discussed and favorable action probably will be taken at the next meeting.

JURORS IN PACT TO BALK JUSTICE

Prosecutor Turner will render the cause of justice great service if he will dive deeper into mystery of the Franklin County Jury service. If political debts are paid at the expense of some citizen's liberty through ignorance of those who expect to tide over the "dull season" and like-wise attend to them, city affairs with jury service as recompense, its high time for an awakening. These statements are not confidential utterances, they are public expressions.

The State Office is unable to supply the demand for speakers for Feb. 12, Lincoln's birthday. Protests meetings in sympathy with Fred Warren are being held in most of the localities where there are locals in the State. Numerous demands are also coming in for speakers for the 5th of February for the same purpose.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL AS PROPOSED IN OHIO.

The Employers' Liability bill for Ohio is now ready.

The bill, as drafted, provides that the fund shall be paid by assessment against every employer of five or more persons in industrial occupations. The amount of the assessment shall be determined by a state actuary, and it will be based upon the number of employes, the aggregate payroll and the peculiar hazards of the business in which each employer is engaged. The actuary, it is provided, shall be appointed by the governor, at a salary not to exceed $25,000 a year. The salary is made large because, in the opinion of the commission, a high-class man must be engaged.

TWO OF THE FIVE MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION ARE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE EMPLOYERS' CLASS. THEY WILL SUBMIT A MINORITY REPORT IN THE FORM OF A BILL, RECOMMENDING THAT THE EMPLOYES THEMSELVES BE COMPELLED TO CONTRIBUTE 25 PER CENT OF THE FUND, BUT THIS WILL BE FOUGHT BITTERLY BY ORGANIZED LABOR.

The report of the majority will provide that employers who contribute to the state fund shall not be liable to suit under the common law or statutes governing personal injury cases. Some of the representatives of organized labor object to this exemption, asserting that an injured employe should have the right to elect to proceed under either the workmen's compensation act or the old laws.

CONSISTENCY THOU ART A JEWEL

If the police authorities had used as much diligence in search the hip pockets of street car strike-breakers, as was used in going through Emma Goldman's literature, there would have been no need to plant a "little bush" in DEATH VALLEY.

"Mrs. Dooley", the $1,000 hen owned by W. Kesley Schoepf, the Ohio Electric magnate, was an honored visitor at the Poultry show in this city last week. Schoepf can afford thousand dollar hens but not many of his employes can do so and the dear public who have made Kesley rich are glad to get even the commonest kind of chicken.

VOL. 1. No. 7. COLUMBUS, OHIO, SATURDAY, FEB. 4, 1911. PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR. SINGLE COPIES, 3 CENTS.

WARREN'S SENTENCE COMMUTED.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—President Taft, in response to the protests of a nation, has ordered the six months' prison sentence of Fred D. Warren, of Girard, Kan., editor of The Appeal to Reason (Socialist), commuted to a $100 fine. Warren's original sentence was a $1500 fine and six months in jail.

Warren has not served a single day of his sentence in jail.

In extending clemency, the president scored Warren as a mock hero, and declared that to allow such a sentence to be served made the defendant conspicuous and fed his vanity "by treating him seriously when his violence, exaggeration, his wild accusations and his mock heroics ought to be treated with ridicule."

"To deal with him with such severity," continued the president, "is to manifest a concern as to the evil influence he exerts out of all proportion to the facts. Doubtless his writings are read with pleasure by a number whose views are as wild and as perverted as his, but for all persons of common sense a reading of his articles is the best antidote for the poison he seeks to instill. To visit such an offense with severe punishment would give him an opportunity to pose as a victim of governmental prejudice."

Warren was convicted of technical violation of a federal law prohibiting any one from mailing letters with matter printed on the envelopes "intending to reflect injuriously upon the character of another."

The above is the statement flashed from Washington late Wednesday afternoon, and shows the dire straits in which the national administration found itself. Fearing the wrath of the people whose ideas of justice had been outraged, Taft got a pliant tool, Congressman Campbell of Kansas, to ask for Warren's pardon. Comrade Warren declined to make even a formal request for clemency, but defied the government authorities. Taft had to do something and say something. He has delivered his decision. What a miserable, cringing, abject spectacle it is to see the head of a great nation handing out such "dope."

The myriad voices of protest have had some effect. Will Warren pay the fine? We don't know. One thing is sure, however, and that is that the master class, through its agents at Washington, has seen just a little of the light that is shining over the dark horizon of industrial darkness. When almost a million Socialists express themselves, somebody listens. "De world do move."

A SHATTERED DREAM.

The international convention of the United Mine Workers of America was adjourned sine die at 1:30 Wednesday afternoon, after being in session for fourteen days. Indianapolis was selected as the place of holding the 1912 convention, next January, by an almost unanimous vote. The sweet dream that the Columbus Chamber of Commerce schemers had of bringing the headquarters of the miners here, with the big union funds, to be placed in local banks, was rudely shattered. Those miners can tell a scab by sight and smell, whether he be a strikebreaker or well dressed promoter of "business." The miners did not like the looks of things in Columbus. Who is to blame?

"SOFT JOB" FOR BANKER.

When H. E. Hayes, former banker and bond buyer of Cleveland, makes his appearance at the Ohio penitentiary in a few days to serve a two-year sentence he will probably have his choice of several "soft" jobs, soon to be open behind the walls, due to the federal board of paroles being expected to parole four federal bankers.

Hayes will not be without friends in the prison, for U. G. Walker, another Cleveland banker, spending seven years as a guest of the state for taking a flyer into stocks with some of his depositors' money, is an old-time friend of Hayes.—Columbus Citizen.

Just why a violator of the law, who happens to have been a banker or broker and stole what belonged to others, should have the preference over other criminals is not apparent.

THEY FOUND US OUT.

Hope, the clever cartoon monthly, published at 5110 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., says: "The Socialist is a clean, eight-page weekly newspaper, just founded in Columbus, Ohio, and covers besides regular propaganda many columns of local news of interest to the public, which is a good suggestion for some other party papers to follow if they would attain success in their own locality as a 'news' paper."

SOCIALISM AND RELIGION.

Oh, no! my Christian Brother, Socialism does not attack your religion. It is capitalism, the existing system of industry, which attacks your religion. When you would do good, evil is present—the evil of this social order.

In this present society every man must fight, and the stakes of the battle are the very means of life itself. When you win, your life becomes easier, and some other man's life more burdensome. We are struggling like pigs about a trough. The big hog drinks all the swill he can hold and lies down in the trough to keep the other hogs out. The little pigs must be content with the drippings.

Brother, do you call such a society "Christian?" And is a movement to overthrow this hog-society and to establish justice in its place—is that an "un-Christian" movement?

A just social order will give us all a chance to practice our religions; Jew or Gentile; Catholic or Protestant; believer or unbeliever. Any faith which can be destroyed by Socialism is one that cannot be practiced.

Plainly, we are an economic movement and do not enter the field of religion. Brother, have you ever made any religious demands on the Republican or Democratic parties?

The Socialists will always defend your right, Brother, to own and enjoy your own property. And your religion comes under that head. Our national platform is specific on that point.

Frederick Guy Strickland.

THE REVEREND BILLY SUNDAY.

The "Reverend" Billy Sunday has been in Columbus. He spoke at Memorial Hall last Monday evening to a packed house. Rather, he ranted, roared, yelled, howled, divested himself of collar, necktie, coat and vest, jumped on chairs, sprang at his audience like some wild beast, used language that went far beyond the border line of decency, and was applauded over and over again by supposedly sane people.

If a Socialist had, on the same platform, used the language and performed the actions that the Reverend Billy Sunday did last Monday night, the police would have arrested him as a lunatic or as a disorderly person. To an unbiased observer the Sunday meeting at Memorial Hall was considerable of an oratorical orgy.

Some of the Ward Branches in Columbus have taken up the systematic study of Socialism as outlined in the lessons given by Mary E. Marcy in her "Beginners' Course of Socialism," in the International Socialist Reivew. There could be no better work for the members of locals and branches than to arm themselves with information as to the basic principles of Socialism during this season of the year. Socialists to be effective must be intelligent Socialists, well informed and ready to reply to the sophistry advanced by the enemies of progress. We must know that the Master Class is equipping a drilled army of speakers and writers to combat the "menace of Socialism." The Civic Federation has openly announced its purpose in this direction. Other societies are in the field with the same end in view. Socialists must be ready.

GROWING SENSITIVE.

For the first time in its rather long and notorious career the Standard Oil Company answers back. It is indignant at certain assertions made about its side line of glucose manufacturing, and it is suing the magazine, Hampton's, that published it, and the author, Cleveland Moffat, who wrote it. The Standard wants a quarter of a million from the magazine and a hundred thousand from the writer, in the way of damages.

According to its side, the statement that glucose, as used in candy, often poisonous, is a libel. Other things, much more serious, have been said about the Standard. It has been called a murderer—and has practically been proven to be such. But it was silent.

Now, however, on a really minor point, it is angry.

There is, also, in the case, an element of the ridiculous and of buffoonery. Trying to recover a hundred thousand dollars from a magazine writer is worse than trying to squeeze milk from stones.

THE MINERS AND THE CIVIC FEDERATION.

As significant an action as has been taken by any labor body in years was that of the United Mine Workers' convention in banning the American Civic Federation. The vote was close, but that does not lessen the greatness and the importance of it. The miners have awakened to the anti-working class significance of the Civic Federation—and though one of its leading officials was formerly a miner and head of the miners' union they will have none of it.

They have arrived at an understanding of their own interests and of the way those interests can be advanced. They refuse longer to be led to the slaughter, and they refuse longer to accept unhesitatingly and without inquiry and examination the "gifts" an inimical class brings to them.

Perhaps the greatest victory the Socialists have yet achieved is that of arousing the working class to the fact that they must attend to their own affairs, that no other class has the interest that will impel it to do anything of real benefit for the working class.

When, on Tuesday, under a roll call, an amendment to the constitution of the union was adopted by 1213 to 967 votes forbidding any member from belonging to the Civic Federation, the noise reached clear to New York, and shocked John Mitchell, the boon companion of Belmont, Perkins and others, the enemies of organized labor.

It has been a hard fight, but the fruit is worthy. Some of the fruit is shown in this action of the United Mine Workers. They refuse to be misled. They have taken charge of their own affairs, and they realize that, as far as the mine workers are concerned, it is the union of these workers, not the National Civic Federation of masters and masters' hirelings, that can be looked to for efficient action.

And that is a Socialist victory, for it is directly due to Socialist teachings. Socialists have fought many years in favor of just what the United Mine Workers have done.

THE ANARCHISTS IN LONDON.

A recent history of the United States, of high authority, pictures the famous "anarchist riot" in Haymarket Square, at Chicago, as a fierce revolver-battle between the police and a numerous body of anarchists. Disinterested eye-witnesses have declared—long after the event—that nothing resembling such a conflict ever took place. A rather small crowd, in a drizzle of rain, they say, was listening to a cart-tail harangue. A squad of police appeared and commanded the meeting to disperse. The speaker replied: "You see we are peaceable." Then somebody—never identified—threw a bomb from the alley. As the bomb exploded, the crowd, composed mainly of the usual idling "innocent bystanders," promptly took to its heels. The public was intensely excited for weeks following; but nobody, we believe, now pretends that there was ever a moment when the anarchists could possibly have inflicted a tenth part as great damage upon society as the little housefly inflicts every day.

What happened in London the other day was that a couple of desperate housebreakers, who had already committed a murder, found themselves surrounded by the police and opened fire upon the beleaguerers in a sort of last-ditch bravado that criminals often display. Only an excited fancy could imagine that the political views of the murderers—supposing them to have any—were of any significance. Getting excited about anarchy when people who may be infected with tuberculosis still spit in public places seems to us a sad misdirection of energy.—Saturday Evening Post.

The above needs no comment.

The dear old Jefferson Club has, according to a report in the daily press, "frowned upon efforts to have a debate on Socialism during its meetings." One of its members, Charles Magruder, is to talk upon "Democracy and Socialism" before the club on February 15. The report further says: "The club held that its meeting should not be used for the propagation of Socialist doctrine." Sad, isn't it? The Jeffs must be afraid of intellectual dynamite. The Socialist party organization has not asked the Jefferson Club to hear a debate on Socialism. The Socialist party is not seeking debates. It no longer has to advertise the cause that way, but there are always some Socialists ready and willing, in a meek and humble way, to argue the greatest question of the ages in public and privately. Brace up, Jeffs!

Columbus Socialists should make the Grand Prize Ball of the Socialist Glee Club Forward, next Saturday evening at Red Lion Hall, an event similar to the balle given by the Socialists in New York, Milwaukee and Chicago. Our German singers are a power for good. Boost them.

The office of The Socialist is now at 26 North High street, where "the latch-string is always out."

Universal Peace.

By John M. Work.

If the cause of genuine human freedom ever demands it, we Socialists will shoulder our guns and get in line.

But we are in favor of universal peace just the same. And we are in favor of the only economic measures that can insure universal peace.

Every war has an economic cause.

Under the present capitalist system, the industries of each nation are owned by a few capitalists. They hire wage slavers to do the work. Modern machinery has made the productivity of these wage slaves enormous. The capitalists pay them as wages on an average just about enough for them to live on and raise their children. As this is only a fraction of the value of their labor, it naturally follows that they are able to buy back only a fraction of the product. The capitalists and their retainers are unable to consume all the balance. Consequently there is a great surplus that has to seek a market abroad.

Every civilized nation is in this same condition. Every civilized nation is therefore constantly on the lookout to preserve its market abroad, to secure new ones if possible, and also to gain or retain opportunities for the investments of surplus capital.

Right here lie the cause of all recent wars.

Here lay the cause of the Spanish-Cuban war.

Here lay the cause of the Spanish-American war.

Here lay the cause of the Philippine war.

Here lay the cause of the China-Japanese war.

Here lay the cause of the Boxer war.

Here lay the cause of the Russo-Japanese war.

Everyone of these wars was fought for the purpose of gaining or retaining foreign or colonial markets, and gaining or retaining opportunities for the investment of surplus capital.

Here also lies the reason why all the nations of the world are at swords' points.

They are all maintaining immense navies for the sole and only purpose of gaining and retaining foreign markets and opportunities for investment.

Socialism will abolish war because it will put an end to the fierce contest for foreign markets and investments.

When Socialism is established, the men and women who do the necessary and useful mental and manual labor of the world will receive the full value of the product. They will consume the product themselves. If they are not able to consume it all, they will shorten their hours of labor and not produce so much. As a matter of course they will exchange products with other nations, each nation getting those things which it desires for use. But they will have no occasion at all to engage in a scramble for foreign markets or investments.

Therefore, when all nations are socialized, the cause of war will be gone.

The navies can be placed in the Socialist museum.

Some people have scoffed at us because of our opposition to war. They have contemptuously declared that our expectation is utopian.

But, when the cause of war is first realized, it is easy to see that Socialism will remove that cause, and that therefore the abolition of war is a certainty instead of an idle dream.

The Socialists have already made their influence felt in preventing war.

When Norway withdrew from Sweden, the capitalists of Sweden wanted to force her back into the alliance, because the two nations combined would exercise more power and influence in foreign affairs—that is, in the gaining and retaining of foreign markets and opportunities for investments. But the Socialists of Sweden declared that they would refuse to fight against the workingmen of Norway. And, as a very large proportion of the workingmen of Sweden are Socialists, the capitalists were compelled to abandon the war project.

Likewise, when France and Germany got into trouble over Morocco, because French and German capitalists had money invested in Morocco and wanted markets there, the French and German Socialists were unanimously of the opinion that the workingmen of France and Germany had no quarrel with each other and that it would be folly for them to help their masters, the capitalists, to fight with each other over markets and investments. Without a doubt it was their influence that caused the two nations to settle the question peaceably.

So the Socialists have already prevented war to a considerable extent and prevented the shedding of a vast amount of human blood.

It is useless for the capitalists to enter into a war, unless they can foment hatred among the people, so that they will go forth and fight the battles, while the capitalists themselves keep at a safe distance.

For the capitalists never fight battles. They may not be invincible in peace, but they are certainly invisible in war. They always stay at home and rake in the money, while the workingmen spill each other's blood.

When the workingmen are not foolish enough to consent to do the fighting, the war has to be called off.

As fast as the Socialist become more numerous, war will become less frequent.

When the Socialists gain control of all the nations, war will cease altogether.

We will then have universal peace.

We will then realize Tennyson's dream of a federation of the world. As August Bebel predicts, there will be a world parliament, formed of the representatives of all the civilized nations, which will regulate international relations, and render them more and more stable.

Some Ideas From Edison.

That Edison interview by Comrade A. L. Benson in the February Cosmopolitan is excellent reading and to the Socialist reader very satisfying. "Edison believes in a povertyless future. 'Why should we expect poverty to continue?' he asks. 'Poverty was for a world that used only its hands. When men used nothing but their hands, poverty was most intense. Now that men have begun to use their brains, poverty is decreasing. Look about you and see how many things worth while were known a hundred years ago. We are learning how to control the forces of nature. The most wonderful changes are coming—changes about which no one today can do more than dream. The world will be flooded with food, shelter, clothing and luxuries!

"But what good will that do if a few men should own the means of producing all these things? Edison has thought of that. He realizes the size of the problem. But he says it is a problem in which neither he nor his kind can help. Inventors can make the world rich, but only the people can provide the governmental means to keep the riches they make. He believes the people are going to provide these means. He believes there are stormy days ahead for the man who would take what another makes. He believes there will be cracks in the walls of government and rips in constitutions, and that the workingman will some day say 'stand still;' will compel the government to serve him and will destroy any government that will not serve him. Morever, he believes things ought to be changed. 'Civilization,' he says, 'is on a wrong basis. A few are getting too much and the rest not enough. There will be some big experiments in government in the next fifty years.

"This is the day before Sumter. Not the day before civil war, but the day before the age-old ideas of government are to go down, even as the age-old and once-honored institution of chattel slavery went down, the day before the burial of the world's poverty in the potter's field, for it's a world's Sumter that Edison beholds."

In view of the above explicit statement, might we not address him as Comrade Edison?

THE MARSEILLAISE.

In the reign and terror under French and Barss — When hundreds of victims were carved by the guillotine, and the people rose against the aristocracy—was born the hymn of France, composed by Rouget de l'Isle. He was an officer of engineers, and at a banquet was asked to compose a war song. He wrote it in his room that night before going to bed, and the next morning his hostess, the wife of the mayor of Strasburg, tried it on the piano and in the afternoon the orchestra at the theater played it in the square of Strasburg, where it created much excitement and gathered many volunteers. Rouget called it a song for the Army of the Rhine, but subsequently it was sung by a regiment of southern volunteers, who had marched out of Marseilles to Paris, where it was appropriated by the capital and called the Hymn des Marseilles. But Joseph Rougat, the author, died in poverty.—Deshler Welch, in Harper's Magazine.

FORCED TO QUIT BY STRIKE.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—Felix Kahn & Co. is the first of the clothing firms in Chicago to go out of business as a result of the strike, which practically paralized the business. D. A. Moulton, vice president of the Corn Exchange National Band, today was appointed trustee to liquidate the firm's business and wind up its affairs. The Kahn company is one of the oldest and largest in the city. It refused to sign an agreement with the union.

All in all, this fight over the possession of the earth ought to make you happy. It's the most dexterous round in pugilism we have ever witnessed, and the little fellow is coming out on top.

Offer Newspaper $100,000 Bribe.

SHIP SUBSIDY ADVOCATES WOULD PAY THAT FOR FAVORABLE EDITORIAL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26. — The house press gallery was stirred up by an informal announcement that at 3:20 o'clock Alfred Warren Dodsworth, business manager of the New York Journal of Commerce, would tell how $100,000 was offered to him if he would procure the publication in that paper of an editorial expression favorable to the "ship subsidy interests." This disclosure, it was made known, would take place at the afternoon hearing of the Olcott special committee now inquiring into the so-called ship subsidy scandal.

Mr. Dodsworth took the stand promptly. The session was opened by an announcement by Chairman Olcott that the New York publishers had submitted to him certain questions that he desired to have asked. One of these read substantially as follows:

"Have you ever been asked by the domestic steamship interests to run articles favorable to subsidy legislation?"

Mr. Dodsworth replied in the affirmative and then told his story. About six years ago a man entered his office in New York and informed him that he had a proposition to make. According to Mr. Dodsworth his caller said that he desired to make arrangements for an insertion in the Journal of Commerce of an article favorable to subsidy legislation; that he wished to secure 1,000,000 copies of the paper carrying the article and that if he could make an agreement with Mr. Dodsworth along the line he indicated the people he represented were willing to pay $100,000.

Mr. Dodsworth's visitor declared that he represented responsible people and that if Mr. Dodsworth assented to the proposal he would produce a certified check for $10,000 in ten minutes to bind the bargain, the balance of the $100,000 to be turned over immediately following the publication.

Mr. Dodsworth said he at once telephoned for his brother, Editor John Dodsworth, in whose presence the stranger repeated the terms of the offer.

FIVE AND FIFTY.

Charlotte Perkins Gilman.

If fifty men did all the work
And gave the price to five;
And let those five make all the rules—
You'd say the fifty men were fools,
Unfit to be alive.

And if you heard complaining cries
From fifty brawny men,
Blaming the five for graft and greed,
Injustice, cruelty indeed—
What would you call them then?

Not by their own superior force
Do five on fifty live,
But by election and assent—
And privileges of government—
Powers that the fifty give.

If fifty men are really fools—
And five have all the brains—
The five must rule as now we find,
But if the fifty have the mind—
Why don't they take the reins?

Trust Law Hits Union.

STRIKERS ARE CONVICTED OF RESTRAINING COMMERCE.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 30.—Organized labor here felt the restraining force of the Sherman anti-trust law when a jury in the United States circuit court here returned a verdict of guilty against members of the New Orleans Dock and Cotton Council, charged with conspiracy to interfere with foreign commerce.

The Dock and Cotton Council has about 50,000 members. From the moment a bale of cotton or load of lumber or any other through freight reaches the port until it has been stowed on a vessel, it is not handled by anyone except the members of 10 or more unions affiliated with the central body.

It was argued by the government's attorney that when these men conspired to strike and tie up the port, they interfered with interstate commerce.

FEARFUL COST OF WAR.

Those who are preaching in behalf of the world's peace should realize the tremendous cost of war. No more effective sermon against increased armmaents could be prepared than is contained in the simple statement that since the Civil war ended, in 1865, the United States has paid for pensions and the pension system, the stupendous total of $4,004,975,560.36 This although nearly 40 years ago President Garfield said: "We may reasonably expect that the expenditure for pensions will hereafter steadily decrease."—Leslie's Weekly.

Hitchcock's Office "In Hell Of A Fix."

CONGRESSMEN SCORE SECRETARY WHO IS EXPLOITING RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Asserting that the mail service of the United States was "in a hell of a fix", Representive Sisson, scored the Postmaster General, and by inference, the President of the United States, for shortsighted "remedy."

"Rural delivery routes which have been approved have never been put into operation," Sisson declared. "I understand that nothwithstanding Congress appropriated for new rural routes, the Postoffice Department turned back into the treasury $1,700,000 which might have been used for the establishment of new routes.

"I want to know what sort of an autocratic person this is that defies the mandate of Congress. It seems to me from all reports that the mail service of the United States is in a hell of a fix, to use a plain word.

"The fault does not lie with Congress that new routes are not established where they are needed, but either with the Postmaster General or somebody higher up. We ought to be able to fix this responsibility."

A dozen Democrats joined in denunciation of Hitchcock's economy policy and offered amendments.

Representative Mann, declared that unless all amendments except one concurred in by the postoffice committee, increasing the salaries of rural carriers from $900 to $1,000 were withdrawn, he would insist on a point of order and force the striking out of the entire appropriation for the service. Under this threat the section was adopted unanimously, increasing the appropriation for salaries from $38,790,000 to $42,790,000.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP — HEALTH.

No man knows what perfect happiness is, nor when we shall attain it. But all of us know that for the sort of happiness possible to us now, health is the first essential. Without good health, possessions are largely worthless. With good health, we have the most important thing. Good health, as shown by Upton Sinclair in the following from the Physical Culture Magazine is directly influenced by economic facts:

"And if you live in a city," he says, "and earn your living among men, then you will find that you are surrounded by forces that are conspiring against our health and well-being. You will ride in street cars that are unfit for cattle; you will be shut in unventilated buildings, and will work under destructive conditions; you will find that all the public forces of government, which should serve to protect you, are in the hands of ignorant and corupt men. We have grown so used to having our political machines run by grafters, that we are apt to give up in despair, and to conclude that there is no escaping the evil, and yet we have to recoganize that such conditions do not prevail abroad. In England and Germany and Switzerland they have honest public administrations, and the problems of sanitation and public hygiene are entrusted to experts; as a result of that—to give but one instance—the death rate from typhoid, a disease of filth, is in the German cities not twenty per cent. of what is in a city like Pittsburg.

The same thing applies as to inspection of milk and meat and fruit, and to the enforcement of all laws for the protection of the health of the people; in Germany you do not take it for granted that a public inspector is a grafter—or if you do, you don't make the mistake twice. And what is the reason for this? Are the people more honest? I do not think so. And it is not they are more intelligent—there is more illiteracy abroad. After many years of study of the problem, I have come to see quite clearly that the reason is that in Germany the great public-service corporation — the street railroads, the telephone, the gas, electric light, and water companies, and even in most cases the bakeries and the slaughter houses—are all owned and run by the government, for the benefit of all. Consequently, they are not seeking to exploit any one, and they are not in politics; they do not put up campaign funds and name candidates, and run political machines to keep dishonest men in office for the sake of franchise favors and the right to violate the law."

MAIL CLERKS ASK SENATE INQUIRY.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Friends of the railway mail clerks in South Dakota, who complained that they were oppressed beyond endurance by new regulations of the Postoffice Department, have asked the senate to make an investigation. A telegram signed by the governor and other state officials of South Dakota asking that a committee of the senate be appointed to investigate the grievances, was received by Senator Crawford, (Rep., S. Dak.) who caused it to be read in the senate. It was referred to the senate committee on postoffices and post roads, of which Senator Penrose, of Pennsylvania, is chairman.

Socialists in Action

News From The World Wide Movement Of The Workers.

News From the National Socialist Headquarters.

The receipts at the National Office or dues during the month of January 1910, amounted to $2,774.68. The amout received this month to date (January 28th) already exceeds $2,600.00, a clear gain of almost $900.00 in the months compared.

By action of the National Executive Committee leaflets upon the following subjects are being prepared: "A Municipal Program" and "A Legislative Program"; also a statement concerning the Keir Hardie-Vaillant resolution. The committee has granted a charter to the comrades of Georgia for a state organization. The National Executive Committee will meet at National Headquarters at 10 a. m., Saturday, February 4th.

By a recent referendum conducted under direction of the National Office, Comrade Max Wilk, 1628 Walton Way, Augusta, Georgia, was elected State Secretary, and Comrade Andrew Mulcay, Augusta, was elected National Committeeman.

By error an incorrect address was given in the last Weekly Bulletin for the publication office of a pamphlet entitled "What Socialists Are Doing In Milwaukee." The price is ten cents a copy and orders should be addressed to 320 Kearney Street, San Francisco, Calif.

The Thiel Detective Agency is advertising in the local newspapers for men who can speak the Russian and Finnish languages. Good pay and other inducements are offered. Any person knowing the purposes for which these sleuths are to be used will confer a favor by notifying the National Office at once.

By a recent referendum in Connecticut Comrade Edward Perkins Clarke, Mystic, was re-elected State Secretary-Treasurer; Comrade Wm. Inderelst, Box 522, Mystic, was elected a member of the National Committee, and Comrade Matilda Rabinowitz, Bridgeport, was elected State Woman's Correspondent.

The office of the Finnish Translator has collected $3,546.40 for the "Freedom of Finland" fund. This fund was established by the decision of the executive committee of the National Finnish Socialist Organization, taken early in November, and all the money collected has been sent to the Social-Democratic party headquarters at Helsingfors, Finland, to be used as an agitation and campaign fund by said party.

Forty thousand tags to be sold at ten cents a piece were gotten out and distributed among the Finnish locals in the United States and Canada and this splendid sum was returned before January 1st.

Enthusiasm for this kind of help for their struggling brethren in the old country has been remarkable among the Finnish Socialists here. They knew that the Social-Democratic party of Finland is just now fighting against fiercest opposition by the Russian authorities and all the reactionaries in their own country. The recent election of the national house of representatives, called the Diet of Finland, was the fifth during the four years folowing the successful fight for suffrage. The Diet has been unconstitutionally dissolved four times by the Csar. The answer this time again by the Finnish people was another Socialist representative to the Diet and 321,000 votes for theSocial-Democratic party, over forty per cent of all the votes cast. Probably the Csar will have to find different means to suppress the growing force of Socialism after this.

By collecting this fund the Finlanders of America have done well, not only for the interest of Socialists in Finland, but also for strengthening of Socialism in every country, as our gains in one country also are victories for our cause everywhere.

Since last report the proposed national party referendums have been seconded by locals as follows:

That proposed by Local Hallettsville, Texas, first published December 3, 1910, by Locals Coffeyville, Kansas, and Newport News, Va.

That proposed by Local Orange, N. J., first published December 24, 1910, by Locals Passaic County, N. J., Essex County, N. J., Dover, N. J., Bristol, Conn., Muscatine, Iowa, and Zanesville, Ohio.

The formal call for the nomination of members for the Woman's National Committee was sent out under date of January 14th. All nomination blanks should be returned to the National Office on or before February 14th. Nominations received after that date cannot be counted.

GERMANY.

Comrade Barth, editor of Vorwaerts, has been condemned to two months' imprisonment for his criticism on the action of the police in Solingen on March 6 of last year, on the occasion of the demonstration against the Prussian suffrage (the same memorable day of the famous demonstration in the Berlin Tiergarten and Treptow park). In the course of the trial Karl Liebknecht, who was defending Barth, found occasion to protest against the behavior of the president of the court, who was making fun of the witnesses. He protested sharply, but objectively, and with due formality, which even the public prosecutor, Merschberger, did not deny. For when the president, feeling himself offended, suggested to him to propose a motion of punishment against Liebknecht for "indecorum before the court," Merschberger replied that he had no such motion to propose. In spite of this the court retired, and returned in a quarter of an hour to condemn Liebknecht to a fine of 100 marks or "incoderum!"

At the by-election for the Heilbronn division of the Wurttemburg ladtag, the Social Democrat Hornung was elected in the first ballot with a majority of 66. The division had previously been represented by a Social Democrat.

The trial of the persons accused of taking part in the Moabit riot is at last finished with the following result: Beck was condemned to three and a half years' imprisonment, Tiedman to one and a half years, three persons to nine months' imprisonment, one to eight months, three to six months, and twenty-two others to penalties varying from fines of $2 and upwards to four months' imprisonment. The trial by jury of another group of persons charged with similar offenses began last week. The court was obliged to admit in its judgment that the police had in many cases committed most unjust excesses, though it did its best to excuse their conduct. Vorwaerts alludes to the judgment as "a heavy blow for the police," and says thatHerr Von Jagow has again lost a battle, and that the imperial chancellor (who on two occasions attempted in the speeches in the reichstag to put the blame for the events of Moabit upon the Social Democracy) share the well-deserved decat of the chief of police, and the Frankfurter Zeitung remarks that Vorwaerts is justified in holding this opinion. The reactionary organs have very little to say on this subject.

ALDRICH GETTING BANKING SYSTEM READY FOR SOCIALISM.

Even the small bankers are like sheep led to the slaughter.

For now comes the big fellow to swallow up the little ones, just like the beasts in the jungle.

Aldrich is the handy man of Wall street. He is the genius that can bring order out of chaos—trusts out of the confusion of competition. This Wall street handy man saw a great number of small banks scattered all over the country—about 25,000 of them. This did not look good to him.

He had seen thousands of oil wells scattered over Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania and a number of other states and like a shepherd gathered all into one old—the Standard Oil company.

The little fool bankers thought they were capitalists just because they had a few hundred dollars to shuffle through the window.

Now they wake up and find themselves in the grip of the big banking trust. They are slated to obey this centralized power or go out of business.

The great majority of "bankers" will hereafter be clerks and tellers and cashiers, working for a wage so small that they will not even attempt to call it "salary."

And the centralised banking trust will be only a part of the other trusts. Centralization is the necessary step in all industry and business under capitalism.

And centralization is the order of government under capitalism. You must not get excited or surprised if some day you find the states and counties amalgamated into one huge, centralized body with one head.

Then what are you going to do? The means of communication, post-office, telegraph, transportation service, all under the control of the "head." The militia, the army, the navy, all under the command of the "head."

That even the banking system is tending in the same direction as every other business, only proves the Karl Marx, was correct, and that Socialism is the inevitable result in the evolution of Capitalism. Capitalism is making Socialism possible.

Don't get this deadlock epidemic mixed up with the lockjaw. These be two distinct and different diseases.

THE CIVIC FEDERATION.

By J. Mahlon Barnes.

The Civic Federation has definitely entered the lists as an anti-Socialist institution and must henceforth be classed with the London Municipal Society as co-laborers in defense of capitalism. In June, 1909, Mr. August Belmont called upon his millionaire friends for a $50,000 fund for the purpose of issuing and circulating under the direction of the Civic Federation, literature, "SHOWING IN CONCRETE FORM THE MENACE OF SOCIALISM IN THIS COUNTRY."

Its present Executive Committee is made up first, of seventeen persons, said to represent the public; second, fifteen, said to represent the employers; and third, sixteen, said to represent the wage-earners. Among the latter, in the wage-earners' division, seven out of the eleven members of the present Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor are numbered.

In 1906, the Civic Federation sent a large committee to Europe to investigate and report upon the questions of municipal ownership of public utilities. (An adverse report was assured.) The street railways of New York and August Belmont paid the bills for this investigation, amounting to about $89,000.

Nowhere in the literature of the Civic Federation has there appeared th name of a city or date to support its claim of strike settlements, arbitration or benefits conferred upon labor. Speaking of the accomplishments of the organization, Mr. Belmont, says: "It is necessary that this organization should observe secrecy always."

Mr. Belmont in his June letter says: "In this country a committee of the National Civic Federation, under the chairmanship of Dr. Nichols Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, has been at work for almost a year investigating the situation and preparing plans for a campaign (against Socialism) the purpose of which is to educate speakers and writers. In other words, we are getting out a book for them. The editors of labor, religious, educational and weekly journals are clamoring for material, and we have lists of many preachers, school teachers, college professors and labor editors who are good talkers and writers, and who need the information necessary for such work."

In fact the Federation is neither impartial nor non-partisan. A number of its official papers, entitled "The Review", were given over almost entirely to an assault upon and misrepresentation of Socialism, coupled with A WARNING TO THE WORKING CLASS OF THE DANGERS TO THEM FROM SOCIALISM.

MUNICIPAL CONTROL OF AVIATION.

A clause in the new city charter of Modesto, California, gives the city power to construct and operate aviation landings as a municipal enterprise. Under the provision the city may also build aviation parks and conduct aerial contests. The city fathers are preparing for the future.

A CO-OPERATIVE TOWN.

One hundred citizens of Muskogee, Oklahoma, have prepared plans f r the establishment of a co-operative town in the vicinity of Muskogee. The homes will radiate from a business center, which will be run entirely on a co-operative basis. Sites have been provided for a central convention hall, a school house, a theater, a park, nursery and green house. Altruria has been suggested as a name for the new town.

THE MAYOR ADVISES MUNICIPAL LAUNDRY.

In order to increase the popularity of Petoskey, Michigan, and to alleviate the trouble of housewives, the mayor of that city advised the council to consider the project of building a municipal laundry. New machinery has been recently installed in the city light plant and more power is being generated than is needed. Mayor Reycroft suggested that it be used to run the laundry.

THE STRIKE BREAKERS.

Who is far worse than knave or fool,
Who never read the Golden Rule,
Who is the tyrant's willing tool?
The scab.

When labor's won or lost the day,
And peace resumes her gentle way,
Who gets the grand bounce right away?
The scab.

Who, when men stand up for the right
And for their wives and children fight,
Who in all their efforts tries to blight?
The scab.

Who is the man with coward face,
Who steals his fellow-toiler's place,
Who is despised by all his race?
The scab.

When a judge grants an injunction against you when on strike, don't kick, but remember that you authorized him to do so. You voted for the system that creates these judges and gives them the power to knock you clean off your pins.

The Question Box.

What position does the Bible occupy in the Socialist creed?—A. F. L.

The bible occupies the same position in the Creeds of Socialists that it does in the Creeds of Party republicans, democrats and prohibitionists. There is no more connection between political principles and religious Creeds of individuals than there is between Church and State.

All political parties contain people of every shade of religious and ir-religious beliefs, and the Socialist party is no exception to the rule. Among the prominent writers and speakers in the American Socialist movement are Catholic priests, protestant preachers of all denominations, agnostics, atheists, Jews and believers in religious and philosophies too numerous to mention, and the party membership is gathered from people holding all kinds of doctrines as to matters non-political.

Robert G. Ingersoll, the most widely known opponent of the bible, was a republican and an agnostic, whiles C. C. McCabe was a republican and a Methodist bishop. Robert Blatchford, an English Socialist writer was perhaps as prominent in his opposition to the bible as Ingersoll was in this country; but in America we have many religious writers and, speakers on Socialism like Father McGrady, Rev. G. H. Strobel and Rev. F. M. Sprague, who are only a few of a long list.

One of the most effective and prosperous of our Socialist publications is the Christian Socialist, published at Chicago, Ill., which teaches Socialism from the Christian viewpoint, while a number of books and pamphlets repudiate the bible entirely in teaching Socialist economics and philosophy.

It is remarkable how insistent some people are in demanding a confession of religious faith from Socialists without ever thinking of putting the same test to an old-party voter or office-holder.

The purposes of this is very plain. A systematic attempt is being made to stimulate ignorant prejudice against Socialism by the implied or stated lie that Socialists are all infidels and opposed to morality. And there are ignorant and thoughtless people enough to swallow the assertion without investigation or reflection, and pass it along, thereby furthering the purposes of the liars who cannot meet the Socialists' argument and so resort to misrepresentation.

The principles of Socialism are fully set forth in the National platform of the Socialist Party and cannot be concealed from any one who would know what they are. Membership in the party does not depend upon sex, race, color or creed; and the fact that the membership is made up of people of every shade of religion and ir-religious thought is sufficient proof to any honest investigator that Socialism is purely a political and an economic movement and is committed to neither the support nor the antagonism of the bible or any religion.

The Financial Outlook.

The Financial World of Wall Street makes the following prophecy for 1911:

"There cannot, nor should there be, any concealment of the fact, that one of the most serious problems which will have to be solved in the event that business in 1911 fails to approach normal proportions, is the successful liquidation in labor. Wages and land values are the two things in which so far no adjustment has been made. Business cannot continue to pay the high wages which were allowed during prosperous times. In the latter months of 1910 corporations, which have been large employers of help have tried to economise by reducing their working forces. This is only half the remedy. The upshot of such a policy leads to but one outcome, the labor market becomes congested with idle men who must have employment to exist and feed those dependent upon them. The competition for work will become so keen that there will be constant friction. Well organised unionism will, in its efforts to maintain the present scale of wages put up a stiff fight against any reduction, although it will be battling against an economic condition which cannot be resisted. But while the adjustment is proceeding, it may be marred by serious labor strife and it is this possibility which far-seeing people apprehended for 1911 and hope it may be avoided."

The employers of labor have reduced their working forces, owing to the fact that the products made by the factories of those employers have glutted the markets. The warehouses are filled, and the masses of the people are in a condition financially that they must economize in purchasing the necessities of life. How a reduction in wages will empty the warehouses or increase the purchasing power of the masses of the people, is a problem which the World does not explain. It is evident that the present industrial system is up against it, and the only real remedy that can give permanent relief of the people, is in the collective ownership of natural resources and the machinery of production and distribution.

ARE YOU YOUR BROTHER'S KEEPER?

The street car employes have to run by a schedule. The men who compel these men to indirectly exceed the speed limit are responsible for every life taken under the street car wheels.

The steam railroads travel on tracks that are not used as public highways. Road crossings appear at every two miles. With street cars it's different, because people cross and recross the street every fifty feet.

The steam corporations compel their men to study the application of air-brakes. They likewise compel their employes to pass a rigid examination before they are allowed to have charge of a train. This test comes at unlooked for periods.

But when some of the citizens of this city demanded the enactment of a law preventing motormen having charge of cars under ten days' experience test the Rail-Light, with the aid of the court, held it as public "whim and fancy." The result led to the ordinance being declared unconstitutional. Since this occurred, many of our citizens have been murdered through corporate negligence.

When the people own the street cars (we own the streets now) there will be no need of compelling the motormen to speed the car and slide the grade. For, under the people's control, the cars would be run for public use, and instead of paying dividends on watered stock we would invest the earnings in new cars. Let's be prepared to remedy the defect BY THE PEOPLE OWNING WHAT THE PEOPLE NEED.

Jim Henderson.

THE RAIL-LIGHT'S DEFIANCE.

During the month of January two lives were sacrificed by the reckless, careless work of motormen in the employ of the Columbus Rail-Light. In each case death came to the victim in a most horrible form.

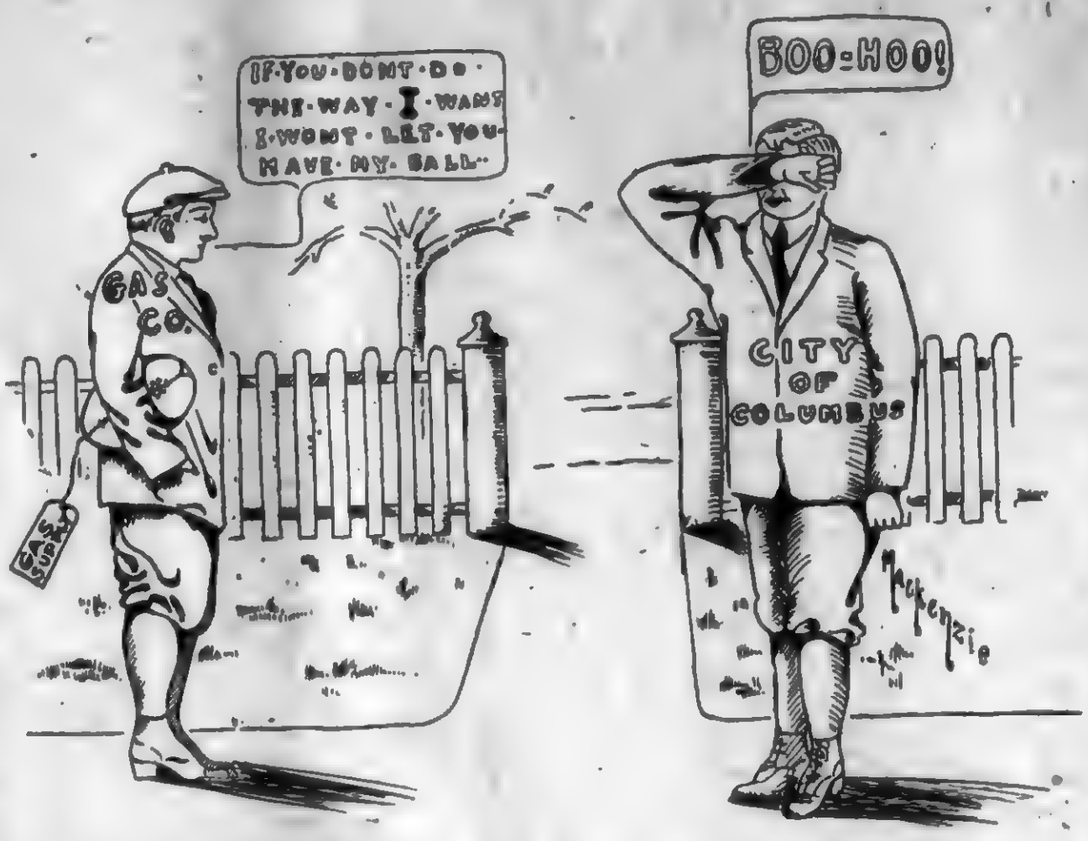
In the first instance, Mrs. Rennick, an aged woman, was run down and her body mangled while crossing the track in the central part of the business district on High street. The speed at which the car was going was beyond all sense of safety in such a congested part of the city.

Last Thursday John Turner, a mail collector, while on duty in his automobile was killed at the corner of Long street and Champion avenue. His head was severed from his body. The Daily News, in its report of the catastrophe, says:

"The conductor of the street car was G. C. Miller. THE MOTORMAN'S NAME IS LLOYD. HE IS SAID TO HAVE BEEN ON THE LINE BUT A FEW WEEKS."

The number of lesser accidents, undoubtedly due to inexperience or indifference, is so large that they cannot be enumerated here. The Rail-Light, backed by the Chamber of Commerce and entrenched in the "protection" of the courts, seems lost to all sense of any regard for the lives of the people who are almost obliged to patronize it. The company ignores its contract to give eight tickets for a quarter, and will be, unquestionably, upheld by any judge who hears the case if the courts were resorted to by the citizens.

To show their defiance of decency and the sentiment of the people the word comes that Foty, who slew a defenceless passenger, and is now in honored seclusion (!) in the workhouse, is to be given back his old run on the street car line when he emerges from prison.



What do you think of that!

A report comes by grapevine telegraph that the Rev. John Wesley Hill, D. D., is coming to Ohio again. He is to tell the dear people about the horrible Socialists and how dangerous they are. James Boyle, of this city, has evidently sent out a distress call for help, "P. D. Q." and Hill is coming to the rescue. The Rev. Dr. Hill was paid something like $2,000 for making speeches for the Republican cause in the Buckeye state last year and after the returns were in the g. o. p. leaders thought they had been "horn swoggled." Come on, John Wesley, you are a peach!

Columbus is the "storm center of Socialism." The lightning is flashing already. Get into line.

There is a brighter day coming. The announcement is made that the price of upper berths in sleeping cars has bee reduced twenty per cent. This will be glorious news to the millions of toilers who are either out of work, on short time, or laboring to pay rent and keep something to eat in the house. This reduction means a big saving to them, for which they are undoubtedly grateful.

..TAKE·IT·AWAY·FROM·HIM·THEN!..

War and Socialism?

There was an interesting item in the papers the other day. Five of our largest and most expensive warships are to be sold and replaced by others. Why? Because they make a few knots an hour less than some that have been built very recently. The ships to be discarded have been in use only a few years. They are in every way excellent instruments of death and destruction. However in the last year or two new designs have been perfected that will make slightly better time, so our navy must be reorganized. Thus year after year the United States is making a continual struggle to be up-to-date and the outlay of money is appalling. In 1900, and by this date the number is no doubt greatly increased, there were over 6,000,000 illiterate persons over ten years of age in this country, yet the United States Government spends annually more for War than the whole country spends for public schools. There are at least 2,000,000 child laborers in the country. Think of the food, clothes, shelter and education a single million dollar warship would buy! Think of the vast amount of capital tied up in war ships which are useless almost before they are finished and worse than useless if ever used! Is it not a frightful thing when one-fifth of the wealth of a civilized nation is used in preparations for War?

There was a time when private disputes were settled by the parties themselves by physical encounter. Bodily strength won all contests,—justice none. If a man imagined himself injured by another he proceeded to ease his mind by beating or killing the other. If one man had property desired by another he was pretty certain to lose it if he was less brave or strong than the other. Might was certainly right. But as civilisation progressed the power of the individual became less and that of organised law greater. In modern times disputes must be submitted to a third party,—the court,—for settlement. No man can punish an offender himself, he can not even judge whether an offense has been committed. Why are governments less civilized than their citizens? Why is the whole less civilised than its parts?

Today two angry contending nations —even as the ancient barbarians— refuse to submit differences to a disinterested third party but proceed to fight each other until the stronger forces the weaker to submit. Do you call that logic? Do you call that justice? Do you call that civilisation? Do you call that patriotism?

No, thunders back the united voice of millions of Socialists throughout the world.—No, we call it Capitalism! Nearly all the wars of modern times have been, on one side or the other, wars of conquest, which in the last analysis means capitalism. Wages paid the modern working man are so small that he can afford to buy, for his own consumption, but a very small per cent of what he produces. Labor saving machinery and low wages together produces a large surplus of goods. The capitalist demands foreign markets in which to sell that Surplus. He will have them, peaceably or forcibly. The latter means War. It was "good business policy" for us to control Cuba and own the Philippines. The war with Spain was the result of "good business policy" hiding behind a carefully arranged public sentiment or patriotism.

We doubt if there is any class of men more patriotic than Socialists, if patriotism means pride in good laws and government, longing for free and happy homes, aspiring for nobler and purer surroundings, but if patriotism means a million a year for preparation for War while multitudes are freezing and starving, if it means death, bloodshed, desolation, wars for markets when thousands and thousands of our people are in suffering and want then may Heaven say, Socialists are not patriotic.

When will the workingmen of the World realize that their cause is a common one and that Socialism with its broad lines of universal peace and world wide brotherhood is their only hope?

"INDUSTRIAL PROBLEMS."

N. A. Richardson of California, is the next lecturer in the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course at the Board of Trade Auditorium, Tuesday evening, February 14. Comrade Richardson is without doubt one of the best qualified speakers on this subject in the country and he is well worth hearing.

MINERS REPUDIATE MITCHELL.

Pass Amendment to Constitution Which Bars Miners From Civic Federation.

By a vote on roll call of 1213 to 967, the United Mine Workers in convention Tuesday adopted an amendment to their constitution, providing that members of the National Civic Federation must forfeit membership in the U. M. W. A. which amendment forces John Mitchell, former president of the Mine workers' organization, either to give up his position with the federation or resign from the miners' union.

The vote on roll call followed a standing vote of 446 to 344, taken in the morning, which favored adoption of the amendment, aimed at Mitchell.

"PHILOSOPHY OF SOCIALISM."

The first lecture of the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum course by C. E. Hoffman, editor of that paper, at the Board of Trade Auditorium Friday evening of last week, drew a good sized audience. Comrade J. H. Henderson, president-elect of the Columbus Federation of Labor presided.

The speaker portrayed Socialism as the great reconciler of all philosophies. Beginning with primitive man the individualist, the evolution of the race was traced down to the complex society of the present day. Capitalism founded on antagonism is to be succeeded by Socialism based upon brotherhood. He described poverty as a social disease caused by the deadly miasma of modern life. He made plain the part which rent, interest and profit had in the enriching of the few and the impoverishment of the many. The system under which the banks make the borrower pay for the use of his own credit was thoroughly exposed by Comrade Hoffman who has been a banker himself.

All in all the lecture was a calm, scientific presentation of his subject "The Philosophy of Socialism."

ADAMS COUNTY AWAKE.

A letter has come to The Socialist office from Comrade J. A. Gash, of Winchester, Ohio, which has been turned over to State Secretary Storck. Comrade Gash asks for instructions as to the methods of organizing locals, and says that the Socialists in Adams County are being urged to provide information as to the principles of the party. The people down there are anxious to find some way out of political corruption and are sick of old party domination. There seems to be hope for even "Darkest Adams County."

MORE SHYLOCKISM.

A crusade of extraordinary interest has been brought almost to a favorable conclusion by the American Association for Labor Legislation. It has had for its objects the elimination of the dreadful occupational disease known as "phossy jaw." This disease, produced by handling white phosphorus, is so common among match factory workers as to threaten 65 per cent of all who work at that trade. Manufacturers of matches in this country have claimed that the disease does not exist in America, but they have been driven to admit that it does. There appears to be but one remedy and that is the complete disuse of phosphorus. Accordingly, a measure has been introduced in Congress, known as the Esch Bill, which imposes upon white phosphorus, a prohobitive Federal tax. But this movement has encountered a serious proprietary obstacle. The best and cheapest of the harmless substitutes or white phosphorus is "sesqui-sulphide," on which the Diamond Match Company (the match trust) owns a patent. Independent manufacturers have therefore opposed the Esch bill, fearing that the tax on white phosphorus would operate to give the trust a monopoly of match manufacturing, since they, by their patent, control the only commercially practicable substitute. This difficulty is reported now to have been obviated. In urging the enactemnt of the Esch bill, the American Association for Labor Legislation explains that it has— o mpeeled the Diamond Company to hand over the patent to three trustees, who have complete control to grant its use to future applicants. The trustees are Jackson H. Ralston, counsel for the American Federation of Labor; Commissioner Neill of the U. S. Bureau of Labor, and Professor Seligman of Columbia University.

In the same appeal, the Association says:

America is now the only important country that has not taken this civilised step for the protection of the health of the workers. President Taft in his recent message referred to the frightful nature of the disease, and urged Congress to tax the poison out of existence.—The Public.

MACHINISTS.

Tom Wilson Did A Fine Piece Of Work Down East.

The International Association of Machinists and the Amalgamated Society of Engineers of the New England district have formed an alliance. This act will doubtless create considerable surprise when it is understood that the two organizations have been at swords' points for several years—ever since the A. S. of E. was expelled from the A. F. of L. at the demand of the I. A. of M.—and numerous fights have taken place in the shops and the courts as a result. The agreement reads:

"It is hereby agreed between the International Association of Machinists of District 19 and the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, Eastern District, that each and every man, regardless of his membership in either of the above organizations, shall receive the same treatment that is accorded to the machinists of either trade, and it is further agreed that all actions looking toward a betterment of the machinists' craft shall be of joint character, to the end that both organizations and their respective members may receive such increases as may be accorded and the craft benefitted thereby."

The document is signed for the I. A. of M. by Vice-President Wilson and for the A. S. of E. by John E. Nolan, president of the district. The members of both organizations are quite enthusiastic at the harmonious relations that have been restored as far as New England is concerned. Tom Wilson is given the credit for having engineered the deal to bring about peace. In fact Wilson has made a great hit in New England. Last week he was transferred and before leaving the Boston members held a farewell social session in his honor. He was showered with presents and eulogistic speeches, and local officers all agreed that Tom Wilson had rescued the district from next door to zero and made it one of the best in the country with 4,000 organized men in Boston and 20,000 in New England.

We may expect to hear of the whipping post and the pillory being erected in Milo, Ohio, by the township officials in the near future are excluded time some of the citizens are excluded from the Township Hall because these "divine right to rule" despots, did not agree with their political faith. Some day we expect to borrow, a powerful microscope, to search for these suppressors of free speech in a FREE COUNTRY.

Such petty tricks moves the cause onward.

Seven members of the Labor group in the Legislature voted against paying the Columbus Rail and Light Bill or $180,000, for the use of the Militia during the Street Car Strike in Columbus, Ohio. Reports claim we have TWELVE LABOR MEMBERS in the House, hence five, of them, are on record as favoring appropriations to shoot down their fellow workers.

One of our "select" hotels compelled the colored miners' delegates to ride in the freight elevator, when on their way to the National Secretary's office. This act caused the convention to serve notice on this official, to move his office to a more humane locality. After one of the many terrible mine disasters in West Virgina, a scene was enacted that will never be forgotten by those who witnessed the same. On the depot at Huntington, W. Va., stood a colored mother and eight small children, the youngest was at her breast. On a baggage truck close by in a rough pine box was the remains of her husband. This man with the black skin was down under the ground when the explosion occured, digging coal to provide the "select" with warmth. We extend an apology to our colored brethren. Let us assure them, that we have some people here in Columbus, who go down on their hands each night and repeat the Lord's Prayer and live its meaning next day. But there are others who see THEIR GOD in a hand mirror.

There seems to be something wrong with the State appropriation. This is a late hour in the day, to find sleepers in passed measures. Labor had better watch the Wertz Bill. The prison contractors are wide awake. The capitalist press has started another flood of crocodile tears over the lamented condition OF THE POOR IDLE CONVICTS but devil a word do they say about the poor honest unemployed. Let the convicts be used for road work. Oh, no, this would affect the dignity of the prison tooth pick brigade.

The woman's eight hour bill, is now on its way to the house. WATCH FOR RESULTS and don't forget that OLD CUSHIONS is doing a skull face smile these days. The "wind" had better stay in Marion and watch the City Council give the people's rights [illegible]

COMRADES AND FRIENDS.

Your last chance to buy $15, $18 and $20 Suits and Overcoats for only $8.75, at The Liberty, 198-200 East Main street.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to inform you that the management of the National Corn Show which is being held in Columbus, has been unfair to Union Labor.

The Carpenter work has been done by non-union men. The business agent of the Carpenter's has called upon Mr. Stevens, the manager who refused to have anything to do with Union Carpenters or even give the question a reasonable consideration.

Consequently the Carpenter's District Council of Columbus declared the National Corn Show as unair and unfriendly to Labor, and is not worthy of Labor's patronage.

Fraternally yours,
L. M. Fadeley, Pres.
J. J. Hartley, Sec'y.

GLASS BOTTLE BLOWERS.

At a regular meeting of Branch No. 106 of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association of the United States and Canada, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The price of living has increased to such an extent, that it has been a severe question, for the average workingman to properly support his family, and

Whereas, We view with alarm the rumor, that the expiration of the present franchise, the Gas Company will ask for a new franchise, with an increase of price, therefore be it

Resolved, that we, the members of Branch No. 106, do hereby protest against the granting of a franchise, to any company, corporation, or individual, to furnish natural gas to the citizens of Columbus, at more than the flat rat, of twenty-five (25) cents per thousand (1000) cubic feet, and be it further,

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, be mailed to Dr. Heintz, Councilman, representing the First Ward.

PHOTO-ENGRAVERS.

The Big Boston Strike Has Resulted In Victory.

Photo-engravers have won a distinct victory in Boston. After the defeat of the bosses in the contempt case, in which they sought to railroad some of the members to prison, they capitulated completely.

Seventeen offices have been won. While the exact terms of the final settlement are not made public, it is said that every one of the 240 strikers will be given his former position if he wishes to accept it. The establishment of a weekly minimum of $21, with an eight-hour day, and extra allowance for overtime work, and suitable apprentice regulations, are claimed by the unions.

Previous to the calling of the strike there was no minimum wage scale in these shops. The bosses simply operated under a go-as-you-please style and depended upon non-unionists to fill the places of union men. But they were fooled, after spending a fortune in good, hard coin.

PATTERNMAKERS.

Cleveland Association is Against Convention in 1911.

Patternmakers held a special meeting Friday evening to consider the convention matter and other business. The sentimegt in that city is against holding a convention this year.

BOILERMAKERS.

The Question of Strike Is Now Depending On Conference.

Vice President Louis Weyand and Al. Hinsman are at present in consultation with the general superintendent of motive power of the New York Central Lines in New York City. It will all depend upon the answer they receive to the demand that the obnoxious piece system be abolished whether or not a general strike will be called all over the New York Central system.

There is quite a bitter feeling among the boilermakers because of the actions of certain sub-bosses. Members be appointed to enforce the law. It is Cleveland men were working by the piece and the local members were informed that theAshtabula men were on piece-work. The latter appointed a committee to come to Cleveland and investigate and the entire story was exploded. Now the men are more determined than ever to abolish the slavish piece system.

Vice-President Nolan writes from Washington that the national boiler inspection bill has passed the Senate and will go through the House and be signed by the President. It will mean that 400 competent boilermakers will be appointed to enorce the law. It is likely that H. S. Jeffrey, of Richmond, Va., will become chief inspector.

ALONE WITH HER SORROW.

Time: January, 1911.

Place: Columbus, Ohio.

Characters: An aged woman and an Infirmary Director.

Scene: An abandoned street car used as a home.

And since "All the world's a stage," the above furnishes the stage setting for a sad little tragedy enacted in our city during the severe cold weather that raged early in the month. The story is short and soon told. An aged woman whose only home for the past three years had been in an abandoned street car, and who had been barely existing on what meager labor she was able to perform, finally was compelled to give up the fight for the struggle of existence and was removed to the Infirmary.

When found in her pitiful condition the snow was drifting in at the windows of her miserable shelter, she was scantily clad in a man's cast off coat and vest, her feet were nearly bare, she was without food, friendless and alone; but greatest of her suffering, so she said, was her fear of the poor-house. But at last, the fear against which she had fought for so long became a reality. The cold was so bitter, food so high and sparce, and Christian charity, alas, so rare. She was taken to the poor-house because she could no longer claim her small share of the earth's bountifulness.

The little tragedy was heartrending, but being a 'real tragedy" there were no beautifully gowned women present to weep over its sorrowful ending when the curtain went down, though, no doubt, there were many of them at the time shedding tears and feeling deeply over some play sorrow being enacted on the stage.

There were none present to witness this performance, and few there were who even cared to read the account of the happening next day in the papers. But let us hope that some few, not wholly hardened to such scenes, even though they are so common; some few with that greatest of all virtues in their hearts,—the virtue of charity,—sat down for a time after reading the sory and pondered why such a thing could be in a land of abundant plenty. Let us hope they asked themselves this question: what kind of a civilization are we living in that will send one woman to the poor-house because she is old and friendless and destitute, and at the same time give to another, because she happens to be born into the velvet lap of luxury, more wealth than she can possibly spend in a life time? Then, let us hope that gradually the truth bursts upon the vision of this few. Let us hope they realize that such conditions can only be possible where centralized wealth has fastened its poisonous fangs into a nation's heart and is feeding on the ruins of a once glorious Republic, and that until the destroying system is changed, these sad human tragedies will continue to be acted and reacted with all the misery following in their wake.

Then let us hope that this few will register a vow to do all within their power to hasten the coming of the time when such tragedies will be no more. If, after having read the story, even a very few registered this vow, then the poor old woman's life has not been in vain, nor has it been a failure, even though the worst she feared has come upon her; for since we are told that it is a mathematical fact that so small a thing as the casting of a pebble from one's hand alters the center of gravity of the universe, so the influence of these few whom we sincerely hope the story has touched, will go out over widening currents like circles in the water, until many others with them are brought to a realization of the truth, which alone will make us free and give to all pleasant homes and plenty to eat.

It is a touching story,—this poor woman's life. True, it is not much to the world, yet all the world to her, for the sorrowful ending represents the culmination of all her past. Like you, her hopes once beat high in anticipation of what life might hold; and it promised so many glowing possibilities, so many golden dreams, for this is such a beautiful world to be happy in if we only have the happiness. But as day followed day, one by one she watched her hopes fade out and die. She saw the possibilities grow fewer at each year's end, and the dreams become less bright. At last but one wish remained and she clung to it with all the fervor of her nature. It was that she might have a home and the dear privilege of being independent, and for this dream she struggled and toiled and prayed. Then one cold winter's twilight saw this last dream vanish, and hope died within her never again to be rekindled on this earth.

Can we picture the anguish that was hers? Can we know the suffering? Perhaps it is best summed up in Longfellow's words when he says: "The setting of a great hope is like the setting of the sun.—The brightness of our life is gone. Shadows of evening fall around us, and the world seems but a dim reflection, itself a broader shadow. We look forward into the coming lonely night. The soul withdraws into itself."

And so she of our story is alone today in the sorrow of the setting of her hope; alone and sad when so many are happy and smiling in the possession of more of the creature comforts than they need. Such things are necessary yet a little while longer, and then from the derelict lives of just such bruised and saddened humanity, phoenix like, the new order will arise, purged of the coruption of greed, strong and mighty, with healing in its wings to cure the sad distemper of the state.

WOMAN BANKERS A SUCCESS.

Kansas women are coming to the front rapidly as bankers. Ten years ago only two women held official positions in the banks of that state. Today there are more than 550. Of this number 4 are Presidents, 56 Cashiers, 250 Assistant Cashiers and 250 Directors. This doesn't take into account stenographers and book-keepers. It only includes the list of women who have some say in the actual management of the banks.

"If women were at the head of all our financial institutions there would be little need of bank supervision, and there would be no 'bankers colony' in our penitentiaries."

This declaration was made by Miss Anna Speck, of the Bank Commissioner's office, whose work is to go through the reports of the bank examiners and tell the bankers what ails their institutions. Miss Speck probably knows more about the conditions of Kansas state banks than any other person. It is her business to know, and she doesn't shirk her duty. It will no doubt be news to many bankers to know that the letters they receive from the Bank Commissioner telling them where their banks are out of joint are prepared by a woman. But such is the fact.

"The advance made by women in the banking business, especially in the past five years, is remarkable," said Miss Speck.

"They are now filling positions of responsibility, and their keen insight into things, their ability to read people and ther absolute honesty have made them invaluable in banking circles. Reports which reach my desk show that a bank whose affairs are managed by a woman is in splendid condition. The banking room and desk present a neat appearance, the books are in balance, the legal reserve is intact, overdrafts are few, the paper is clean and well secured, and the general affairs of the bank are in every way above criticism." — Western Banker.

WEEKLY SERMONETTE.

"Be still and know that I am God."—There is stillness that is vocal if we listen well, and in it we may hear the still, small voice speaking from out of the silence to our inner selves.

After the friction of the day has chafed us, sometimes so sorely; after we have done our best, or worst; after the joys or the sorrows, it matters not which; then is the accepted time to be alone for the short communion with ourselves which will strengthen our spiritual needs and teach us the better to know God.

We are alone,—quite alone. We have left just beyond the door of our closet the petty worries that troubled us throughout the long day; we have forgotten for the time all our injuries, fancied or real. We are quite calm, and we think only upon the beautiful things of life — and the good. Heaven seems very near. There is a holy hush, for some secret is about to be whispered to the listening soul. There is a gentle peace about us, a sweet influence surrounds us. It plays upon our heart-strings like wind vibrating chords upon an aeolian harp. We are happy; we know peace. Then it that the still, small voice speaks. We listen, for we would know what God is.

The still, small voice answers: "God is love."

All women want to vote, though all woman may not wish for one. "There's a strange man at the door, sir," announced the new servant from Boston. "What does he want?" asked the master of the house, impatiently. "Begging your pardon, sir," replied the servant, a shade o disapproval manifest in his voice, "he wants a bath, but what he is waking for is something to eat."

Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, the aristocratic anti-suffragist, recently said that we had women physicians, woman lawyers, women lecturers, women in all fields, but what we most need is women females. Yes, Mrs. Fish, but not women females who spend fortunes on a single gown.

ETERNAL JUSTICE.

When mind meets mind, and passions burn that seek to conquer wrongs;
Intelligence, with joint accord, can see mankind in thongs;
Nor sect, nor creed can blindly lead to keep those minds apart,
That dare to teach in forceful speech, ideals of the heart.

When Duty calls on volunteers to lead the cause of Right
Those hearts respond—with purpose pure, put selfish ends to flight.
But selfish man enjoins the plan, that seeks to stifle greed;
The world looks down with angry frown, on all who dare to lead.

When Greece and Rome were flourishing, and haughty Spain was great;
Those woman wrongs were then the same, and martyrs met their fate;
But God decrees Himself to please, and empires pass away,
While Justice lives with him who gives throughout eternity.

DAVID B. ROBB.

DID NOT KNOW ENOUGH.

Hon. A. W. Kruger, twice a Senator from Brown County, is a county option, woman's suffrage Dutchman, recently told the following amusing story:

"One of my neighbors is an illiterate fellow, and he went to the little school mistress in our district with the big constitutional and referendum ballots, to ask her to read and explain them to him. When she had explained the first he said, "Yah, yah, I vote for him." After hearing the second measure explained, he repeated, "Yah, yah, I vote for him," but when the woman's suffrage provision was explained, he said, "Yah, I enderstand him." "But will you not vote for him," asked the teacher?" "Nay, nay," answered the enlightened citizen, "woman do not know enough to vote."

CULLINGS.

The mass of the female sex suffers in two respects: On the one side woman suffers from economic and social dependence upon man. True enough, this dependence may be alleviated by formally placing her upon an equality before the law and in point of rights; but the dependence is not removed. On the other side, woman suffers from the economic dependence that woman in general, the working woman in particular, finds herself in, along with the workingman.—August Bebel.

It is not the rare gifts, the possessions of the few: it is not great wealth, great learning, great genius or great power: it is not these things that make the possessors happy. It is health it is friendship, it is love at home; it is the voices of children; it is sunshine. It is the blessings that are commonest, not those that are rarest; it is the gifts that God has scattered everywhere.—C. H. Morrison.

The wife of August Bebel recently died. Bebel is the author of the book on Woman, which enemies of Socialism have quoted as favoring free love. Yet Bebel maintained a monagomous home since 1866, 54 years, and writes a tender tribute to his wife. "I have never had cause to repent my marriage," he says. "It would be impossible to find a more loving, devoted, self-sacrificing wife. That I have attained what I have is owing in the first instance to her untiring care. And she had to go through many hard days, months and years, until at last the sun of more peaceful times began to shine."

The example of more than fifty years of home building ought to offset any twisting of words in criticism.

ON EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

Mrs. Bachman made a strong and able speech for Equal Suffrage at the Farmers' Institute in West Jefferson, Ohio, last Thursday morning. The hall was full and the audience enthusiastic. The cause of Equal Suffrage has so grown in favor that the institutes all over the state have this year opened their doors to speakers, through the efforts of Mrs. Harriet Taylor Upton of Warren, Ohio, state treasurer of the Ohio Woman's Suffrag Association.

THE UNSEEN HAND.

In an address before the Child Welfare Exhibition, Mr. Benjamin C. Marsh related an incident that is characteristic of the concatenation of interests in our present day society. While he was secretary of a society in Philadelphia for the protection of children, it had been his duty to issue several hundreds of warrants each year against parents. But he always felt that he was attacking the wrong persons. The warrants should have been issued not against the poor and helpless parents of the poor and helpless children, but against the owners of tenement houses who were battening upon the poverty and helplessness of parents and children. This, however, he could not do. The law was against it. So he proposed to publish the names of these tenement owners, in order, we suppose, to make them feel ashamed of themselves and to punish them by a sort of social ostracism.

Imagine, therefore, the surprise of good, well-meaning, innocent Mr. Marsh when he discovered that such a list would contain the names of members of his own board of trustees, of the board to which he was accountable for his acts, of the board of this very charitable organization!

This experience of Mr. Marsh is by no means an exceptional one. Similar experiences have been made by other charitable workers. Also by journalists who have been commissioned to investigate important cases and discover the responsible parties, the "men higher up." Such investigations have again and again been suddenly and unaccountably stopped, for the "men higher up" have been found to be men in control of the very publication in which the articles were to appear, or friends and associates of those in control. The efforts of the honest journalists have been thwarted by an unseen hand. The concatenation of capitalistic interests is nowdays extremely involved. The directors of charity are also the beneficiaries of pitiless exploitation. The publishers of news are also beneficiaries of secret favors and concessions, as witness the attitude of the Hearst press to Diaz of Mexico. The entire capitalist class is pervaded with corruption, and improvement is possibly only through the combined action of the workers.

JUST BECAUSE A BABY LAUGHED.

The recent strike of neckwear workers was precipitated by a laugh. A little girl gave forth a rollicking, happy, chirrup of a laugh at something that amused her, and the trouble began. The boss fired her for the awful crime of laughing! In the sweatshops of greed nobody laughs. Every day is too near a funeral for the workers to laugh.

Perhaps this child was not so long from the country that she had forgotten how to laugh. Anyway, she laughed.

Her fellow workers protest against the brutal speech and action of the boss. They were tired of it all. The grind, the long hours, the wretched pay, the abominable sanitary conditions, the leering bosses, the battle with life.

Scores quit. Scores swelled to hundreds. Hundreds to thousands. The fight was on. Women were clubbed by the police with that brutality that has made New York infamous. Women were dragged to jail and sent to prison for terms that have not yet expired. The lower courts of New York are infamous, too.

All because a little child laughed.

Some day a little child will laugh and start a revolution in the United States. PERHAPS THAT CHILD IS BORN NOW. Who knows?—Ex.

"Socialism would destroy incentive, break up the home, undermine our sacred institutions and defy our laws," said the judges as he read his decision holding that the coal companies were not guilty of violating the anti-trust law when the various heads met in conference and boosted the price, "and in this connection the learned court is of the opinion that the seeds which breed Socialism and disrespect for our courts and casts suspicion upon its judges, is the illegal act of illiterate and dissatisfied workingmen joining together in a labor union, for the avowed purpose of increasing wages, and shortening the hours of labor, entailing greater hardships upon employers and advancing the cost of living. Capital has prior rights; capitalists are the greatest benefactors of charity, the most liberal contributors to philanthropy, the promulgators of thought, defenders of religion, upholders of morality, respecters of the courts, patrons o the army, supporters o the navy, followers of our flag and citizens whose right to an honest profit cannot be denied. It is now entered of record that the plaintiff in this action—a member of the union—be assessed the costs and stand committed for six months." And when the judge awoke Socialism was still growing.

The international character of the Socialist movement is realized somewhat when the Voice of Labour, devoted to "Socialism, Industrialism, Unionism and Politics" reaches our table from Johannesburg, South Africa. It is a sixteen page publication with four columns to the page and is intensely English, but just as intensely radical. The banner of Socialism floats on every continent and almost every nation of the world.

MY SHADOW.

I have a little shadow that goes in and out with me,
And what can be the use of him is more than I can see.
He is very, very like me from the heels up to the head;
And I see him jump before me, when I jump into my bed.

The funniest thing about him is the way he likes to grow—
Not at all like proper children, which is always very slow;
For he sometimes shoots up taller, like an india-rubber ball,
And he sometimes gets so little that there's none of him at all.

He hasn't got a notion of how children ought to play,
And can only make a fool of me in every sort of way.
He stays so close beside me, he's a coward you can see;
I'd think shame to stick to nurse as that shadow sticks to me!

One morning, very early, before the sun was up,
I rose and found the shining dew on every buttercup;
But my lazy little shadow, like an arrant sleepy-head,
Had stayed at home behind me and was fast asleep in bed.

—R. L. STEVENSON
in A Child's Garden of Verses.

THINGS THAT NO BOY MUST DO.

First and foremost, of the utmost importance, no boy must be unclean.

God made this world three-fourths water, and one-fourth land. The object is plain. It was done so that there should be plenty of water with which to wash the habitable fourth.

The arch enemy of the human body is Dirt, any kind, material or spiritual.

To get the habit of bathing every day, of keeping your finger-nails clean of brushing your teeth, washing out your nostrils, and having your feet as pure as your face, is better than a life-insurance policy.

Almost all diseases come from dirt.

There is joy in just being clean inside and out that is like no other satisfaction in the world.

Dirt in the mind and soul is worse than dirt on the body.

••••••

Don't Abandon Your Ideals.

You have certain inborn ambitions. Be true to them. You must live your own life. No matter how high you set your mark, do not lower it. "Hitch your wagon to a star!"

It is important, of course, to get on in the world, to gain high position, to make money, and all that; but most important of all is to be noble, true and unafraid in your soul, and so to live that when your days are finished you can look upon the sum of them with inward satisfaction.

••••••

Don't Be Afraid.

I do not mean physical fear. I have nothing to say about being afraid of guns and thunder and cholera; but don't be afraid down in your heart of undertaking anything great. No man ever achieved any great work with hand or heart or brain until he had stricken from brain and heart and hand the shackles of fear.

Here is President McKinley's favorite quotation; it is from Emerson:

Go near is grandeur to our dust,
Go near is God to man,
When Duty whispers low, "Thou must!"
The youth replies, "I can!"

••••••

Don't Go in Debt.

"Debt," said Henry Ward Beecher, "is h——l!"

If you cannot pay for a thing, do without it. Debts are chains wrapped around your arms as you attempt to do your work in the world.

Don't borrow! Be beholden to nobody. And don't accept gifts. Take only what you earn. All a man amounts to, after all, is what he makes of himself.

••••••

Don't Get Estranged from Your Parents.

You will never have but one own father, and one own mother. Very often father and son get cromways. They do not understand each other. They bicker and quarrel. They suspect one the other. No greater misfortune can happen a boy. Do your best to be friendly with your father. If you cannot do and be all he wishes, at least be loving and companionable with him. Believe me, you get a certain help from a father you can get from no other man. Don't let anybody get between you two if you can avoid it.

And keep intimate with your mother. She feels to you as no other woman ever will. She loves you more unselfishly than any other human being will ever love you. Stick to her. Be loyal to her. Be close to her.

••••••

Don't Fail to Get a Training.

I do not use the word education. There are some kinds of education that are of doubtful value. But training is absolutely essential these days. The one class of men that are being more and more crowded off the face of the earth is the class who have nothing to offer in the world's work but their unskilled hands. Every trade, calling and profession is crying loud for skilled men.

Schools are so cheap and plenty nowadays that no boy has an excuse for not getting the mastery of some kind of work. To be able to do some useful thing better than the next man can do it is to have your life made sure of fulness and usefulness.

A man who wants to win a race is a fool if he load himself with unnecessary burdens.

There never lived a healthy human being that ever needed on drop of alcohol, one pinch of tobacco before he was thirty years old.

I am not discussing what mature men may need, but no sane person will say that a growing boy needs stimulants. Every drink of alcoholic beverage, every smoke or chew of tobacco you take during adolescence is a chance you give your enemy to cripple or kill you in the nick of success. It is infinitely better for you to cut off your right hand than to form the liquor habit. Your chances for a happy life would be better.

••••••

Don't Despair.

Above all things, don't get discouraged or despondent!

Courage is half the battle!

An ounce of faith in yourself is worth a ton of experience.

Keep your chin up. No matter what happens, come up smiling. Fortune, or luck, or whatever men call it, always gets tired after awhile of punishing a man who will not despair.

"A man," said Abraham Lincoln, "is about as happy as he makes up his mind to be."

Cheerfulness, contentment, good spirits, are much more a matter of sheer habit and will-power than one is apt to suppose.

If you cannot do anything else in the world, you can so act as to make those around you comfortable and happy. A great element of success in any business is to have an agreeable personality, to make people like you. A pleasant, jovial, companionable fellow can handle men and can accomplish things a grumpy and sour man could never do.

••••••

Don't Depend on Anybody but Yourself.

Don't look for a pull. Don't ask help. Don't seek the influence of others.

Trust yourself, trust your friends, trust the absolute accuracy and infallibility of the eternal laws of Goodness.

Self-respect, self-reliance, self-reverence; these three you must have.

Self-pity, egotism, self-suspicion; these three you must shun.

THE FAIRIES' WINDOW PANE.

The fairies did it, I am sure;
They built it in the night.
They made with tiny snowflakes pure
A crystal palace white.

It covers all the window-pane
With towers in a row;
I cannot see the weather-vane,
Or how the breezes blow.

I hold my breath when I stand near,
Lest it will melt away;
The sun will make it disappear
Too early in the day.

But while it stays I know I'll find
Some wonder new to me;
I think the fairies have been kind
To little boys like me.

"Likewise the safest methods of evading the laws are framed up in clubs," he shot at Dupuy.

Bartelmy pretended to side with Brand.

"That's neat, Wheeler," he laughed. "He scored off you that time, Dupuy." Bartelmy paused. He had now reached a point where he was about to make his supreme effort to capture Nolan and the Advance, to make them friendly to him. He was about to play what Dupuy had truthfully termed "the trump card." "By the way, Mr. Nolan, Judge Culver and I usually dine two or three times a week at the Oak Door club. We need you there. We should have a man in all our discussions of public questions—we should have a practical man of affairs who knows what reformers like our young friend here are really trying to get at. Shall I propose you for membership?"

Dupuy watched the effect of Bartelmy's words on Nolan with intense eagerness. It was an anxious moment for both Dupuy and Bartelmy. If Nolan accepted they felt that they were safe. As for Nolan, he was greatly perplexed. He wanted to accept the proffer, both for his own sake and for his family's. Membership in the Oak Door club was equivalent to a ticket of admission into the fashionable circles of the city. He would be able then to put his wife and daughter in the way of gratifying their desires. Sylvester, too, would be benefited in whatever business career he should take up, and the membership would enable him to meet and make his personal friends the most prominent men of the city—the men he naturally craved to associate with—on terms of equality. Then he spoke:

"Really, judge," he said warmly, "that's something that I never expected to hear from your lips."

"Not at all; not at all! I shall be delighted to put you up, and Dupuy will second me."

"With pleasure," bowed the lawyer.

Nolan hesitated over his final reply. He remembered what Brand had stated regarding the attentions of Judge Bartelmy and his daughter. Probably this offer was a trick, a bribe, and it did not improve the situation to have Dupuy brought into it by the jurist as seconder of his nomination. Still, the idea came into his head—if he accepted it he did it with his eyes open; he need not necessarily change the policy of the Advance toward certain public men. Thus he reasoned, and still there lingered within him an insidious desire, even a prompting, in view of the advantages for himself and his family, to accept at all hazards, under any circumstances.

"Thank you, gentlemen, thank you," he said, temporizing, in an endeavor to gain time before actually committing himself. He glanced across the room at Wheeler Brand, wondering how he was accepting the situation. Brand took a quick step forward, straightened himself stiffly and shot a glance of warning over the shoulder of Bartelmy, whose back was turned to him. Nolan nodded his head slightly to show that he understood. Dupuy caught the interchange of signals, and he glared malignantly at the young managing editor. He saw that Brand would do his utmost to swing Nolan away from the subtle snare. Nolan addressed the judge. "I'll think it over—and thank you once more."

Bartelmy and Dupuy started toward a door.

"Now, if you will excuse us, Dupuy and I will join the ladies," said the jurist. "Wheeler, you're not going away yet, eh?" he added.

Brand moved toward the hall door and ignored the query.

"What's your hurry, Wheeler?" asked Nolan as Bartelmy and Dupuy disappeared.

"Oh, it's time to get back to the office."

"H-m! What's the trouble?"

"What's the use of talking about it?"

"Come, get it off your chest."

"I don't have to tell you, Mr. Nolan." He drew closer to his employer.

"You think Mike Nolan is going back on you—isn't that it?"

The young man's voice rang out in his deep disappointment that Nolan was lingering on the verge of an acceptance of Bartelmy's offer, which could mean only two things if his employer yielded, and these were the muzzling of the Advance and the silencing of Brand as long as he remained on the paper. He blamed Nolan bitterly for failing to spurn the offer outright on the moment.

"Do you think you can accept favors from Bartelmy with one hand," he cried, "and knife him with the other?"

Nolan gave a spirited but kindly reply:

"Hold your horses, Wheeler. You know I don't care anything about this social stunt for myself. It don't fit into my life, but remember I've got a family, and nothing comes ahead of them. Mother and I may have a jangle now and then; but, after all, we have been side partners for a good many years. And my girl! There ain't a finer educated or a prettier girl in New York, and she ought to be able to go anywhere, but she can't in this town—this cold man's town. Then, of course, there's Sylvester. I know he ain't as bright as he might be, and I've spent—well, more than twice your salary trying to get him through freshman year at Harvard, and I couldn't, but still he's my son, and if he wants to run around with these other sports, why not? I can afford it, and I guess the kid's got to sow his wild oats anyway. My wife and children ought to be happy with the money I've got, and, as I figure it, if I join this Oak Door club I can help them to get what they want. Do you follow me, Brand?"

"Yes; I understand," sighed Brand. "At first you took up the side of the people, and you are continuing at it. But you and your family have become ambitious, or, at least, so far as you are concerned, you are ambitious for them. When you begin to associate familiarly with rich men as their friend you'll soon find yourself playing golf or billiards with one, drinking whisky with another, and your son will marry the daughter of a third. You will forget all about the people. Your paper will become decadent and feeble. The circulation will dry up." He paused for breath and added warmingly in strong tones, "The Advance is now at its zenith, but its decline begins the very day that you are elected to the Oak Door club."

Nolan reached over and seized Brand by the shoulder.

"Wheeler, you're a decent sort of a fellow. I like you and the things you've made the paper stand for, but you don't know what it means to put people that you love on the altar and cause them suffering for the sake of these—these general principles."

"Don't!" exclaimed the young editor. "Well, that's exactly what I've done. I gave up the girl I loved, who had promised to be my wife, so that I might write the truth." In spite of the emotion which his words had aroused in him Brand's voice never faltered as he spoke.

"You did!" exclaimed Nolan amazedly. "Well, my boy, I don't understand you. I couldn't do that," he confessed.

"Don't think that it was easy for me to do. I've thought of her every hour of every day since, but she"—now his voice wavered—"well, she's forgotten, so it doesn't matter. Mr. Nolan, do you remember what it was that first brought us together?"

"Yes; that story about Judge Bartelmy, and it was a good one, and you've followed it up with a lot of good ones since. Why, Wheeler, there ain't a man in the country that can work up a series like you can. But, do you know, I'm beginning to think that the judge is not all bad. Mind you, I'm not forgetting old scores, but"—he paused himself—"did you ever think of it, perhaps we haven't all the facts of that affair? Some things have happened. Are you sure that he's as all dred wrong?"

"Mr. Nolan, the best bated been said about Judge Bartelmy," cried Brand.

"Well, this is getting to be a pretty serious affair. We want to be sure about our facts."

"Mr. Nolan, Judge Bartelmy is not only a dishonest judge, but he seems to have a corruptive influence on every one near him. He's corrupt and corrupting, not only in his public life in his private life."

"Wasn't—wasn't it his daughter that you were engaged to?"

"Yes, it was, and he's using her just as he did her mother before her."

"You amaze me. What do you mean?"

Brand took a deep breath.

"Why, he surrounded her mother with machine politicians and shady financiers and crooked lawyers. He sent her to the state capital when he wanted to be senator, but it was impossible; to Washington when he wanted to be minister to France, and she failed, and again when he wanted to be judge, and she succeeded, and when she found out that he was using his judicial office to steal and that she had only been a lobbyist for his rotten schemes"—

"Well?"

"Well, it killed her, Mr. Nolan, and now he's using his daughter in the same way. He's filling his house with corporation jackals like Dupuy. He sends her here to muzzle you by working on your wife and daughter. He hates me, but he would let her marry me to have his enemy in the family and make him silent."

"Why don't you go to the girl and tell her?" suggested the newspaper owner.

"About her mother and why she died?"

"Well, perhaps not. But I hope you won't follow the Bartelmy story any further. I'll be just as well pleased."

"I've got to follow it, Mr. Nolan. I can't stop," ejaculated Brand. "I've got the goods on him now. I've got a story that will drive him off the bench when we print it."

"What?" half rising.

"True; every word of it." Brand paced nervously across the room.

"For God's sake, Wheeler, don't go off at half cock!" cried Nolan.

"Half cock! Why, I tell you I've got the facts. I've been working on it for months."

"Don't go off at half cock."

"Now, listen to me. You're a young man. In spite of what you say about him I know that in his public life he's mighty well thought of by some of the most prominent men in this city, and"—weakly—"well, if they believe in him I don't—see—why"—

"Will nothing convince you?" excitedly. "If he should offer me a bribe to kill this story would you acknowledge then that he's a crook?"

"Why, yes, of course I would."

"Will you let me print that story in my own way and promise not to interfere?"

"Yes. But the girl," Nolan reminded him—"how do you think she'll feel if you print that story?"

But Brand was not to be swerved from his purpose.

"It can't be helped. I've got to go on. Somehow you know the thought comes to me that perhaps it all may turn out for the best."

"Well, I hope so," commented the newspaper owner, "but, man alive, that story you"—

He was forced to cease abruptly, for Judge Bartelmy and Ed Dupuy entered the drawing room and drew near.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE abruptness with which Brand separated from Nolan as they appeared aroused the suspicions of both the judge and his lobbyist satellite. However, they little imagined the pronounced seriousness of the conversation they had interrupted. In the mind of each ran the thought that the Advance's proprietor and his editor had been discussing the proposal to elect Nolan to the Oak Door club. Even a failure in this laudable venture they would have considered a serious setback, but probably had they an intimation regarding the story Brand wanted to write and the effort that was to be made to detect the judge in offering a money bribe they would have exhibited less of the easy assurance that marked their reentrance into the drawing room.

"Mr. Nolan, I'm afraid I must be going," said Bartelmy. "I hope to see you at my house soon, and you, too, Wheeler."

Nolan rose from his chair.

"Judge, can you spare me a few moments?" put in Brand resolutely.

The judge gave a look of surprise.

"Certainly, my boy; certainly. Will you excuse me?" turning to Nolan.

Nolan, surprised at the readiness of Brand to begin on the plan to entrap Bartelmy, readily assented and proceeded into the library with Dupuy.

"Well, Wheeler, what can I do for you?" asked Judith's father.

The young man stepped close to the other and faced him squarely.

"Judge, how about your latest decision in the Lansing Iron case today?" he asked.

Bartelmy started back in surprise.

"It was in accordance with the statutes and the constitution," he finally said.

"The supreme court of the United States was at variance with you in a similar case," advised Brand.

"Sir," indignantly, "I decline to discuss out of court questions relating to my conduct on the bench."

The judge moved as though to go.

"You weren't so particular this morning."

Bartelmy began to lose his confident, lofty poise.

"I fail to comprehend you," he answered.

"Early this morning, between 1 o'clock and 2," went on the unrelenting editor.

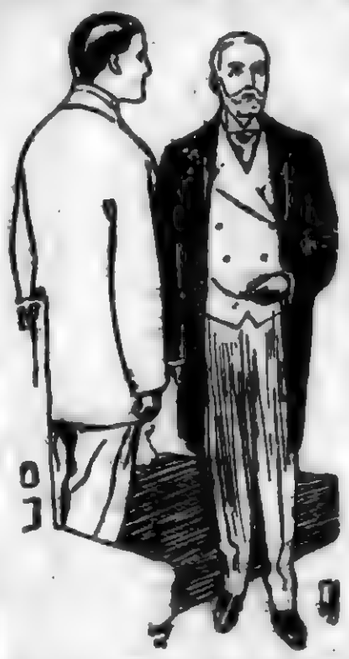
The judge turned his head to one side and tugged nervously at his gray beard.

"A reporter for the Advance saw you come out of your house at four minutes to 1 and walk to a house on Washington avenue that belongs to the attorney for the Lansing Iron corporation."

Bartelmy turned his back on Brand, a furtive look coming into his eyes as he did so.

"You knocked at the servants' door, judge," continued the editor. "This man admitted you. One hour and fifty-seven minutes later you left that house by the same door and returned home rapidly on foot. You kept your coat collar turned up, and, contrary to your usual custom, you wore a slouched hat pulled down over your eyes. Half an hour later Dupuy came out of the same house. Ten hours later you handed down your decision reversing on a technicality the judgment of the lower court in the Lansing Iron case and freezing out the small stockholders in favor of the insiders, as usual. There, Judge Bartelmy, are my facts!"

Bartelmy made a desperate effort to retain his self control and to command his ability to think clearly and effectively in this dire emergency. At last he spoke after minutely scrutinizing the accusing figure of Brand before him.



"It's easily explained, Mr. Brand," he said in hoarsed tones. "It's a lie; that is all it is. Your reporter lied."

"I was the reporter," exclaimed the accuser in a supremely contemptuous manner, and as he spoke he wondered and marveled that such a man as the betrayer, Bartelmy, could be the father of such a girl as Judith—Judith, whom he was even now, he was convinced, putting away from his arms and his love for all time.

The false judge paled. His mouth became parched. Had he not leaned against a chair for support it is likely that his knees would not have retained enough strength to hold him up. The jig was up. Plainly the end was in sight. Indeed, it had already arrived unless—unless— Yes, there was one possible way out—if Brand would listen to the proposal. Listen? Every man had his price. Dupuy had told him so. He knew it anyway, and Brand was poor. He was ambitious too. Ah, reasoned the false judge, that is a dangerous combination—poverty and ambition. Few could overcome it honestly; few ever had, ever would. And I am rich—

"Well, what do you propose to do?" he asked of Brand, putting it up to the other man to lead the conversation at this point, just as a clever tactician should.

"He'll make the Trusts come to time," said the Voter.

"How?" asked the Janitor.

"He is honest and a fighter; he knows what the people want and how to get it," said the Voter.

"Do the people also know this?" asked the Janitor.

"No," said the Voter, "the people are blind. He will lead them."

"Where?" asked the Janitor.

FOURTH WARD.

The Fourth Ward Branch is growing steadily in membership as the result of adopting the slogan, "everyone get one." This plan put into operation would soon get every Socialist into the organization.

EIGHTH WARD BRANCH.

The Eighth Ward Branch which has been organized but 3 months, has a membership of 62 and is growing rapidly; the Branch expects to have able speakers once a month to discuss different subjects pertaining to Socialism. Let us get busy Comrades, and boost our membership to 200 in the next 3 months. The Eighth Ward Branch meets every Monday evening, 7:30, at the hall No. 723 West Mound Street. Everybody is welcome to attend all meetings. Any person wishing to join the branch can do so by coming to the meetings or dropping a card to O. G. Van Schoyck, secretary, 276 West State street, Columbus, Ohio.

NINTH WARD MEETING.

The Ninth Ward had a lively meeting Thursday evening of last week. The introduction of resolutions condemning the courts and criticising the conduct of affairs at the workhouse where Murderer Foty is an honored guest brought forth a protest from Superintendent H. E. Owen, of that institution. Owen distributed the epithet of "liar" around rather freely. The use of that word proves nothing and, in this case, shows that somebody has been hard hit. Comrade Radebaugh spoke for the Ninth Ward Thursday evening of this week.

MISS PANKHURST TODAY.

Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, the noted English Suffragette, will lecture this afternoon at 2:30 (February 4), at the Board of Trade Auditorium. Admission, 25 and 50 cents.

FIRST WARD MEETING.

The First Ward Branch will have a meeting at Eyeman's Hall, corner Fourth street and Jenkins avenue, next Friday, February 10. Comrades J. H. Henderson and E. B. Lewis will speak. Everybody invited to be present.

LOCAL LINDEN HEIGHTS.

Local Linden Heights meets every second and fourth Friday of the month. Our last meeting was a great success. Two new members took the obligation. We wish to thank Comrade Radebaugh for his kindness in giving us a very good explanation of the Socialist movement.

At times we all become a little discouraged and do not put our whole heart into the work of organizing the working class into our great movement. But when we look around us and see the wives and children of the workers, wearing the poorest clothes and eating the coarsest food while the families of the exploiters give monkey dinners. Then we hear the voice of Marx from the great beyond: "Workingmen of the world unite, you have nothing to lose but your chains, you have a world to gain." Let us take courage in the name of humanity and justice and hasten the coming of the Co-operative Commonwealth.

DON'T FORGET FEBRUARY 11.

That is the date, next Saturday evening, at Red Lion Hall, 235½ South High street, when the Socialist Glee Club Forward will have their Grand Prize Masquerade Ball. The affair will be the event of the season in Socialist circles, and every friend of the cause should turn out. Tickets, 25 cents, are on sale at the office of The Socialist, 26 North High street.

LOCAL GRAND VIEW.

Local Grand View had a rousing good meeting Tuesday evening at Red Men's Hall. The Socialist Glee Club Forward furnished some of their stirring songs. Comrade Lewis delivered an address which was well received. Local Grand View is doing splendid propaganda work and will be heard from quite often.

MASQUE BALL.

The first grand prize Masque Ball of the Socialist Glee Club Forward, will be given Saturday evening, February 11, at Red Lion Hall, 235½ South High street. You are welcome to come. Admission 25c a person.

Comrade John Seimer who recently resigned as city organizer for the Socialist Party has gone to West Union, W. Va., to work in a glass plant there. He still retains his residence in Columbus and will be in the thickest of the fight later on.

COM. JOHN A TURNER MEETS A HORRIBLE DEATH.

Comrade John A. Turner, aged 53, of 101 South Fifth Street, member of the Sixth Ward Branch Socialist Party of Columbus, met a horrible death Thursday afternoon of last week. He was employed as mail collector for the postoffice and the auto wagon upon which he was standing was hit by a west bound Long street car. His body was mangled. The driver of the mail auto jumped and saved himself. Comrade Turner was one of the best known men in the mail service in this city, having been a carrier for over 25 years. He had long been a consistent and effective worker in the cause of Socialism. He will be greatly missed in the ranks of the party. The funeral took place at the Spiritualist chruch on East Broad steet last Saturday afternoon. It seems that Comrade Turner had a premonition of approaching death a night or so before the fatal accident. He told his family of it and gave directions as to what should be done when he passed from earth life. Comrade Turner's memory will be ever cherished by all who knew him.

SOCIALIST MINERS HOLD MASS MEETING.

The mass meeting under the auspices of the Socialist delegates to the United Mine Workers of America convention held at Board of Trade Auditorium last Sunday afternoon was addressed by Guy Miller, fraternal delegate from the Western Federation of Miners, Charles P. Dildea, of Pennsylvania; Max S. Hayes, of Cleveland and Frank P. Hayes of Illinois. Comrade Farrell of Columbus presided. The speakers all made clear cut, class conscious speeches with emphasis upon the dangers of the party growing too rapidly and of selecting candidates for office who would betray the cause.

THE SOCIALIST LYCEUM COURSE.

There still remain five numbers of the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course and the purchase of a ticket at One Dollar, is a good bargain. The next lecture will be Tuesday evening, February 14, at the Board of Trade Auditorium. The entire list as follows:

N. A. Richardson, "Our Industrial Problems," February 14.

Geo. R. Kirkpatrick, "The Present Class Struggle," February 28.

John W. Slayton, "Unionism and Socialism," March 7.

Fred and May Strickland, "The Socialist Party," March 14.

Socialist Quartette Concert Co., "An Evening of Music," March 21.

Season tickets have been placed with the Ward Branches for sale or may be obtained at City Headquarters, 184½ South High Street. Each purchaser of a ticket will receive the Chicago Daily Socialist for four months, in addition to the enjoyment to be derived from the five evenings of entertainment and instructions.

COMRADE ROBERT BANDLOW IS CLAIMED BY DEATH.

Veteran Socialist Is At Rest After Long and Active Career.

Robert Bandlow, a Socialist of national prominence, who was known in Cleveland, his home city, as "the Nestor of the local labor movement" died late last Sunday night. Comrade Bandlow was born in Germany, June 4, 1852. When he was two years old his parents immigrated to Cleveland, where he has since lived and done his work for Socialism and organized labor.

Comrade Bandlow was active in the labor movement for over 35 years. As a boy of fourteen he entered a printing office as an apprentice. In 1875, when not yet 21 years old he was instrumental in organizing the Gutenberg Society, which afterwards became Union No. 6, of the German-American Typographia. Up to the beginning of last year he served almost continuously as a delegate to the central labor body of Cleveland and took an active and aggressive part in the work of organizing labor of Cleveland. Many of the labor unions of that place owe their existence to his persistent work. He also served as delegate to many conventions of the American Federation of Labor as well as national conventions of the printers.

In 1891 Comrade Bandlow was chosen manager of the Cleveland Citizen, then the property of the Central Labor Union, which position he held until the time of his death.

Comrade Bandlow became a Socialist in 1896 and during the fifteen years since that time has been a persistent and consistent advocate of industrial democracy. He gave to the Socialist movement the same wholehearted and unselfish effort which distinguished his services to organized labor. He was a fluent and forceful speaker and in debate his clear-cut arguments were marshalled in such a way as to leave his opponent no ground to stand on. He was repeatedly nominated by the Socialist party for various offices. In 1908 he was the party's candidate for governor.

Comrade Bandlow knew from the nature of his illness that the shadow of death hovered over him, but persisted in taking an active part in the management of "The Cleveland Citizen" during the past three months, although confined to his home. The fear of approaching dissolution did not touch him during his last days, his only complaint being that with much work about him which needed doing, he was unable to take an active part in furthering the cause of which his whole life has been devoted.

CHAPTER FROM THE PAST.

Many of our readers will doubtless recall the Douglas tragedy, in which old John Douglas, of near Homer, this county, was foully murdered by his son, Steve Douglas and the hired man, Jeff Boling, in October 1884, and the turning of state's evidence by Douglas, and subsequent trial and conviction of Boling. It was the most sensational trial in the history of Licking county up to that date. Boling was sentenced to hang, but Gov. Foraker commuted his sentence to life imprisonment. Later, when Boling was stricken with a fatal disease, he was pardoned, and returned to his former home in Kentucky, where he died.

Steve Douglas, the homicide, and undoubtedly the principal in the tragedy, who escaped the penalty of his crime by confession, has since been an outcast and a wanderer, living under the name of "John Green." For a long time he remained in the west, but within the past year returned and was one of the professional strikebreakers at Columbus during the late street car strike. His health either became impaired or he was injured in the strike and died on Tuesday, Jan. 3, at the home of his sister at Rich Hill, in Knox County, and was buried Thursday at Lock.—Newark Paper.

WORKMEN'S SICK AND DEATH BENEFIT FUND.

Branch 225 of the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, in their quarterly General meeting held Sunday, January 23, at Kull's Hall, elected the following officers for the year 1911:

Chairman—A. Reum.
Vice-Chairman—G. Konrad.
Recording-Secretary—M. Nowaki.
Treasurer—Jac. Junker.
Financial-Secretary—A. Nick.

The annual financial report shows that the branch paid out in the year 1910, for sick benefits $546, for death benefit $350. An appeal for aid for a sick comrade from Ridgewood, N. Y. was granted. A resolution was adopted requesting the members to patronize only firms, who support The Socialist press with their advertisements. A committee of three was elected to engage a Park for outings early next summer. The meetings of the branch are held on the Fourth Sunday of each month, 9 a. m. at Kull's Hall, 79 East Mound street. Everybody is welcome to attend as the members of Branch 225 would like to see that specially the Comrades of Columbus take hold of one end and organize an American branch. The Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund of the United States of America was founded in 1884 by a small number of workers with a socialistic bent of mind who, on account of the new ideas, courageously maintained by them, and by virtue of the cruel and barbarous anti-socialist law then in force, had been expelled from most of the large cities of Germany by the police and other authorities and after having been driven from one place to another had immigrated into the United States.

The progressive and socialistic spirit of the modern Labor movement has ever since been cultivated by the members. To this day as in the past, they show in our active way and at every opportunity, a great interest in the mighty struggle which has for its aim the elevation of the high life condition of the working class, in a political intellectual and material sense. These aims find their expression in the ritual and the resolutions by which it is made the moral duty of the members to do all in their power in order to make the great work of enlightment a success and contribute to the advance of their class interest.

Although hardly too much can be done in this direction yet the furtherance of progressive thinking and sentiment and the participation in the events that take place upon the battlefields of labor and capital cannot be the main object of a sick benefit fund. The main object is and ever will be the mutual support of the members in case of sickness, and of the persons depending upon them in case of death of the member.

What splendid success has attended the striving for this aim is shown by its growth. The organization has now 45,000 members in 25 States and 274 branches and pays a weekly sick benefit in class I 8 dollars for 40 weeks and $4.50 for another 40 weeks; in class II $6 or 40 weeks and $3.00 for another 40 weeks and in case of death of the member $250 to beneficiaries legally entitled to it.

The monthly assesment in or members in class I $1.05; class II 55 cents; class III 30 cents.

Any information regarding joining and organizing branches will be gladly given by A. Nick, Financial Secretary, Branch 225, 201½ Sycamore st.

NOW GET BUSY!

The Socialist Wants 10,000 Subscribers in Columbus Right Away.

THE WORKERS IN "THE STORM CENTER OF SOCIALISM" HAVE A CHANCE TO MAKE GOOD.

ALL THAT IS NEEDED IS "A LONG PULL, A STRONG PULL, AND A PULL ALTOGETHER."

THE SOCIALIST MAKES FAIR PROPOSITION TO SECURE THE CO-OPERATION OF ALL FOR THE NEXT CAMPAIGN.

READ EVERY WORD OF OUR OFFER.

The Socialist wishes to co-operate with the City Central Committee, the Ward Branches and the precinct workers of the Socialist party of Columbus in educating the voters and organizing our forces so that we may reap the full benefit of our educational work.

We believe that one of the most effective means of educating the workers and of propagating Socialism is through the columns of a good Socialist paper. The paper goes each week into the home and carries some message, some truth, to each of its readers. While we make no apology for our paper, we are determined that each issue shall be an improvement over the previous one.

The subscription list is the life of any paper. Without it, it dies. We want at least 10,000 subscribers on our books before the campaign opens. We must have them if The Socialist is to be the power for good that it should be in the fight of 1911 in Columbus, "the Storm Center of Socialism."

OUR PLAN.

Here is our plan to put money into the treasuries of the City Central Committee and of the Ward Branches for use in organization and propaganda work, as they may determine:

1. We will pay to each Ward Branch 12½ per cent. of all money for subscriptions collected and turned in by its members to The Socialist.

2. We will pay over to the treasury of the City Central Committee of Local Columbus 12½ per cent. of all money collected and paid in by the Ward Branches for subscriptions to The Socialist.

LIST OF PRIZES.

As Prizes or special rewards for the workers we offer the following:

1. To the Branch turning in the largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, in proportion to membership of the Branch in good standing, we will give $75 in books, to be selected by the Branch, or in money.

2. To the Branch turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, under the foregoing conditions, we will give $50 in books or money.

3. To the Branch turning in the third largest amount of money on subscriptions as stated we will give $25 in books or money.

INDIVIDUAL REWARDS.

1. To the member of any Branch turning in the largest amount of money on subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $25 in gold.

2. To the member of any Branch turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $15 in gold.

3. To the member of any Branch who turns in the third largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $10 in gold.

CONDITIONS.

The only conditions we impose in this contest are that the members of Branches will get all their sub. cards from the literature or special agent of their respective Branches and that this agent will at all times have on hand a supply of sub. cards and make returns to The Socialist of all subscriptions received not later than Wednesday of each week. Sub. cards will be supplied by this office at any time. This contest will be limited to Branches and Locals in Franklin County.

This Contest will begin on Saturday, February 11, and will close Tuesday, Nov. 7, '11

Information as to details of this contest will be cheerfully furnished by this office.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER OF, BY AND FOR THE WORKERS

VOL. 1. No. 8. COLUMBUS, OHIO, SATURDAY, FEB. 11, 1911. PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR. SINGLE COPIES, 3 CENTS.

MORE TALK OF FUSION.

The Columbus Dispatch last Sunday printed the following political information:

"The nucleus has been formed of what is proposed to be an alliance of the progressive contingents of both the Democratic and Republican parties in Columbus. The alliance is to be called "The Progressive League." Its ultimate aim probably will be to take an active part in the mayoralty campaign, either in espousing the candidacy of one of the party candidates or by proposing a candidate of its own and to be entered on the ballot as head of the citizens' or independent ticket.

"Several of the progressive leaders in both parties already have been approached and asked to lend their influence to the new movement. It has even been proposed to form a non-partisan club. It is recited to prospective recruits that unless something of a drastic nature is done at once the Socialists will elect a mayor next fall.

"Several meetings have been held by the promoters of the non-partisan scheme. It is understood that some of the cohorts who aided the Marshall movement in the last campaign have enlisted. It is even said that a few of those interested in the movement belonged to the Marshall flying squadron.

"George W. Bope, former police prosecutor and one of the attorneys for the striking car men during the hearing before the state board of arbitration, is one of those who have been promoting the progressive movement. It is planned to form a permanent organization within a few weeks."

All of which indicates that the stalwart strength of the Socialist movement in Columbus is driving the capitalistic elements into all sorts of combinations. It is a confession of weakness on the part of the old parties and those here denounced they are becoming. There will be schemes and counter schemes promoted by the politicians, but they will find the majority of the people in solid array against them under the banner of Socialism. The people propose to take control of this city, and the series of articles appearing in the local newspapers, of which the above is a sample, only demonstrates that the bosses fear and tremble.

Verily, Columbus is the storm center of Socialism.

A WAIL FROM THE CORN SHOW.

The local newspapers are voicing a wail to the effect that the "Corn Show," otherwise the National Corn Exposition, is not being patronized as it should be by the people of Columbus. The Dispatch quotes one of the managers of the show as saying:

"They have done nothing but knock all along the line, and the crowd of patrons from Columbus has never been anything like it should have been. The Chamber of Commerce has failed to co-operate in any appreciable way, and all in all we have never held the exposition in a city where there was such a universal lack of interest from the people of the city itself. The country people from all parts of the state are responding in fine shape and are taking interest in what they realize to be a big thing."

There is a reason, perhaps. It ought to be understood by this time that the common people of this city will not encourage any concern that flouts organized labor. The promoters of the Corn Show refused to listen to the union men who asked employment as carpenters in preparing the State Fair grounds for the exposition, and by the same token should look to the other element for support. Just put it down that in Columbus there is a solid array of workers, not only the organized ones, but thousands of others who are class-conscious and will not follow the lead of the Chamber of Commerce labor crushers.

MUNICIPAL PAWN SHOPS.

The bill introduced in the Ohio General Assembly, by Representative Bretsch of Franklin county, has been reported by the committee on cities without recommendation. There are many arguments in support of the bill, the principal provisions of which are given elsewhere in this paper. It is advocated upon the ground that it would prevent extortion from the poorest class of people in the community, and that the city's engaging in the pawn business would repress burglary and thievery, as some pawnbrokers act as fences for stolen goods.

In the cities of continental Europe, where the Socialists have control, municipal pawn shops have been in successful operation for several years. The loan sharks who ply their trade in American cities would have little chance to rob the unfortunates if temporary assistance could be had in time of need

SOCIALISM AND MONEY.

Certainly you can have money under Socialism. For the most of us it will be about our first opportunity to possess some money of our own.

What will that money buy? Everything that you will need for your personal comfort and enjoyment.

Would you be allowed to accumulate your money? Certainly! It might make you have a comfortable feeling. And that makes you wonder whether some genius will not save his money until he is a big enough capitalist to own your job and exploit you in the good old way. Oh, no, brother worker! However much one might accumulate, he would never be allowed to purchase the railroads, mines, factories, or any of the collectively-used means of life. Such things would not be or sale. You could not buy them under Socialism, any more than you could privately purchase the postoffice department now.

You are afraid that you would be restricted in the use of your money? No! Only that you could not use it to exploit your fellow-men. That certainly would not hurt your ambition, for now you work for just enough to keep you alive, so that you can work some more.

Money under Socialism will purchase all values that you can personally enjoy without injuring your brothers. It will be a full legal tender for all personal obligations. Honestly, now, wouldn't you like to have a little of that money in your pocket?

How would we get that kind of money under Socialism? Work for it! That's all! Besides, we would get the money for our labor which would purchase our entire social share of the goods made, or their equivalent.

What if a man would not work? "Neither let him eat!"

Frederick Guy Strickland

SENATOR CUMMINS' REMARKABLE SPEECH.

NEW YORK, Feb. 4.—In a speech remarkable for frankness and directness, Senator Albert B. Cummins of Iowa, a member of the Senate committee on interstate commerce, told the Republican club here today what an important work the interstate commerce commission is performing for the people and how the manner and the trend of that performance was bound to make themselves deeply felt on the structure of our future government and the articulate expression of the national consciousness.

The senator summarized the struggle of the people, acting through Congress, to gain control of one phase of distribution—that part assigned to the railroads. The slow and painful progress of that struggle he thought a forceful argument for the initiative.

"Does any one believe," he asked, "that if the people had possessed the initiative, they would have obtained what they wanted in less than nine years? That is the reason I foresee such a change in our form of government."

Co-operation in the hands of altruists, thought the senator, might be a good thing, but suppose it should eventuate in prices that the consumer refused to pay?

"That being true," he deduced, "some government tribunal must be entrusted to fix prices and then we shall be compelled to restore full competition or allot a price for all commodities and every man's time. If we do this latter, we shall have entered into the anteroom of complete Socialism.

"I DO NOT BELIEVE WE CAN SO CHANGE THE GOVERNMENT OF OUR FATHERS AS TO CONFER UPON IT THE POWER TO FIX PRICES. BUT ONE OF THESE THINGS MUST BE ACCEPTED, AND IT SEEMS TO ME THAT FACE TO FACE WITH THIS SITUATION THE PEOPLE WILL ACCEPT SOCIALISM BEFORE THEY ACCEPT MONOPOLY."

The Coach detective agency had its representative in the Ohio Senate chamber, the other day, in the person of Mr. Brady, alias O'Leary. With Captain Bush on the grand jury and Brady in the Senate, we may expect a few more disturbances in "Death Valley." We wonder if the rumored organization of the "non-union" employes of the Rail-Light may account for Arthur Koch bringing his contemptible carcass to town.

FREE MEDICAL AID.

Socialism over in Europe is demanding free medical care, contending that such is as much a matter of government function as education. The contention is rapidly gaining strength, and it is already predicted that in a few years the government will attend to the sick.

The editor of The American Medicine supports the idea in this manner:

"If this is Socialism, then we are Socialists to that extent. Society pays a lawyer to defend a poor criminal, but tells the doctor to treat the sick poor without pay."

A FEW WORDS OF PRAISE.

The Socialist, of Columbus, O., a well edited and well printed eight page weekly, is one of the youngest in the family of our party newspapers. On account of events that have taken place there during the past year, Columbus has become an important strategic center for our movement. Moreover, it is quite fitting that a party organ should be published in the capital of the state that holds the record for the highest Socialist vote.—Marion (Ohio) Socialist.

THE SCREEN BILL.

Senator Green's bill providing for the weighing of coal before screening is now in the hands of the committee on mines. The measure is intended to prevent fraud and secure to the miners their pay for the coal they actually mine. The operators are strongly against the bill and the miners should be alert. The screen law means simple justice to the miners, and should pass.

It is really delightful at this time to see the Root at the Evil and to hear Senator Root denounce political corruption is certainly edifying. His knowledge of political corruption is not equalled by any of his colleagues in the United States Senate. Let us not forget that some thirty-eight years ago a young lawyer by the name of Elihu Root was one of the lawyers that defended Boss Tweed. His education in political corruption began early.

Attorney General Hogan has decided that the commissioners of Franklin county can not pay for the hire of vehicles used by Sheriff Sartain in serving summonses. The dear old Chamber of Commerce might come to the rescue, as it did last summer, when it raised funds to pay deputies to protect the thugs imported by the Rail-Light company as motormen and conductors.

The promoters of the Columbus Motor Car Transportation Company declare that the reported abandonment of the project is untrue. Some mysterious influence has retarded the progress of the movement, but the trouble seems to have been located and matters are shaping up all right.

Profit is unpaid labor. Between 1895-1900 the Carnegie steel works realized $130,000,000 in profits. In 1901 alone they cleared $40,000,000. The annual profits of American railroads are approximately $300,000,000. In 1902 the Standard Oil company paid 45 per cent. dividends on its invested capital.

It is announced that an ordinance will soon be introduced in Council increasing the salaries of members from $450 to $650 a year. It seems that the present councilmen expect to be re-elected next November. They may be terribly disappointed.

Skilled mechanic, willing to work, was found starving on Broadway, New York. No money, no work, no food. What could he do? The ranking American statesman has answered: "God knows—I don't." Pretty bum old economic system.

A man with $500,000 can understand why he wants $1,000,000 more, but he can't understand why a man who gets $2.75 per day wants $3.—Lincoln Steffens.

Most of our troubles are due to misunderstandings. Every workingman would be a Socialist if he understood. We need to explain. Begin with your neighbor or your best friend.

Socialism says that the workers shall have the honey, while the drones will have to work or will be driven out of the hive. That's bee wisdom. Dangerous, isn't it? Yes, it is almost as dangerous as the teachings of Jesus.

The comrades in Columbus are taking up The Socialist's subscription offer with vigor, and all that is now needed is to work steadily and persistently toward the end in view.

Why Socialists Would Not Be Corrupt in Office.

It is needless to say that the principle of Socialism—public ownership—is now endorsed by every progressive economist. There is no argument against the principle. There is, however, some argument that the time is not quite here for the change. There is a story about the devil who said it was useless to argue against religion, but the way to meet the problem is to tell the people that there is lots of time to repent.

Anyway, the people are now ready to say that they want the public utilities changed from private ownership to public ownership. The capitalists argue, like the devil—that the time is not here. They also get this same kind of help in the way of argument from their old-time politicians. This will be carried even to the point of actually appearing to be working up measures expected to bring about the desired results. Then will follow the usual delays characteristic of those who avoid doing a thing by appearing to be doing it.

You may be startled to hear it said that it is not safe to trust the process of the change to men who might hold office and claim to be Socialists. Let us look into this matter a little further.

There was only one Judas, according to Bible history, but that one got away with a mighty dirty job. The Socialists have confidence in their leading men. As a matter of fact, in any society, most of its adherents are loyal—this is even more true in the Socialist party. But we do know that a certain percentage in all organizations show themselves up in the light of a Judas.

When the Socialist party is strong enough to elect, then it becomes a desirable party for the fellow who is looking for political plums. This fellow is readily discovered by the opposing parties. He becomes a compromiser, a politician, and delays, if not entirely upsets, the Socialists' purpose and does not get results. It might even be true that a Socialist who was sincere might, after election, weaken under the many influences brought to bear upon him. Anyway, this is the view taken by Socialists themselves. Socialists are just Republicans and Democrats who have been converted. There might be some backsliders, or there might be some real Judases.

This has been the rock upon which every progressive party has gone down. The Socialist party will not go down upon this rock. The Socialist party will not go down upon any rock.

The people, never did betray themselves in office. They were always betrayed because they were powerless to prevent them. When a man is turned loose for a term in office he is in a position to do anything he pleases during that term. Politicians are so slick that they can make a good appearance of having tried, and get the people to accept an excuse. Whenever this problem is solved it must be solved by the people somehow placing it beyond the power of their representatives to betray the people who elected them. This the Socialist party has accomplished.

The Socialist Organization. This solves the problem. This is one of the fundamental necessities of the Socialist party, without which the Socialists would be powerless against the present policy of politicians. Back of the Socialist candidates and elected officials stands the organized body. First of all, before a man can be a candidate he must have been a member of the organization for a period of one year before his nomination, and must have somehow convinced the organization that he is reliable. To convince this party is no small task; yet a man might succeed this far in fooling the organization. Then, before the organization will endorse a candidate and before the Socialists will vote for his nomination, the candidate must sign his resignation as a candidate even before he is nominated. He leaves the date of his resignation blank. He must further sign his resignation from the office for which he is a candidate, even before he knows that he will be elected; the date of this resignation is also left blank. He then signs a contract with the organization that the organization has the power by agreement to date either resignation and present it to the proper authorities.

The interests of each member of the organization is to get Socialism, and whenever the official or candidate shows any signs of falseness the individual and collective interests of the Socialists who are neither officials nor candidates takes care of the rest.

In this case the signed resignations would be dated and turned in. If the representative stepped down and out, it would be all over so far as his power to betray or delay or compromise or sell out was concerned. Since this contract would not stand in law today, and the representative should refuse to step down and out, immediately his local organization and the State and National organizations would repudiate him, put his contracts upon display, wash their hands as a party of this man, and would publish the fact that the organization from this time on would not be responsible for any act of this man.

Being a traitor to his own party, no other party would want him. Thus, after sizing up a man for one year, it is likely that a man will always be selected with enough self-respect to understand this power over him and what it means. Thus few traitors by nature would want a Socialist office. If a man of this sort should secure an office, his power would not be harmful.

This is why the Socialists say to the public that when you vote for Socialism you will get what you vote for. Only those who want to give you Socialism will want to get elected. It is not humiliating to an honest Socialist to sign up; there could be nothing accomplished by a dishonest Socialist.

It is not so much necessary to vote for a man because he is a Socialist—that might mean anything if you took only the man for it—but because back of the man stands the organization, which can not be corrupted. The other fellow may promise you public ownership and he may be honest about it, but the Socialist must be honest about it because he is powerless to be anything else. The other fellow who promises these things throws himself open to suspicion when he tries to talk about getting the same results by any other route than the absolutely safe route.

THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

So all pervading is the undemocratic spirit of our government that not even the president or the house of representatives truly represents the will of the majority. It is altogether possible for the presidential nominee receiving the greatest number of votes, or even a majority of the votes, to be defeated. Witness the Blaine election. As for a president who is actually the choice of a majority, we almost never have one. The dead hand of the constitution, with its undemocratic electoral college, still rests heavily upon us.

The constitution, then, not only saddles us with a government which we cannot use to enact laws of our own choosing, but it prevents us from changing that constitution into a better one. As Patrick Henry said in the Virginia convention, "To encourage us to adopt it [the constitution] they tell us there is a plain, easy way of amendment. When I come to contemplate this part I suppose that I am mad." But Patrick Henry was not mad, and a bitter experience it has taken to prove it. Short of a wave of public opinion amounting almost, if not quite, to a revolution, the constitution cannot be amended. A two-thirds vote of both houses of congress or the action of the legislatures of two-thirds of the states is required to even start the machinery in motion. Less than one-fortieth of the people, if distributed in the smaller states, can defeat an amendment beyond all possibility of accomplishment. How ridiculous is the majority required for an amendment is instantly seen when we realize that from the first election of which statistics were kept to the election of Roosevelt in 1904 no president ever carried two-thirds of the states or polled two-thirds of the popular vote. Were it not for the fact that the constitution is being continually amended by judicial construction we would have thrown it over long ago as hopelessly antiquated. That is to say, not the people but the supreme court changes the law for us.—Arthur S. Levy, Jr., in the February International.

SOCIALISTS WANT OPEN-AIR SCHOOLS.

MILWAUKEE, Feb. 8.—Socialistic city fathers of Milwaukee are securing options on land for the establishment of out-of-door schools for the entire school population.

"Education of children," said Mayor Seidel today, "must be allied with healthy conditions, and that is a question in which we should all be vitally interested. I, as a father, may give my child the very best possible education. You may neglect yours. Some day our children are bound to meet. If either of the two is deficient in health or morals or education, it must affect the other. Hence, to protect my own child against disease I must be concerned about the health of your child as well."

RULING AGAINST NEWSPAPER.

Because it is printed in Findlay, the St. Marys' Socialist is not eligible to carry any of the municipal printing, according to an opinion given the city solicitor of St. Marys by Attorney General Hogan. The two old party organs protested because council gave the Socialist paper printing, and at their behest the ruling was asked for.

The devil-doctrine seems to have been common to all barbarous and semi-savage people.

The Wage-Slave Parasites.

BY EDWIN W. WHEAT.

"I don't believe in unions," said one printer to another, the other day. "They pay the same in the shop where I work as they do in yours. And I don't have to pay dues, or attend meetings, or go on strike just because somebody else in my shop is dissatisfied."

"But," said his companion, "are you aware of the fact that the only reason your employer pays as much as he does is because most of the best printers are unionized, and he is compelled to pay the wages demanded by the union printers in order to get the high-class workmen that he needs in his line of work? You are reaping the fruit of our dues-paying, our attendance at meetings, and our strikes; but without bearing your share of the union work that is necessary in order to obtain the wages that you and I both get.

"And when we go on strike for better wages you remain at work, thus making it that much harder for us to win. Yet, when we do win and your employer is obliged to again increase your wages in order to keep skilled workmen, you reap the benefit. You, a wage-slave like ourselves, are a parasite on us. Yes, that is just what you are—a wage-slave parasite!"

"I don't believe in Socialism," said one worker to another, as he walked into the polling place and voted the ticket of a party that makes big promises just before election, and breaks them all the rest of the year.

"Yes, I'll admit that what the Socialists stand for would benefit the workers, and is doing so in Milwaukee, and one or two other places; but there is no chance of their winning here, so I don't propose to throw my vote away."

"Do you know," said his Socialist companion, "that the bigger the Socialist vote is—even if we don't elect our ticket—the more likely we are to get laws and court decisions favorable to the workers? As Mr. Dooley says, 'The sooprayme court daysishuns follows the illikshun rayturns,' and the politicians have their ear to the ground. When they see Socialist sentiment growing, they get right on the job and give the workers a labor law or two, for fear of losing their jobs a couple of years later.

"Whenever you see a labor law go on the books, or a court decision made in favor of the workers, you may gamble that somebody has been scared half to death by the big increase in the Socialist vote. And you get the benefit of that law or that decision, don't you? When we Socialists get it for you.

"Come, brother, get in line. Don't be a parasite on the Socialists. Of course, Socialism won't win so long as you and the other fellow don't vote for it. Help us to double the vote and double it again, and then both you and we shall get more labor laws and labor decisions. Do some hustling on your own account for what you want. Don't be a wage-slave parasite!"

A RUDE AWAKENING.

The New York Sun has made the discovery that Socialism is worrying the politicians and has become the "problem" of the day. The admission of that sneering organ of reaction is notable not because of the information it conveys, but because, as the personal property of Mr. Morgan, the Sun has maintained a hollow silence concerning Socialism, and, above all, ignored such matter as Socialist propaganda.

One of the most convincing indications of the real situation has been the steadfast refusal of the capitalist press to say a word about it.

Signs are not lacking, however, that the time comes apace when the steady and significant increase of Socialism can no longer be overlooked. At present it is the general rule of every capitalist newspaper office that events connected with Socialism are not "news." The word is not to appear unless an opportunity presents to belittle, malign or injure the movement, a policy based on a perfectly logical unwillingness to arouse interest in Socialism or to give publicity to its plans or teachings.

But Socialism with a million votes becomes news in spite of policies and Socialism with two, three, five million votes becomes the biggest kind of news.

Meanwhile, it is interesting to observe the abject ignorance existing in regard to Socialism in reactionary circles. I do not mean as to its aims and purposes, for that goes without saying, but as to its coherence and fighting power. You will not find such misconception anywhere else in the world. The hostile forces of every other country understand fully what an adversary they have to face. In this country the natural result of the deliberate neglect of the press toward Socialism has been to haze even its own understanding and the understanding of the capitalist class.

There is a rude awakening ahead of the masters.

For instance, the Sun casually groups Socialism in the same category with greenbackism, populism and bimetalism. In that, of course, it reflects the view of the political trickster and mountebank. It can not conceive of a minor political party that does not exist to further a whim of the movement. It can not grasp the idea of a movement that may not be juggled. The faith of the whole juggling tribe is that Socialism is necessarily an ephemeral growth, which can be utilized some time by the sleight of hand operators, tossed into a hat and thence into oblivion.

Think of the sad jar when these gentlemen learn the facts. They are upset now over Socialism only to the extent that they were upset by greenbackism, populism and bimetalism!

What a jolt awaits them when they learn that Socialism cannot be sidetracked, befooled, misled, coaxed into alliances or bought off. What dismay will sweep upon them when they perceive vaguely that Socialism is not a patent scheme, but an enduring, philosophy of industrial, social and political progress. What a spluttering they will make when they observe that the old tricks of coalition, intrigue, fusion, dissension can not be introduced into the Socialist party. What a wail will go up when they begin to see that here, for the first time in history, is a movement that does not look for spoils or offices, that does not turn aside for place or power, that cares not a rap for the glamor of leadership, that refuses to worship any individual or to tolerate a boss.

All this is very elemental to Socialists. But it is undreamed of by most reactionaries in America. The slipshod, cynical, self-seeking, hit or miss methods of government to which the nation has always been accustomed are accepted in childlike simplicity as the only possible basis for any political party. Nothing else has ever been known. And the Sun's class continues blindly in the belief that nothing else is contemplated.

The good gentlemen who run the capitalist machine, if the truth be told, don't know what they are up against. They haven't an idea. The size of the vote at the last election, more than 442,000, threw the fear of God into them. True. They hate and loathe the mention of Socialism. True. They are aware of a threat that presses more closely upon them each year. True. But even now they can only blink in bewilderment and thumb back to the musty records of greenbackism, populism and bimetalism.

Sad and rude indeed will be their awakening.—Charles Edward Russell, in Coming Nation.

AN ENTERPRISING UNION.

PRINTERS' ORGANIZATION HAS NEARLY 1800 STUDENTS ENROLLED IN EDUCATIONAL COURSE.

It is not as well known as it might be that the typographical union is interested in a trade educational project. A booklet just from the press tells us that nearly eighteen hundred students are enrolled and that the lessons—which are given by correspondence—are sold below cost price. The union furnishes what in higher educational circles would be called an endowment by paying all advertising and promotional expenses and giving each person who finishes the Course from $5 up. It is estimated that from $8,000 to $10,000 a year is expended in this way by all the typographical unions.

The booklet referred to contains testimonials from students of the Course, and from the youth of seventeen to the veteran of sixty-four they say the instruction given is of high value and well worth the time and money required. This is but one of the many projects sustained by the printers' union. It has spent a million dollars maintaining a home and tuberculosis sanitorium which is conceded to be in the front rank of world institutions for fighting the white plague. It has also a pension system for aged and infirm members which costs about $200,000 a year. The minimum pension is $4 a week; in larger cities this is supplemented by the local union so that in New York pensioners draw $8 a week and in Chicago $7.

JOIN THE PARTY.

Every one who is truly a Socialist ought to join the Socialist party. Get in and help work. If it is not exactly what you think it ought to be, get in and help make it right; for, through the referendum, the rank and file can make it what they will. It is the only party in America which the rank and file can directly control by means of the referendum. And the more "people of the right sort," like yourself, who come into the party the better it will be.

To vote the Socialist ticket does not make you a party member. It is necessary to join a party local and pay dues. If there is no local in your vicinity, start one.

SOCIALISTS IN ACTION.

News From The World Wide Movement Of The Workers.

NEWS FROM THE NATIONAL SOCIALIST HEADQUARTERS

The death of Robert Bandlow, of Cleveland, Ohio, on Sunday, January 29, removes from the ranks of American Socialists a unique and inspiring character. Comrade Bandlow was born in Germany, in 1852. When he was two years of age his parents settled in Cleveland, and in that city his entire life was spent. A printer by trade, Bandlow was active in the labor movement for more than thirty-five years. As a member of the central labor body of Cleveland he was during many years a prominent and progressive worker in the interests of organized labor, and not a few of the unions of that place owe their existence to his efforts.

Comrade Bandlow joined the Socialist movement in 1896, and during the fifteen years which elapsed between that time and his death he served the movement with wisdom, zeal and courage. He was a member of the National Committee in 1905 and of the National Executive Committee in 1905 and 1906, and delegate to the National Conventions of 1904 and 1908. At the National Convention of 1908 he was, it will be remembered, one of the chairmen, a position for which his splendid grasp of parliamentary law and usages eminently fitted him.

An eloquent and forceful speaker, and a writer of no mean ability, Comrade Bandlow was perhaps at his best as a teacher and inspirer of younger men. Many of our best workers today were trained and inspired by him. Almost his last written words were:

"Extend to the Comrades my thanks for their many expressions of good will. Let me urge them to follow up the good work of the last campaign by a close organization along intelligent, class-conscious lines, disciplined in the knowledge that, though individuals, from our collective "bouts" personalities must cease to sway us from the right course. A united working class, read, able and willing to battle for the emancipation of Labor."

Bandlow is dead, yet Bandlow lives. He is immortal! His stiffened fingers dropped the torch he bore so bravely, but other hands, inspired by him, will bear it onward and thus his spirit will live forever.

Advices from Mexican refugees in this country are to the effect that the success of the Mexican Liberal party is assured, even at the cost of armed rebellion; that the government of Mexico is losing ground and the revolutionists gaining. The northern provinces, including the city of Jaurez, are in the control of the insurgents. The one fear that the revolutionists entertain is that the American government will take sides with the Mexican government by an armed force upon the border detrimental to the insurgents. Juan Sanches-Ascona, Mexican refugee, jailed in Washington, D. C., for some time, at the instance of Diaz, has been liberated by the federal district court. Chief Justice Clavaugh, in his decision, practically accused the Mexican government of false pretenses.

Comrade H. C. Tuck, of Oakland, Cala., editor of "The World," has been arrested at the instance of Police Captain Peterson upon the charge of libel. The captain objects to the exposures made in "The World" of the brutal manner in which prisoners have been treated by the police department. Comrade Tuck was held in $1000 bail. His trial will take place February 7.

The Montana legislature, now in session, has a bill before it as an amendment to the state constitution to provide for adult suffrage. The same shall be submitted to the voters at the next election. The prospects for its adoption are good.

OHIO SOCIALIST NEWS.

ITEMS FROM THE BULLETIN ISSUED BY SEC. G. A. STORCK.

Comrade M. J. Berry, of Crestline, feels "delighted," in the words of T. R., because the outlook in the state is so bright and he rejoices at the pace we have been going here of late and the activity displayed among comrades in the movement.

Comrade T. E. Lozier is the new secretary of Local Doylestown. Comrade Mackey has turned over the books and the money, and the indications are that the local is in good financial circumstances, but lacks in membership. The comrades seem persistent and we hope that they will soon have an increase of membership to compare favorably with the rest of the state, which is certainly in a prosperous conditions.

Greenville, the county seat of Dark county, has now a good, healthy local, and it will be the kind that will last, as the comrades behind it are of the kind that make things move. Comrade Clarence L. Wright, of the Greenville Historical Society, is one of the prime movers in the local's interests.

Comrade George D. Eynon writes that the local is getting along fairly well under the ban conditions that prevail in the vicinity of Cambridge, but this does not discourage the comrades, who are contemplating raising a large campaign fund for the year of 1912.

Comrade Mathias, of Marion, refused to have his local accused of being reactionary, and comes back with several initiation fees, and it looks pretty much as if the local was again in the swing of the times and is moving on again at a merry clip.

The Cleveland comrades are spreading literature by the thousands of pieces in their fight against the gas companies. Comrade Ruthenberg is the author of the circular that they are distributing, which has been endorsed and adopted by Local Cleveland.

Comrade A. Douglas wants to let us know that Local Norwood is not asleep. The comrades get out every Sunday and put out literature by the thousands of pieces; he also hopes that the county form of organization be encouraged.

Wilmington is another spot on the map in a county where we had no local and which is located in the Sixth Congressional District, in which Brown county is located, where there were some Socialist votes cast, as later reports seem to indicate.

Comrade John Dunstan, of Kenton, writes that the local is revived again, and that town will again appear on the map as a community having enough revolutionaries to make a respectable appearance as a local in the party.

St. Marys is conducting meetings in a picture show room, and have meetings every Sunday. The comrades are deeply interested and plan on getting the outsiders interested in our cause by this method of education.

Comrade Fickle, of Fostoria, writes as follows: "We're pretty busy here now and times and opportunities to push the cause were never better. The outlook for another big gain next fall is very good."

Monday wants to instill the spirit of Socialism into the natives living near the eastern boundary line of Hocking county, and want a speaker for at least two days.

Comrade William Lethbridge, of Steubenville, sends the following message of good cheer: "Local Steubenville is working hard, with good results, for the cause of Socialism."

Bridgeport, the new English-speaking local, is doing fairly well, so writes Comrade Morris Barlow, and it is hoped that this local will prosper after a somewhat discouraging start.

Local Barberton displays more activity recently than for some time past, and they even expect to place some of the "Reds" in office at the municipal election.

Local Mansfield held a good meeting on Sunday, January 15, and elected its new officers. A goodly number were present, and the meeting was lively in every respect.

Local Springfield is working hard, so Comrade John L. Smith informs us, to preserve order and to inspire the comrades to activity and build up the party.

Local Toledo is planning a monster meeting at which Comrade Harold W. Houston will be the drawing card, and the purpose is to boom the funds of their paper, "The Arm and Torch."

Amherst is a new acquisition to the party and fills a gap in Lorain county that has long agitated the minds of the comrades in that neighborhood.

Comrade M. Morganstein, of Salineville, informs us that the local has now 47 members, and expects to make it 75. Just a little forging ahead toward reaching the final goal.

Comrade W. L. Mantell, of Portsmouth, is hoping for a continuation of the prosperity of the movement and a still larger and better organization in the state.

Dorset is going to do its share to increase the interest and the vote in Ashtabula county by stirring things up, if speakers can be had who are suitable.

We now have Sherrodsville organized, and the 24 names on their petition certainly look good when we realise that it is the first local in Carroll county.

Wellington is adopting a municipal platform, and intends to take up some of the local issues that need attention and make a fight for recognition.

Local Wapakoneta has revived and handed in a list of 26 names as applicants, and requested the renwal of their charter, which was granted.

Comrade C. O. Beum of Mt. Vernon is pleased with the new hall, and thinks that the local will make progres as a result of their venture.

Local Warren is one of the liveliest locals in the state, and bids fair to make the old parties "sit up and take notice."

Toronto has decided to hold protest meetings if speakers can be secured for the preferable dates.

Mineral City is keeping up the fight, and hopes to be able to make a lively campaign soon.

MILWAUKEE NOTES.

Mayor Seidel addressed the "hobo convention," last Tuesday. He said in part: "Mr. Chairman, Ladies, Comrades and Workingmen—It is with extreme pain that I welcome you to Milwaukee. It is with extreme pain that I see you tied hand and foot. It reminds me of a picture Carlyle drew of men with strong arms and strong feet, who were looking for work, and were not permitted to work. It reminds me of that picture which depicts the extreme tragedy of modern civilization. I see in you the enchanted workman, begging for the opportunity to work. You can not work. Why? Because you are enchanted by a new trinity, and that trinity is profit, rent and interest.

"The reason you can not work is because it does not pay somebody to put you to work. The reason you are begging for a job is because the job does no longer belong to you.

"If there is anything you need especially, it is to put your brain into action.

"The workman's problems today are different from what they were in the civilization of the past, and they must be handled in a different manner. To such an extent as you become masters of your environment shall you be free. To the extent you manage to take hold of the reins of government can you govern to suit your class, and only to that extent.

"I understand very well that it is not easy for men who have been deprived of an education to emancipate themselves from their superstitions. And yet it is with dogged obstinacy that you must continue to go at it. Like bulldogs, you must stick to the job until you wrestle it. Unless you do that there is no chance for you to win out."

The mayor then referred to the present seamen's strike, and added: "We hope none of you will fight against these seamen that are out for better conditions. It may be hard to refuse the place of a man who goes on strike, especially when you need bread yourself. But, my friends, you can never help your own cause by underbidding other men. This battle can not be won in one day, or in ten years. It will take a lifetime. But if you keep at it, you are going to win in the end."

The great remedy against Socialism, the Milwaukee Anti-Socialists imagine, is to pass some law making it harder for the Social-Democrats to elect their candidates. They have tried several of these laws—the 50 per cent. law, the aldermen-at-large law and others. But all of these have only reacted in favor of the Social-Democrates.

Now they are going to try again. They have drafted two non-partisan bills, the object of which is to make the approaching judicial and school board election in Milwaukee a strictly non-partisan election.

They are trying to rush these bills through the present legislature, so that they will go into effect at once. In this way they hope to keep Socialist judges off the bench.

For some reason the capitalists have a great dread of Socialist judges and Socialist police. They are less afraid of Socialists in other offices. But that any man should sit on the bench who would give equal justice to the working-class is a dreadful outlook for the capitalist class.

These non-partisan bills are, therefore, being hurried through the Wisconsin legislature. The assembly committee on privileges and elections has reported them favorably, with only one dissenting vote, that of Assemblyman Hahn, Social-Democrat, who is a member of this committee.

Senator Gaylord and Assemblyman Hahn both argued against these bills. They showed that such an election would be non-partisan only in name. This is very clear from the fact that the advocates of the bills make no secret of the fact that they were introduced to knock the Socialists.

The mammoth carnival given by the Milwaukee Social-Democrats last Saturday was a tremendous success. Even the capitalist papers admit that it was the largest crowd ever gathered under one roof in Milwaukee. The number in attendance at one time is estimated at 25,000 persons. Yet this vast crowd was singularly orderly. No intoxicated, disorderly or troublesome person was to be seen.

The capitalist papers are commenting on the fact that Mayor Seidel refused to receive an ex-president, Roosevelt, but that he had a warm welcome for the "down and outs." This certainly was not the spirit of the former capitalistic administrations of Milwaukee!

A KING OUT OF A JOB.

Ex-King Manuel of Portugal is reported to be renting, for his own use, an elegant mansion with several acres of beautiful grounds at Richmond, near London, England. The ordinary worker who gets fired does not as a rule rent an expensive dwelling in the West End or even eat dinner at the Rainier cafe. First of all, he endeavors to scare up a new job in order to be able to hang onto his dollar a week room and his occasional blow-out of doughnuts and coffee. Not so Manuel. He does not appear to have looked up any possible vacancies for kings or emperors. We did not notice his ad. in the "Wanted" column for a job as monarch, by an energetic and pushing young ruler. In fact, apparently, he has cut out work altogether and will retire on his means.

This is all the more surprising when we note that the new regime in Portugal has confiscated his estates and property there. So that we might expect to find him near broke and perhaps taking a steerage passage for Canada, our happy home, and ending up at a railroad construction camp in company with other Portuguese and Dagos. Not so, not at all. Apparently he is well fixed, and the reason for this, we discovered recently. In common with all other European monarchs, Manuel has for several years been investing large sums of money in gilt-edgy securities in other countries. Thus he will now be able to live, and to live well, on the interest coming to him on these investments. While he was working he saved his money, invested it wisely, and now see the result.

Labor produces all wealth, and of course the workers pay the interest on these gilt-edge securities. So that now, Manuel can no longer live off the Portuguese workers, he can live in luxury from the toil of the workers of other countries, notably Great Britain, where most of his savings are invested. It must not be supposed that the workers of Portugal will be better off because one of the parasites has lost his hold. He has been shaken off by the capitalist class of Portugal, who alone will benefit by the new state of affairs there. Nor will the workers of England be any worse off because King Manuel chose to invest his capital in that country. For the workers must pay interest on all invested capital, and the personality or place of residence of their bondholders is of no importance to them. They are slaves, and all that is coming to them is a slaves' portion—a living.

So these royalties are not such fools after all. Seeing that they may possibly lose their jobs, and that the chance of getting another would be slim, they invest their capital in securities in other countries. Thus in the event of their own subjects refusing to longer support them, the working class of other nationalities must do so. Great rig, good heads. If they can not function as kings they can at least enjoy life as capitalists. For these and all other mercies, oh, Lord, make us truly thankful.

But when the workers get wise and they refuse to longer support the capitalist class, when all the kings and emperors are fired, when all their securities are worth as much as the paper they are printed on, when a king's own subjects refuse to support him and the workers of other nations beg to be excused, what a very unpleasant predicament for the kings, emperors, plutocrats and parasites, great and small. They will be strictly up against it.

It is said that indifference, prejudice and ignorance are the main barriers to the world's progress. We must know in order to act intelligently. We are not likely to know without honestly investigating? Lincoln once said: "To know but one side of a question is to be only half posted."

"CALL OFF THOSE HOUNDS."

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" was being played in a Western town. The audience was made up of sheepherders and cowboys, men who live in the solitude of the prairie, with dumb beasts as companions. One of the scenes depicted a woman carrying a child across a frozen river, pursued by bloodhounds. Instantly the scene in front of the stage was one of riot and rabble, and from many throats came the demand to "CALL OFF THOSE HOUNDS." These words and actions exemplified a discordant note on the harp of human sympathy.

What about the social discords of our present industrial system? Whence comes your source of investigation by groans of the WASH TUB, or are you trying to ease your conscience by proposing some good intentions at a Pink Tea? To save the race we must go into earnest action.

Listen, we want you to banish from your minds the things that haunt. "What the eye does not see the soul does not grieve for."

Look at that human being standing on that street corner, waiting for a streetcar. It's a dark, dreary, drizzling morning; the life of the city is barely awake. Gaze into the haggard, pallid face. SHE IS YOUR sister. You have risen from your bed, rested. The news of the day informs you of proposed social reforms, vice segregation, etc. Do you realize that your education is coming from EFFECT?

Night has come upon us. We see the women who walk on the streets. They do not look so haggard as the morning figures, because they are painted. Suppress the dens of vice, you cry. What a farce! Ask the question, Who creates them? Investigate cause, not effect, to cure disease. Listen! On February 14 (Tuesday), at 7:30 p. m., Senator Green's bill limiting the hours of women workers to eight hours will receive a public hearing in the Senate chamber. For the love of humanity, be there.

It's an issue of paramount importance to all. We boast that this is a state that has produced many presidents. We want now to be on record as establishing precedents. We are supposed to be a Christian state. Let men judge us by our efforts in protecting the weak.

The opposition will cry COMPETITION. Let us answer them with the question, Can the errors of one state compensate humanity for the error of another? This country won its position in the world through the spirit of self-sacrifice and self-denial. This measure DEMANDS protection for the mothers, wives and daughters of Ohio. There are some employers who have adopted the shorter work day. They are in business yet, and are considered successful men. In the name of humanity and for the cause of womanhood indorse this measure by being present at this public hearing, February 14, 1911, at 7:30.

"Call off the hounds." Must we, a Christian nation, live by the acts of Caesar? No! The State of Ohio must stay in the paths of human sympathy.

Jim Henderson.

MORGAN AFTER MAGAZINES.

The Morgan interests are reaching out and gathering in the magazines. It is announced that the "interests" have secured the Woman's Home Companion, Farm and Fireside, and, just last week, the American Magazine. Just what this means is not definitely known now. It has been rumored for some time past that a stop is going to be put to the radical muckraking output on which some of the magazines have been building huge circulations, either forcibly, as in the suit just brought against Hampton's Magazine by Standard Oil, or by quietly subsidizing or buying them out.

Whether this "absorption" of the American Magazine means that it is to be subjected to an anesthetic, and the sting taken out of it, remains to be seen. Of course, it may mean merely that the former owners of the American found it more than they could carry. The storm that followed when the American suddenly shut off the "Barbarous Mexico" articles, by John Kenneth Turner, was a terrific blow to it. Circulation fell off so rapidly that the editors were compelled to publish more Mexican stories, but they were very mild.

It is more than likely, as the latest reports indicate, that the Wall Street magnates propose to control, if possible, the publications which have laid bare the corruption of modern "business" methods. Where they can not buy they will seek to crush, and we would soon have monopoly in the publishing trade, just as in every other line of commercial activity. There is all the more need for Socialist papers to fight for the cause of the toilers against the spoilers.

MUNICIPAL PAWN SHOP.

Bertsch Bill Provides for a New Feature in City Affairs.

Representative Bertsch of Franklin county has introduced a bill in the Ohio General Assembly which would do away with one of the most oppressive forms of robbery which now afflict the working class. The principal provisions of the bill are as follows:

A bill to authorize cities to establish, manage, regulate and maintain municipal pawn departments and to provide means therefore.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

Section 1. That every city of this state shall have the power to establish, manage, regulate and maintain a municipal pawn department within its corporate limits, to loan money upon personal property and to charge interest for advances made on pawns, and to acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise, the necessary lands, buildings, halls or rooms for such purpose and to do everything that pertains to or has any connection with the establishment, management, regulation and maintenance of such department.

Sec. 2. To create a municipal pawn fund, out of which all municipal money loans upon personal property to pawners are paid and to receive donations and bequests of money or property for the same, in trust or otherwise.

Sec. 3. The council of each city shall for the purpose of creating and maintaining the said municipal pawn fund have the power to levy and collect a tax not exceeding one-fifth of one mill on each dollar of the taxable property of the municipality, annually, and until said municipal pawn department becomes self-supporting. The municipal pawn fund so created and the moneys in the future from all sources received by said department for the said fund shall be turned over to the city treasurer, who, upon giving bond, as required by the city council, shall be the custodian and disburser of the same as of all other funds and public moneys. But he shall not honor any voucher presented to him for payment from said funds unless the same is properly approved by the head of said municipal pawn department.

Sec. 4. Every municipal pawn department of a city in this state shall be a sub-department of the department of public service and under the general management and supervision of the director of public service.

Sec. 5. The mayor of every city, where a municipal pawn department is established, shall appoint and have the power to remove the head of such department, who shall be called the superintendent of the municipal pawn department.

Sec. 6. The director of public service shall have the exclusive right to appoint as many assistant superintendents, pawn inspectors, clerks and pawn custodians in the municipal pawn department as shall be necessary for the administration of its affairs, and shall likewise have sole power to remove or suspend any such assistant superintendent, pawn inspector, clerk and pawn custodian, but in making such appointments and removals he shall be subject to the same limitations which govern him in the appointments and removals of any other appointees of the same grade in the department of public service; and he shall make rules and regulations for the administration of the affairs in the said municipal pawn department.

Sec. 11. No municipal pawn department in this state shall charge more than six per cent. per annum to any pawner as compensation for the money advanced upon such pawn, nor more than two per cent. per annum additional for storage and insurance.

PROPOSED ST. LOUIS CHARTER DEFEATED

CAMPAIGN OF SOCIALISTS AGAINST ITS ADOPTION BEARS FRUIT.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Feb. 6.—The proposed charter for the city of St. Louis was defeated at a special election, by a majority of 40,155. The total vote was 39,937, of which 34,891 were for the charter and 65,046 against. About half of the total registered vote in the city was polled.

Much of the credit for the defeat of the charter, which the corporation interests tried to force upon the city, may be claimed by the Socialists and labor unions, who conducted a vigorous and determined campaign against its adoption. The Socialists distributed great quantities of literature upon the subject, on two Sundays alone giving out 65,000 pieces from house to house.

The proposed charter would have concentrated all the power of the city in the hands of the mayor and a council of fifteen members. A two-thirds majority of the council could remove the mayor. The charter made the offices of counsellor, treasurer, register and marshal appointive instead of elective.

There was a recall measure put in the charter, but it was a fake, pure and simple, as it provided that before it could be invoked 35,000 qualified voters must sign the petition, and each signature must be attested by oath. To get 35,000 voters to sign a petition and then get each to attest his signature would have been a superhuman task, and made a farce of the measure.

Furthermore, this proposed recall could only be invoked at the November election, after the mayor had served eighteen months. If he was recalled, he would continue to hold office for six months longer, until his successor was elected at the succeeding spring election.

MILLARD ON DECK.

Rousing Meeting in Eleventh Ward Stirs Audience.

The meeting under the auspices of the Eleventh Ward Branch, held Friday evening of last week, packed Evans' Hall to overflowing, in spite of the downpour of rain. Comrade Kinsell presided and Comrade Walter J. Millard, so well known as a Socialist orator, aroused enthusiasm by the way he applied the fundamental principles of Socialism to the local gas question. The speaker first showed that gas was a natural product, that it was a public necessity, and clinched his arguments with figures that proved the possibility of producing artificial gas at a much cheaper rate than that demanded by Columbus gas companies under their existing franchise. Comrade Millard laid stress on the need of young men in the movement who will read up on the facts of the situation. He concluded by telling the audience that the Socialists not only intended to take over the oil wells, but that our aim was to capture the earth for the use of all the people.

The Socialist Glee Club Forward sang several selections and received merited applause. This meeting was the beginning of a series of meetings in the Eleventh Ward. The next one will be an entertainment Friday evening, February 24, with Comrade J. L. Bachman as speaker.

REV. CHAS. STELZLE TALKS ABOUT SOCIAL UNREST.

Rev. Charles Stelzle, head of the department of church and labor, was in Columbus last week and delivered two addresses before meetings of ministers.

Regarding "The Church and Social Unrest," he said in part:

"There are thousands of men who are being deluded by the vain hope that if they can abolish the labor union they will have solved the labor question. These men forget that the labor union is not the labor question. There are forces organized and unorganized which are included in this term. It includes the 25,000,000 Socialists of the world.

"Organized labor is doing some other things which are appealing to the people. It is fighting for a square deal for little children. It is seeking to give women their industrial rights, and to give workingmen higher ideals in the matter of more temperate living. In many cases these workingmen have come to believe that they have in the trades union a fairly good substitute for the church. Socialism is making an appeal to the masses. In this country the Socialists are conducting more open-air meetings than are being held by all the Protestant churches combined.

CHURCH LOSING GROUND.

"The church is lowly but surely losing ground in the cities, where the masses of people live. If this tendency continues, and if the city is to dominate the nation, it doesn't require a prophet to foretell the inevitable result.

"Underlying this spirit of social unrest there is a deeply religious spirit. The average workingman is naturally religious, even though his religion may not always be expressed in the accepted orthodox manner. He is constantly seeking to satisfy the deeper needs of his life."

BOYLE BOILS OVER.

James, the Unwise, Tells What He Doesn't Know About Socialism.

"'Socialism,' a propaganda to which the Catholic Church stands opposed, discussed from an historical and doctrinal standpoint by a reader of the Protestant Episcopal Church," formed the subject of an adress by James Boyle, former United States consul at Liverpool, England, before 600 members of the Holy Name Society in the parish hall of St. John's Catholic Church, in Ohio avenue, Sunday afternoon.

Attorney General Hogan presided at the meeting, which was attended by Bishop Hartley and many local priests. Following Mr. Boyle's address, Bishop Hartley, in a short address, explained the church's attitude, and said:

"Any person who attempts to separate Socialism from religion and morals makes a great mistake. Both are intimately connected." The bishop spoke of rushing the Socialists into the sea.

Mr. Boyle attacked Karl Marx because he was a Jew, and praised Samuel Gompers, admitting that he was also a Jew. He advised all good Christians never to listen to street corner orators, never to read or accept any Socialist literature, never answer their questions in debate, for, said Boyle, "they are awful tricky." The meeting was announced as "open to all," but there were two policemen on duty in the hall.

OUR BOOSTERS.

The Socialist has been published long enough to indicate what sort of a paper it is to be, and we are gratified at the kind words spoken and written of our new journal. Exchanges and comrades have said that The Socialist "is different from other papers." We intend that it shall be "different."

Comrade I. N. Matheny, secretary of Local Sugar Grove, sends in four yearly subscribers, which shows that the Sugar Grove Comrade desire to know what's what.

The City Central Committee, at its regular meeting Wednesday of last week, unanimously endorsed the offer made by The Socialist Publishing Co. to pay commissions on subscriptions secured for The Socialist through the branches and locals in Franklin county. The Ward Branches are taking the matter up and falling into line. The details of the plan will be found in this issue and seem to be easy to understand. Subscription cards were given out Wednesday evening, at the session of the Central Committee, and today, February 11, the contest begins.

There could be nothing fairer than our offer. It is made to secure the active co-operation of the comrades in the work of taking possession of the city of Columbus. The plan presents splendid possibilities. If one thousand members secured an average of one yearly subscriber a month until next November, it would mean 40,000 new names on The Socialist's list and $2500 in the treasuries of the Branches and the City Central Committee for use in the campaign. Then there are the prizes to the Branches and to individuals.

The results would not end with the securing of the new subscribers, for these would go to work along the same line. The effect of thousands reading The Socialist each week and kept in touch with the party movement will be beyond estimating.

Get Busy. Get the subs. Get the money. Get Columbus. Get the co-operative commonwealth.

WINDOW GLASS WORKERS.

This union held a special meeting last Sunday. Business of importance was taken up.

PRINTERS' UNION.

The printers held their monthly meeting last Sunday. Many fraternal delegates were given the floor, and arrangements made for an enthusiastic label campaign.

BOOK BINDERS.

The attendance at the last regular meeting proves that renewed interest is being taken in the Columbus situation. The gospel of closer affiliation with the other allied trades appear to be the paramount issue.

ICE HANDLERS.

Local 388 will prepare for the coming season by uniting together the old and new members at a banquet to be given February 8, at the Arcade Hotel. Their representative reports a prosperous outlook. Help the ice men by dealing with union handlers.

MACHINISTS' UNION.

Victor Trevail, a member of Buckeye 85, has left for a visit to his parents in Rome, Italy. Vic carries with him the best wishes of the entire membership, who will welcome the brother's return.

National Headquarters reports many railroad and contract victories.

THE TAILORS.

Local 27 has placed one of its members in the field to work up a demand for their labeb. Reports signify the intention of many of the local to organize their shops.

Suitable resolutions were drawn up expressing sympathy for the bereaved relatives of the deceased Brother A. Urrey.

BARBERS' UNION.

The Barbers' Union, Local 394, is progressing rapidly. At their regular meeting, Monday night, they obligated ten new members. And the meetings are becoming more interesting, and it is plainly visible that the union sharp card can be seen in more shops. And we ask every reader of this paper to patronize only shops where the union card is displayed. Look for it, ask or it, demand it.

CIGAR MAKERS.

The local members have not been officially notified of the results of the Tampa, Fla., strike, but they hope the news of victory is true. At the present time the chief topic of interest is the referendum vote for national officers. President Gompers must be elected a delegate to the A. F. of L. to hold his job as president. There are some strange things happening. Time and men both change.

THE BRITISH PRINTING TRADE.

The demand for the 48-hour week means a closer affiliation of the various Friendly Society and group craft guilds. The allied trades are laying plans along the lines of the I. T. U. When this plan is adopted the front office will at all times be confident of getting their papers out on time.

BARTENDERS NOMINATE.

The Bartenders' Union, Local 433, at their meeting Thursday evening nominated the following officers:

For president, M. H. Finn, Joe Keller; vice president, Jere Nevill, Chas. Welsh; recording secretary, Earl Anderson; secretary and treasurer, Chas. Miranda; chaplain, Thos. Casey; inspector, Charles Jones; inside guard, M. J. Macklin; trustees, Walter Salle, Jos. Shields, Herman Weaver, John Sefferle and Carl Zack.

We congratulate our old friend, Mike Finn, on his elevation to the presidency. The Bartenders rewarded by their action a trade unionists who is worthy of the name. The union will soon have their trade lined up solidly.

THE WOMAN LABEL LEAGUE.

Some time in the near future a strong effort will be made to bring this powerful working force into action. The union label stands for protection and patriotism to the human family. The man who tries to stop the torrent of a woman's will is a fool. For if she will, she will, and there's the end of it. Let's get to work.

CIGAR MAKERS.

Cigar makers' Union No. 75 will ballot for national officers this afternoon from four to six o'clock.

INTERNATIONAL INDUSTRIALISM

ENGLAND AND INDUSTRIALISM.

MORE TRADE UNIONS COMBINE.

Five trade unions connected with the iron industry have decided to amalgamate into one large body. A plebiscite was taken of the members of the Friendly Society of Ironfounders, the Associated Iron Moulders, the Welsh Ironfounders, the Iron Plate Moulders and the Core Makers, and this has resulted in a vote representative of 30,000 trade unionists, out of a total poll of 35,000, in favor of the amalgamation of the trade unions. This vote endorses a resolution passed by a conference of delegates of the trade unions last October to the effect that amalgamation was essential in view of the closer organisation of capital. In favor of this the Friendly Society of Ironfounders and the Associated Iron Moulders of Scotland decided by a majority of two to one, the Welsh Ironfounders were unanimous, the Iron Plate Moulders were eight to one in favor, while the Core Makers, a comparatively small society, voted four to three against. Thirteen small societies of gold and silver workers in Sheffield have also recently combined into one trade union, and the Pottery Workers' Unions have also been consolidated.

INDUSTRIAL UNIONISM.

Between the capitalist class, who own the industries, and the working class, who work in them, there is always a conflict of interests. The employing class are ever seeking to reduce wages, so that their profits may increase, while the working class have had to combine into unions, in the hope that they could in "some degree" check the greed of the wealthy [illegible].

The working class in America, Germany, France, Australia and other countries are now realising that their old form of Sectional Trades Unionism is powerless against the organized might of the wealthy class, and are fast combining their little unions into one great fighting body—"The Federation of Labor." They also realise it is a waste of energy to fight these greedy capitalists for an extra penny or so per hour, and have resolved that the fight of the future shall be for the OWNERSHIP OF THE INDUSTRIES. New Zealand is falling into line with these other countries, and Mr. Robert Semple, the president of the Miners' Federation, is lecturing throughout the dominion, urging the workers to affiliate their unions into one great organisation, known as the "New Zealand Federation of Labor." He is meeting with enthusiasm everywhere, which speaks well for the awakening intelligence of the working class.

Fellow-workers, you can not do better for yourselves, wives and children than by affiliating with this Federation. When we are sufficiently organised, we shall then "take and hold" the industries for ourselves, working them on a co-operative basis. We shall elect our own overseers, and lock out this idle, useless capitalist class. It has been your labor, workers, that has built these industries; it is your labor that runs them, and to you, and you alone, belongs the FULL value of your product.

Industrial Unionism is no idle dream of future centuries, but is right here amongst you, knocking at your very doors, and by unity of action its objects can be attained in a few short years.

Workers of all lands, unite! You have nothing to lose but your chains. You have the whole world to gain.—Voice of Labor from South Africa.

HALT AT STATE HOUSE.

Women's Eight-Hour Law Hearing Next Tuesday Evening.

Senator Green's bill limiting the hours of labor for female workers to eight hours per day will receive a public hearing in the Senate chamber next Tuesday evening, February 14, at 7:30. Every friend of labor should rally to this meeting and show the legislators that there is a demand for this progressive measure. There is no need to show the toilers the benefits of this proposed law—the thing is to demonstrate to the members of the General Assembly that they had better listen to the voice of labor. The women should be out in force.

PRINTING TRADE CRISIS.

In order to keep the printing trade informed of the progress of the 48-hour movement it has been decided by the London Society of Compositors to issue a daily record of events, under the title of the "Daily Herald."

This newspaper is to be issued at noon each day, Saturday, Sundays and Mondays excepted, at the price of a halfpenny, and is to be published by Messrs. James Henderson and Sons, of Red Lion-court, Fleet street.

I have the best 2-acre Factory Site, "close in," in Columbus. Price "way down." For particulars address Palmer, 284 W. Eighth Ave.

MILITARISM SCORED AT LABOR PARTY MEET

KEIR HARDIE'S GENERAL STRIKE RESOLUTION LOST BY ONLY SIX VOTES.

LONDON, Feb. 1.—A special conference on disarmament preceded the annual conference of the Labor party, which opened at Leicester yesterday. More than a million organised workmen were represented.

A resolution was carried unanimously denouncing militarism and war, declaring for the arbitration of all international disputes, and urging the workers of Great Britain to take organized action with their co-workers of Germany and other lands to attain these ends.

J. Ramsay Macdonald, M. P., said the labor members of parliament must oppose the proposed increase in the expenditure for the navy. They would vote for the increase if the national security were menaced, but this was a delusion.

The conference, by a majority of only six votes, rejected James Keir Hardie's resolution in favor of a general strike as a means of preventing war.

He wanted to provide for the summoning of an international congress if war between England and Germany threatened, in which even the workers would pledge themselves to suspend all productive work the day it was declared, and not resume until the war ended.

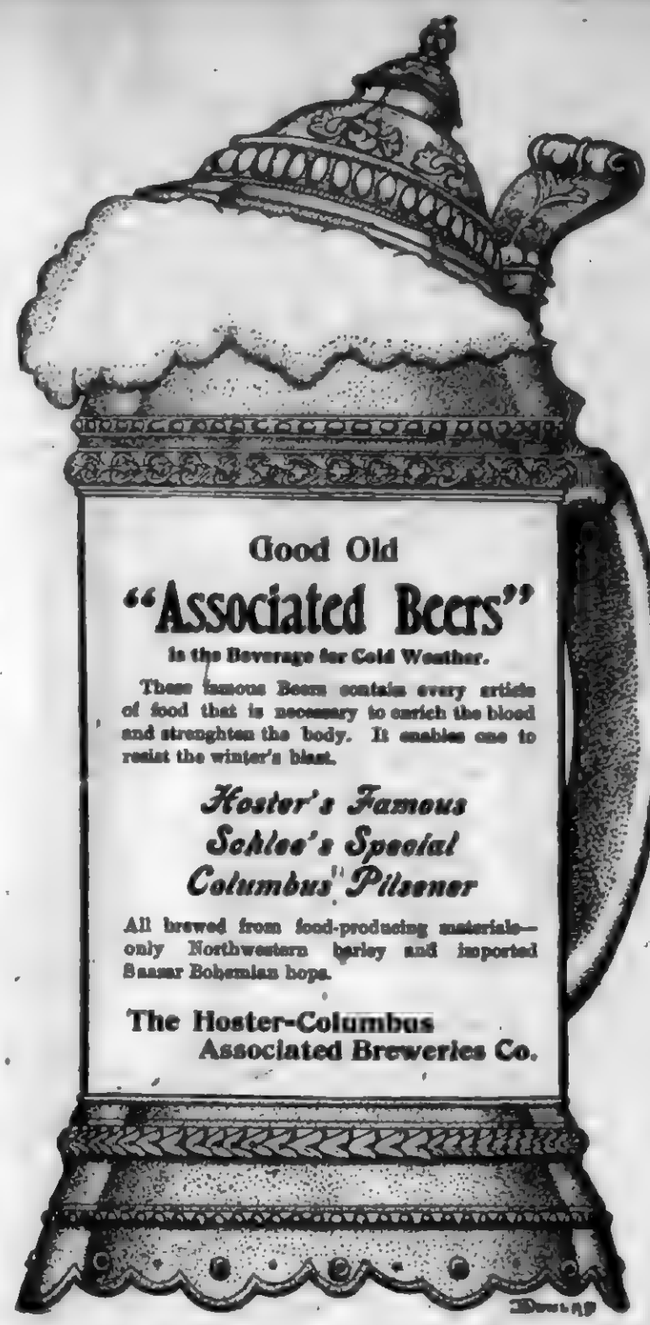
A. F. OF L. CHARTER GRANTED TO WESTERN FEDERATION OF MINERS.

Upon the application of the Western Federation of Miners for charter, the Executive Council had the subject before it by the following instructions of the St. Louis Convention of the American Federation of Labor:

That a charter be issued to the Western Federation of Miners on the basis of the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America. It was found that there was some difference between the coal mining and the mineral mining organizations in respect to the organization and employment of machinists which did not relatively apply to other trades, and therefore it is made a provision of the issue of this charter that members of machinists' locals now existing in mining camps are not to be required to join the Western Federation of Miners in order to follow their trade in the mining camp.

MISS SYLVIA PANKHURST AND [illegible]

(A Retrospect.)



The Woman suffrage movement in Great Britain stands as an example of determination and perseverance.

Those of the audience who have never looked on the miserable scenes depicted by Miss Pankhurst, at the Board of Trade last Saturday, may fail to grasp the need for militant tactics in the demand for women "to be heard as well as seen."

For many years, in periods of industrial depression, class distinctions have prevented direct action on the part of British women in relieving the suffering of their poorer sisters. Their tactics in the past were confined to opening and endowing hospitals, etc. At times these acts exhibited more ceremony than beneficial results. Toward the end of the eighteenth century the continual confliction of the Scottish and English marriage laws caused British womanhood to unite for a campaign of personal action. Let it be remembered that Charles Bradlaugh, a member of parliament and likewise a free-thinker, warned the government against ignoring the legal rights of women in 1876. The year 1880 saw a reign of society scandals and industrial upheavals. Then came the development of the "Monday Afternoon Mothers' Meetings" into an army of determined, federated women. The leaders were recruited from all walks of life. The artist began to study woman by her environments, the sculptor by her labor. Then they met with the advanced thinkers of the literary world, and soon the seed of social righteousness began to be sown broadcast. Lady Aberdeen, that great soul of love and piety, had as her guest about this time the Prime Minister, William E. Gladstone, and his faithful wife, and the great Commoner placed his stamp of approval on the right of women to voice their own demands. At first, the workers could not understand the actions of the upper classes. But it soon dawned on them that it was for their good,—that petitions and perfume were to go to the background, and that woman, independent of age and caste, was about to legislate for herself.

Out of this continual agitation came the enactment of housing codes, whereby slums are being abolished and sanitary dwellings erected in their place. The London County Council has many women elected on the various boards. One of the important measures introduced by these ladies calls for inspection and suppression of immoral plays and a rigid enforcement of a law that compels the building of proper stage dressing rooms. In the cotton and colliery districts the horrible industrial conditions which surround women workers were revealed and relieved. Few if any of the British labor leaders will deny the statement that their wives played an important part in their successful career.

The mothers of Britain have given their sons to the army and navy. When they found their names among the "dead and missing," they mourned for their dead and rejoiced in their deeds of valor. Hence prisons and torture-racks, stomach pumps and dungeons can never deter the march of womanhood from her right of suffrage. Martyrdom may mean mental suffering, yet how small is the offering and how great the reward!

REAL SOCIETY.

Some one asks the question: Does real society life consist merely in the lavish expenditure of money on entertaining, or is it made up of friendly intercourse based on the qualities of human nature, rather than on external embellishment?

Real society does not consist in the lavish expenditure of money for outward show. There can be no real worth in anything designed solely for show. It can not satisfy human need, neither can it tend to elevate the human character. Such a society is false and empty. It is a whited sepulchre filled with dead men's bones. Real society is a society that seeks at all times the betterment and help of humanity. It is the manifestation of the love for mankind which must spring from the heart and manifest itself in the rendering of good deeds. It is natural. The false is but mechanical, and there is the difference between them that there is between an organism and a crystal. The organism, teeming with life, goes from within; the crystal but increases from without, for it is dead.

Society has been most vitally affected by the unfair conditions of capital and labor. It could have nothing to fear so long as there was an equal distribution of the necessities of life. When every man earned his bread by the sweat of his brow, all society was clean and wholesome in the performance of honest toil. It was only when the division began to be uneven that grave dangers threatened the social system. Then it was that the curse of idleness crept in. Those whom the unequal division favored found themselves with every want supplied without the toil of producing it. They became idle parasites—paupers of labor. This idleness demanded extravagant amusement, hence the lavish expenditure of money on entertainment, which has led to evil excesses, never as now so fertile in amazing sensations and so amusing in effects.

In a recent article the cause of idleness in society is described as follows: "It was the magic of gold, it was the poison of idle wealth. It came at first like a little spot upon the body of a man. Quickly it spread from limb to limb, and part to part, until, in the fulness of time, it was a leprosy, following the body of society almost from head to foot. It was the curse of gold, no more no less the same poison that blighted the glory of Athens, that ruined the splendor of Rome, that brought upon Bourbon France the terror of the revolution."

The same blight today threatens America. Its poison long ago entered the strongholds of our civilization and has spread its foul network of destruction from shore to shore. None can be blind to the terror of its invasion. While some in our midst are starving to death for bread we read that the very latest beautifier is a cosmetic made of crushed pearls—rather an expensive luxury, but the idea is popular in society, due perhaps more to the extravagant price than to any real benefit derived.

Again, a woman of the fashionable set affirms that to be well dressed one must spend at least $10,000 a year for her clothes. That is the minimum, and does not include the cost of furs or jewels, which usually foots up several hundred thousand. And where is the display of gowns greater than in the fashionable churches, where women assemble to worship One who when on earth had not whereon to lay his head?

We read that the trousseau of one of our young lady capitalists, about to marry an English lord, will cost $50,000. And still another has recently purchased the famous Hope diamond. The price paid was $300,000.

Thus the element of glitter, made possible by the unequal distribution of capital, has made of society a mad Vanity Fair of idle mockery, lacking in all the essentials of helpfulness and void of any spirit of brotherly love.

Society should be the mingling together of neighbors in friendly, helpful relationship.

Long ago a somewhat similar question to the one above was asked: "Who is thy neighbor?" The question was answered by the parable of the man who fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment and wounded him, leaving him half dead. After several had passed him by in his distress, a certain Samaritan had compassion upon him and ministered unto his needs. Then the question was asked: "Which was neighbor to the man who fell among thieves?" The answer was: "He that showed mercy on him."

And so today, as then, it is the beautiful quality of mercy that must be the underlying principle of society to make it of any value to the race; to make it real and truly helpful to mankind.

ATTENTION!

The Woman's National Commitee calls your attention to the fact that the last Sunday in February has been set aside as Woman's Day, and that the National Executive Committee has requested the locals to observe this day by holding a special meeting for women. As far as possible women speakers should be secured.

SEEK MARRIAGE REGULATION.

Denver, Colo.

With the united support of the four women representatives in the legislature, a vigorous attempt is to be made at this session to pass a law requiring a physical examination and a clean bill of health as a condition precedent to entering the marriage state. The bill is the most drastic that has ever been presented to a legislature in any state. It denies the right of marriage to persons afflicted with tuberculosis or other communicable diseases.

Confirmed drunkards and those who are users of drugs need not apply for a marriage license. Those who are engaged in infamous callings are prohibited from joining in marriage.—Daily Socialist.

Mrs. Ella Flagg Young is the only woman who has ever been made superintendent of the public schools of a great city. She is a remarkable woman in many respects, and there are very few people who know as much about education as she does. She has been engaged in teaching since 1862, and has been in turn district superintendent of schools, professor of education in the University of Chicago and principal of the Chicago Normal School. Last year she was made superintendent of all the schools. She has also written many important books on educational subjects.—McCall's Magazine.

A Parents' Home League has been organized in Georgia to fight race suicide and promote maternity. It provides a system of rewards and pensions for married people. Doesn't such a movement seem a little far fetched? It is like an ignorant physician treating an effect rather than a cause. Assure every married man of work, a comfortable home and a sufficient income on which to live, and there will be no trouble as to race suicide.

The new parliament in England contains an increased majority of suffragists. Of the 670 members of the house of commons 407 are willing to vote for the Conciliation Bill, or a bill on the same lines; 9 are willing to vote for adult suffrage only; 5 are willing to vote only for a woman suffrage mill more restricted than the Conciliation Bill; 176 are anti-suffragists, and 73 are neutral or uncommitted.

Why in the name of reason should the mere fact of voting work deterioration in any woman? It does not take any mother "away from her home duties" to spend ten minutes going to the polls, casting her vote and returning to the bosom of her family; but during those ten minutes she wields a power that is doing more to protect her home, and all other homes, than any other possible influence.—Judge Ben B. Lindsey.

The wives of the Boer statesmen refuse to courtesy to Lady Gladstone when they meet. Prime Minister Botha, in attempting to explain the situation, said they were too "Dutch built" for such work—but it is only the independence of the Boer women, whose freedom of spirit forbids them to bow before royalty or submit to the introduction of snobbery into their commonwealth.

Duchess of Roxeburgh, formerly Miss May Goelet, an American, will have the proud (?) distinction at the coronation ceremonies next June of being one of four duchesses chosen to hold the canopy over Queen Mary when she is crowned. A proud distinction, indeed, for the daughter of a republic.

The imprisonment of Helen Keller, the blind girl, would be in keeping with the past decisions of the federal courts. Her letter of condemnation of the judge that sentenced Fred Warren should be printed in gilded, raised letters, and a copy furnished every man, woman and child in America.

Milwaukee is to have a nurse appointed as a policeman. This nurse will be able to walk in the park by herself.

The Texas Federation of Woman's Clubs has taken the position that a woman who is left with a family of children, and has not the means to send them to school, should be pensioned by the state. That would seem to be a pretty good place to start when the payment of civil pensions is begun.

WEEKLY SOCIALISTTE.

"Be of Good Cheer."

Whenever an individual, devoid of all semblance of good cheer, poses for a Christian you may know there is something radically wrong with that individual and, consequently, with his Christianity. Real Christianity, no matter where found, is an inward grace of spirituality, which, however, can no more remain shut up within the individual than can the flower remain shut up within the cramped, green prison of its bud. Just as the bud must open into the flower to shed its sweets around, so must the grace of Christianity burst forth into the benediction of good cheer.

Good cheer is essentially a Christ quality. Christ was a man of sorrows, acquainted with grief, and yet his command to those who followed after Him was ever, "Be of good cheer."

Cheer is the balancing harmony of life's melody, deadening all discord and silencing the harshness into the perfect, tuneful blending of the music of life.

A CAT AND DOG DUET.

Said the tortoise-shell cat to the curly-haired dog,
"You're noisy and careless and rough,
You growl, and you bark, and you oftentimes bite;
Your manners at all times are gruff;
For you tease all the pussies and chase the poor cow—
Mee-ow! Mee-ow! Mee-ow!

Said the curly-haired dog to the tortoise-shell cat,
"You're lazy and selfish and sly;
You purr and pretend, but you scratch all the same,
And play with poor mice till they die.
As for being good-natured, you never knew how—
Bow-wow! Bow-wow! Bow-wow!

Said the tortoise-shell cat to the curly-haired dog,
"I never chase chickens like you,
Or fight other dogs that I meet in the road,
Or gobble my food as you do;
I'm more gentle, and far more refined, you'll allow—
Mee-ow! Mee-ow! Mee-ow!

Said the curly-haired dog to the tortoise-shell cat,
"I never go out in the night
To sit on the roof, and make horrible sounds,
That wake baby up in a fright;
I'd sooner be dumb than make such a row—
Bow-wow! Bow-wow! Bow-wow!

And so they went on—both the cat and the dog—
And snarled at each other, until
Their mistress came up and beat both of them well,
And made them lie down and be still;
So they have their own troubles to think about now—
Mee-ow! Bow-wow! Mee-ow!

Now, no girl or boy should, like this cat and dog,
Find fault with and criticise friends,
For all have some faults, and the best now and then
Do wrong and must make some amends.
That's the end of my piece, so I make you my bow—
Bow-wow! Mee-ow! Bow-wow!
—From Farm and Home.

APTHUMATIC.

One man gave lavishly of gold,
And builded tower and town;
Then smiled content to think his deeds
Should win him great renown.

Another, poor in worldly gain,
Gave all within his ken
Of strength and tenderness and truth
To help his fellow-men.

The record of the rich man's gifts
Lies on a dusty shelf;
The poor man lives in countless hearts
Because he gave himself.

Of all the notable things on earth
The queerest one is pride of birth
Among our fierce democracy.
A bridge across a hundred years,
Without a prop to save from sneers,

A thing for laughter, sneers and jeers,
Is American aristocracy.

THE RIGHTS OF CITIZENSHIP CONCERNING GOVERNMENT EMPLOYES.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—President Oscar F. Nelson, of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, now in Washington in behalf of his organization, wants the ban lifted from the employes in the civil service on the freedom of speech that other American citizens enjoy. An executive order now prohibits from criticism of the administration of their bureau or division or department. Mr. Nelson himself was discharged because he protested against sanitary conditions in the Chicago postoffice.

"I was let out of the service; yes, fired," explained Mr. Nelson, "on the charge that I had given information to the newspapers of Chicago which resulted in articles appearing exposing our present federal building there as the most 'unsanitary structure in the loop district.' That statement was made by Dr. Evans, Chicago's health commissioner. I was responsible for the exposure only in this way. I called at the office of the Tuberculosis Institute to make arrangements to have one of our members, who had contracted the disease as a result of the conditions he was forced to work under, sent to a sanatorium. While there I discussed the conditions that had caused the death of four of our members in a period of a few months and had my organization paying out hundreds of dollars in sick benefits. The result was the newspaper publicity. What an awful crime to be guilty of—trying to prevent tuberculosis. The department had had its attention called to conditions months before, but nothing was done. But for an employe to speak publicly of conditions was to violate the executive's orders, and, therefore I was found guilty of lese majesty, and on July 19, 1910, just nineteen days after I had been promoted for efficiency, I was fired."

Congress now has before it the Jones-Poindexter bill, which will restore the rights of ordinary citizenship to government clerks. This bill has the approval and support of President Nelson, who is working for its passage.

BOSTON, Mass.—The protest committee, organized by the Boston letter carriers, has sent a communication to the daily press, which states that three of their members have just been fined $100 each for stopping to get a cup of coffee on a bitter cold morning after delivering their first mail, and before reporting back to the office.

The committee says that the punishment is "entirely unreasonable," as it was the first offense of these men, who have hitherto borne excellent records for efficiency and sobriety.

Alarmed at the publicity given to the affair, the postoffice authorities have given out the following statement:

"The future conduct of these carriers may have the effect of making their fines only $50 each, as they can be restored to their regular rating the first of any quarter. For instance, if their subsequent conduct proves that the discipline has been sufficient, they may be restored to their customary rating April 1, which means they will lose only $50."

Olympia, Wash.—The lower house of the legislature passed a bill recently making women eligible for jury duty, by striking the word "male" from the present statute.

It turns out that the scarehead articles that were printed in the Eastern papers two weeks ago, to the effect that the grand jury investigating the Los Angeles Times disaster, had placed the blame for the alleged dynamiting upon organized labor was sent broadcast by the Los Angeles Times, the leading labor-hating sheet in the country. Judge Bordwell denied that any such report had been made by the jury. But it is a fact that the grand jury returned indictments against three persons, called Brice, Schmidt and Caplan, who are unknown to the union people of Los Angeles, or California.

They raise some fine apples in Washington state. A bushel box of them was recently opened up in a west Texas town, and a note was found stating that the apple raiser got $1.50 for the box of apples, packed ready for shipping, and asking that the person opening the box inform the writer of the note what price the retailer might get for the lot. It turned out that the retailer paid the wholesaler $3.50 for the apples and then sold them for $4.60. The retailer got a price that was 200 per cent. greater than the price realized by the man who grew the apples, gathered them and prepared them for distribution. Wonder if that apple grower gets mad when they mention Socialism to him, like some cotton growers.

One of the most singular things about the working class is their readiness to fight everybody's battles, but their own. Just observe them when a capitalist war is brought on, or on election day, see them fight and vote for a capitalist ticket; just as earnestly as if they actually stood to lose something in either event.

JIMSY'S VALENTINES.

"I'm sorry, Jimsy, but I don't believe I can give you ten cents."

Jimsy's grandmother shook the blue china mug that stood on the kitchen mantelpiece and held the egg money, but there was no sound of jingling pennies.

"It's such a beautiful valentine, Granny," Jimmy said. "It's made out of gold paper, and it's got white lace on it, and red hearts, and silver stars, and—and, writing."

Jimsy's words gave out for a minute.

"It's stood in the store window for a week and nobody's bought it, though it was so cheap. Please, couldn't I?"

"No, Jimsy." Grandmother Tibbetts shook her head. "You know the coal's given out, and you need new shoes, and grandfather's got to have another bottle of medicine. Ten cents is a lot of money to waste on pretty paper, sonny. Run along now, and fetch the basket of eggs to the store. Biddy's laid another one, I warrant, while we've been talking."

Jimsy Tibbetts pulled on his rubber boots, that had been warming on the hearth, and he wound his green wool tippet around his neck. He put on the fur cap that was cut down from grandfather's, and he lifted the brown egg basket from its place on the kitchen table. He must hurry. The red winter sun was already dipping its great bobbing head behind the snowy fields, and it was a long stretch down the lane and through the wood road to the store.

A brisk wind swept up from the pasture and cut his face as he left the red farmhouse and trotted along with his basket of eggs, a little bent-over farm boy in a suit of homespun. The cold almost froze two tears that trickled down his freckled nose. Jimsy had never, never in all his life owned a valentine. He had heard the children at school talking about them, and he thought if Grandmother Tibbets let him buy the gold one he could pin it up on the wall in the attic where he slept. Oh, wouldn't it be wonderful! He could see it now—its gold paper shining like a bit of sunshine above his red and white patch-work quilt. But Jimsy almost bumped into the store door and Mr. Jones who stood behind the counter.

"Hello, Jimsy. Brought some eggs? You're just the man I want to see. While I'm counting them you sweep the snow out of the store there by the door, and when you get that done just hold the molasses jug under the barrel. The 'lasses runs so slow this weather that it takes half a day to draw a quart."

Jimsy was used to helping Mr. Jones. He grasped the big broom and guided it back and forth across the snowy boards of the floor. Then he held the molasses jug until it was full of the slow-flowing, trickling sweetness, and his back ached, for the barrel was high, and Jimsy was such a little fellow. He was just warming his fingers at the stove when he heard the storekeeper's voice.

"Here's the money, sonny." Mr. Jones patted Jimsy on his head and handed him the empty basket, covered with one of Grandmother Tibbett's clean towels.

"It's getting late; you'd better run along home before it's dark."

It was almost dark. As Jimsy trudged along the road the fence-posts with their white snowcaps looked like ghosts, and the thin silver moon that showed above the tree tops shed shadows that danced like goblins along the wood-path in front of the little boy.

He was going farther and farther away from the gold valentine. He had peeped at it there in the store window when he was filling the mopasses jug. It rested against a glass jar of peppermint candy sticks with a bowl of bulls-eyes in front of it, and it was very lovely. Somebody was going to buy it. Probably it would be Ebenezer Pike, the deacon's little boy, who always had pennies to spare. Ebenezer laughed at Jimsy's fur cap and boasted of a whole box of valentines that he had at home. Two more tears squeezed themselves out of Jimsy's eyes, but he bravely rubbed them off with his red mitten. As he did so he saw a wonderful thing in the snow of the wood-path.

It was a little brown heart outlined in nuts—chestnuts, shagbarks, and hickorynuts. There were enough nuts in the heart to fill Jimsy's pockets and make a fine feast. As he stood looking down at it in wonder he heard a sound in a bush nearby:

"Chee, Chee, Jimsy, see,
From my store in the tree,
And with love in each line,
Your nut valentine."

Jimsy gathered up the nuts, but before he could so much as say thank you the gray squirrel whose chattering voice he had heard had whisked out of sight, and left only some little footprints in the snow.

Jimsy walked slowly on through the woods. He had never heard a squirrel talk before and he was very much surprised. But before he had gone very far something else very strange happened. The tree seemed perfectly bare, no leaf to be seen anywhere, but there fluttered slowly down from it a big, wonderful red leaf, tipped with gold. There it lay at Jimsy's feet in the snow, just the shape of a big red and gold heart. He picked up the leaf heart and laid it softly against his brown coat. It was so bright and pretty that it seemed to warm him, and as he held it close to his breast he heard a creaking, frosty, windy voice coming from somewhere in the top of the tree:

Who-oo, who-oo
Wants a valentine true?
See, the heart of the tree,
It's last leaf, and for you!"

Two valentines! Jimsy clasped his nuts in one hand and the red heart leaf in the other, as he scurried home through the dusky woods and down the moonlit lane. He burst open the door of the red farmhouse. It all looked quite cheerful and comfortable inside. The table was laid for tea, and there was a sweet smell of baking cakes in the kitchen.

"Granny, granny!" Jimsy cried, as he held out his nuts and the red leaf. "I've got two valentines. There was a squirrel and a tree knew how I wanted one."

"A squirrel and a tree!" Grandmother Tibbetts put on her spectacles and felt of Jimsy's forehead. "I'm thinking your cold's gone to your head, Jimsy, and you need a draught, perhaps. But sit down to tea and eat the valentines that I made for you."

Grandmother Tibbetts opened the oven door, and lifted out a plate of crisp sugar cookies, cut like hearts.

"Oh, Granny, dear," Jimsy cried, dropping a kiss on her wrinkled cheek between bites.

"There, there. It's all right, sonny." Grandmother Tibbetts wiped her spectacles.

"But where's the egg money? I hope you didn't lose it on your way home."

"It's here in the bottom of the basket."

Jimsy lifted up the white towel.

"Why—oh, Granny, look!"

There in the bottom of the egg basket lay a beautiful thing made of gold paper and trimmed with white lace and gold hearts and silver stars. It was the valentine. Tucked inside was a note written on a scrap of store paper:

"With Mr. Jones' compliments, for Jimsy Tibbetts."

DOING SOMETHING TO THE TARIFF.

Congress, is determined to make people believe it is doing something. So, having revised the tariff up and having revised the tariff down, it is now revising it sideways.

Of course, there were other questions that Congress might have dealt with. But dealing with them might have disturbed vested interests. However, in the case of the tariff, there is always some section of the capitalist class that will get some sort of an additional rake-off.

So the merry farce of Revising the Tariff is on again. It will probably have an almost uninterrupted run for the next few years. Congressmen seem to like it, and senators are daffy over it. As they run the show at Washington, with the advice of the interests, there is little that can be done except revise Congress as now constituted. The best way to do it is to strike off the list all free Democrats and protected Republicans, or all free Republicans and protected Democrats, and replace them with Socialists.

"That depends," answered Brand doubtfully, a trifle weakly, sinking thoughtfully into a chair beside a table.

Bartelmy detected at once the note of doubt and weakness in Brand's reply and questioned to himself what it might portend.

"On what?" asked the judge carefully, trying to analyze the mental processes of his opponent, who stared at him across the table.

Brand spoke deliberately, in low voice.

"On whether you're willing to meet me halfway."

Bartelmy's hopes immediately surged high. Ha, as plain a bid for a price as he had ever heard, and he had heard them before. He gazed, reassured, at the young man's earnest face. Ha, how skillful he was, this young Brand! How he had deceived every one! Yes, he was just like some of the other reformers the judge had met—just like some of his political friends who started to clean up certain conditions, only to be retained to let them exist as they were. But Brand was the cleverest one of the lot by far, and probably he was to divide the proceeds of this bribe with Nolan. Oh, they were a cunning pair! Had even fooled Dupuy, who thought them dangerous. And what a son-in-law Brand would make! Yes, he could have Judith; he was worthy to possess the reigning beauty of a great city. So argued to himself the false judge, and he said:

"Of course I am willing to meet you halfway, but it all depends on whether we understand each other."

"Your decision was doubtless of some value to you, and if I am willing to keep silent about its antecedent circumstances then"— Brand looked the judge in the eye expectantly.

Bartelmy felt relieved. He felicitated himself on the fact that his judgment had been correct.

"Yes; you"— He halted.

"Why"— Brand paused.

"Well?" queried the judge irritatedly.

"There you are," responded Brand simply, his eyes meeting those of the jurist.

Bartelmy glanced cautiously at the editor, seeking for signs of deception, of a trap, but he found them not.

"Mr. Brand, what do you want?" he asked sharply.

"What's it worth to you?"

"I would prefer you to set the figure."

"No."

"How about $10,000?" asked the judge.

"Yes," agreed Brand, rising—"in cash tonight."

"Rather short notice for such a sum," protestingly. "Where shall I see you?"

"At my office."

"Your office—the Advance! No, no. I prefer you to come to my chambers about noon tomorrow. We shall be quite private there."

"I can't wait that long for it, judge. I've got to have it tonight."

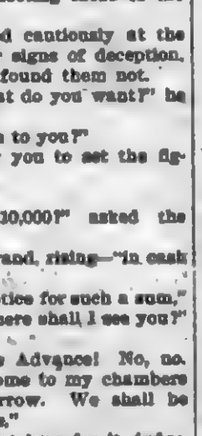
"Oh, is it something of that sort? Well, then, come to my house after dinner."

"But I've got to be at my office," insisted the editor.

"I hardly like to go there, Mr. Brand."

"That's up to you, judge. But if you don't come the story goes to press tonight. Well?" with a rising inflection.

"I"—



Judith Bartelmy entered.

"Will you come now, papa?" she asked.

"Just a moment, my dear. I intended to ask Dupuy to dine with us."

"Oh, can't you take him to the club?" she pouted.

"That wouldn't be convenient, my dear. You know we're going to the opera." He stepped back toward the library. "Mr. Brand, I'll see you again before you leave."

There was a moment's embarrassed silence between Judith and Whereat Brand as the judge disappeared.

"How do you do, Mr. Brand?" she finally asked.

"How do you do, Miss Bartelmy?" His manner was awkward and strained. A moment of embarrassed silence ensued.

"I haven't seen you all winter." She placed her hands on the back of a chair near a settee.

"No; I haven't been anywhere. I've been kept pretty close at work." He paused. "Won't you sit down?"

She moved to the left and occupied the settee. After a few moments of silence she said:

"It's strange I haven't seen you all winter. I suppose it will be another hundred years before I see you again."

Brand looked intently at her.

"It won't be if you wish to see me any sooner, Judith," and, thus speaking, he leaned over the back of the settee toward the girl he loved.

"Why, of course I wish—er— You were having a talk with father when I came in, weren't you?"

"Yes," rising and stepping back from her.

"Wheeler, come here," the girl asked wistfully. "I want to talk to you." He moved to a chair close by her side. "Aren't you beginning to realize that you may have been a bit headstrong?" she said tenderly, looking into his eyes. "I'm afraid you are getting in very deep. Your friends, most of them, have been patient with you so far, but there's a limit, you know, and you'll lose them."

"I'm sorry."

"Oh, Wheeler"—she was intensely in earnest—"is it worth while to let them go just for an idea?"

"A man must act according to his light, Judith."

"And a woman according to hers. Perhaps you don't realize it, but that's what I've been trying to do. You know I've been alone a great deal of my life. I've had more responsibility than most girls. I've had to decide things for myself and the younger ones and do the best I could for all of us."

"Yes, I know that. There's nobody like you, Judith."

"I'm glad if you think that."

"I'll always think that, Judith," he exclaimed passionately. "And I'll always feel all that I've lost."

"Haven't you brought it on yourself?" she asked quickly.

Brand seized both her hands, and in a tempest of emotion, long suppressed, he rose and bent over her.

"Oh, dearest, can't we have this one moment"—he was aroused to a pitch she had never seen him reach before—"even if we never have another, without thinking of anything except—except each other?" He seated himself close to her.

"Wheeler, I've a little story I want to tell you," she said fondly, yet sadly. She spoke as one pleading in a vital cause. "Once upon a time there was a girl, and she rather liked a somewhat gloomy young man. But one night something happened and then—they didn't speak for a long time—oh, a very long time. But there were other young men, and one of them has asked to call tomorrow afternoon at 5 o'clock. He was very serious about it. You see, the girl has been waiting so long that she's beginning to be afraid—afraid that—er— Oh, Wheeler, why won't you drop it all? It's not too late!"

She rose to her feet, still with her hands in his, and in another moment he stood beside her. He threw both his arms around her and held her close to his bosom.

"Judith," he whispered passionately to her.

"Why don't you call tomorrow at 4?" was her response.

As they stood there in fond embrace, her lips raised to his, Judge Bartelmy appeared at the extreme end of the room. He gave a sudden start as he saw their oblivion to all else but themselves. His cold blue eyes shone with the satisfaction that filled him. He had done a good day's work, he congratulated himself. He had arranged to buy Brand's silence for $10,000 when it was really worth twice that sum to a man of the United States judge's wealth and standing. Why, he had originally planned to give Brand twice that sum as a wedding present when he married Judith.

"Mr. Brand," the judge declared, "I will call at your office tonight at 8 o'clock. Judith, I am ready to go now."

The couple drew apart in confusion.

She walked away slowly from her lover, her eyes wet with tears. She went out of the room with her father, leaving Wheeler Brand standing in the middle of the room, overcome by the unconquerable sorrow that filled his soul.

"I put it through."

The towering figure of Nolan appeared from the library. He stepped toward the editor.

"Well, did you put it through?" he asked.

Brand threw back his head, and his misery was imprinted in every line of his face. Yet by superhuman will power he forced his voice into steadiness as he said:

"Yes—I put it through."

CHAPTER IX.

AT 9 o'clock in the managing editor's room in the Advance building Wheeler Brand and three other men, Howard Hartley, Jeff Thorne, staff reporters, and Bill, their much browbeaten understudy, were industriously at work. At one side of the office diagonally from the managing editor's desk was a high mahogany desk which backed against a wooden partition which cut off a small room used as a "morgue," the place where newspaper and magazine clippings are kept for reference.

Through the partition a round hole about five inches in diameter had been cut with a handsaw, and on a table in the morgue a camera had been rested with the telescopic protuberance containing the lens projecting through the hole in the partition into a private mail box directly above the desk. The door of this box, into which were placed letters arriving for the managing editor during his absence, had been unlocked. A line of shoe thread had been fastened to the door of the box and extended down behind the desk to the floor and across to the left hand side of Brand's desk. A slight tug on the thread would cause the door of the mail box to open, exposing to the lens Brand's desk, his chair and another chair which had been placed at the right of the desk next to the telephone.

For several minutes the mysterious preparations went on. Just what they meant no one but Brand could tell, and he was strangely silent, except as to directing what should be done.

Hartley was anxious to make certain that the lens aimed directly at Brand's desk. He measured the line with his eye.

"Get it?" called Jeff.

"No, not yet. Wait a minute," Howard answered, dodging around quickly toward the little "morgue." "I haven't got the focus right yet. Hold on!"

Jeff lighted a match, held it up and stood between the two chairs.

"How's that?" he cried.

The answering voice came back.

"Yes; that's the very thing. It's all right now."

Brand stepped forward from a corner of the room from whence he had been watching the final preparations for the strange event that was to occur.

"Are you all set now, boys?" he asked. "Is your camera in the right place for the flashlight?"

"Yes, sir!" cried Jeff and Howard simultaneously.

"The flashlight is planted here, sir," said Howard, pointing to a narrow pan in a shadowed spot on top of the mahogany desk and close to the lens.

"Have you tested this?" asked Brand.

"Yes, sir."

"Be careful, sir, or you'll explode the flash," warned Jeff as Brand lighted a match to ascertain the location of the powder.

"Go into room 4, boys, and wait till I send for you," directed Brand.

Jeff and Howard went out. Brand went to his desk as the office boy, Durkin, entered.

"Joe Dillon's here," said the lad.

"Drunk?"

"Just one over."

"Broke?"

"Sure!" The boy grinned.

Dillon, one of the "has-beens" characteristic of the type that prey on the newspaper men at night in the big cities, would ordinarily have received short shrift from a busy man like Brand, but Dillon, an ex-newspaper reporter, had once given Brand, when a beginner, some valuable pointers, which the now managing editor had never forgotten.

"I'm hungry."

"Tell him to come in," ordered Brand. He reached for the office telephone and called the night city editor. "The Patriot has got the town skinned on shipping," he said. "Do you know who's doing it for them? Well, I think you'd better hire him."

Joe Dillon wandered in.

"Good evening, Mr. Brand," he said weakly. Durkin, who had summoned him, followed him in.

"Well, Joe, what is it?"

"Wait a minute, Durkin. Got a story for us, Joe?" queried Brand sympathetically.

Dillon staggered forward.

"Better sit down," cautioned Brand. "Same old story, eh?"

"No. I'm hungry."

"Durkin, go get one hot roast beef sandwich and a big pot of black coffee and see that he gets them."

"Yes, sir." The lad sped away after dexterously catching a quarter which Brand tossed him.

"I wish I was going in there to work with the boys instead of eating charity grub," began Dillon plaintively. "I know you mean all right, Mr. Brand. I've tried and tried again to fight it off, but it's useless. I can't. It's too late. I'm a dead one. The hard stuff, the five cent whisky, has got me. You never heard how this thing started, did you, Mr. Brand? If it hadn't been for my wife"—

"Oh, cut it out!" cried Brand, and Dillon shambled out of the room.

Downs hurried in. He had become night editor when the shakeup occurred at the time of Brand's promotion.

"Young Bobbie Doolittle pinched again for speeding," he rattled off. "Three show girls in the auto. All of 'em lit up. Bobbie weeping because the girls had to miss the theater, and his mother's at me all evening to keep it out. What'll I do?"

Brand leaned back and smiled.

"Well, it was on her account we kept out his partial elopement with her French maid and the time he kissed the head waiter at the St. Honore hotel in lieu of a tip, and I guess—well, print this one. It may help brace him up."

"Oh, and that disappearance case," reminded Downs. "The girl's come back—old gag, visiting her friends in Jersey, but she's been off on the suit case circuit all right."

"Home now?" jerked the managing editor.

"Yep."

"Think she'll stay there?"

"She might."

"Well, she can't if we print this, so let's forget it."

"But we've had a man on it two days," persisted Downs. "We're the only paper that's got it."

"Well, we won't be the one to kick her down," pronounced Brand, turning his head away to end the conversation.

"All right, just as you say."

The telephone bell rang. Brand took off the receiver.

"Hello! Tell Mr. Dupuy I'm busy?" he cried after taking the message. "What? Send him in. That's all, Downs. See that they take care of Dillon, will you?"

The night editor nodded in the affirmative and gazed rather curiously at Brand as he went out.

Dupuy came into Brand's office with a most circumspect and deferential air. Dressed in evening clothes, carrying his silk hat in his hand and with a boutonniere of hothouse violets in his lapel, he gave every indication of being the society figure that his name and wealth had made possible for him.

The lawyer lobbyist walked directly to the desk at which Brand was seated. In reply to the managing editor's salutation he bowed stiffly and leaned forward over the desk.

Several moments elapsed before Dupuy spoke. He was trying to put his opening words in the most judicious language, and well he might hesitate when one considers the nature of his evil errand.

"The gentleman who was coming to see you tonight," at last he said carefully, "has had to go to the opera with his daughter. He has asked me to come in his stead."

An expression of complete bewilderment spread over the other's face.

"A gentleman? What gentleman?" he interrogated.

Dupuy was momentarily nonplused.

NINTH WARD BRANCH.

Strong Resolutions Adopted Condemning Court Procedure.

At a meeting of the Ninth Ward Branch, on Thursday evening, February 2, a resolution was unanimously adopted calling attention to the class character of our courts. Comrade Robert Radebaugh gave an address on the railroad question. Comrade James Henderson, president-elect of the Columbus Federation of Labor, gave a talk. Comrade Henderson is to speak for the Ninth Ward Branch Thursday evening, February 9, on "Wolves in Sheeps' Clothing." Arrangements are being made to have a good speaker at every meeting. Two applications for membership were received. The delegates to the central body were instructed to take up the matter of suitable resolutions relative to the Warren case.

The following was the resolution adopted on the court question:

"Having watched the actions of the courts in the Colorado troubles, the Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone cases, the Warren case, and some of the cases in our own courts during the past year, and especially our police and common pleas courts, where people were heavily fined for calling scabs by their right names and others were acquitted after shooting innocent persons, where the man who threw a corncob was sent to the penitentiary for an indefinite time, while the conductor who shot a passenger was sent to Virginia to see his wife and returned to the workhouse as a special protege of the officers of the Columbus Rail-Light Company. We have seen where a man was saved from the penitentiary by swearing he threw at the conductor instead of the car, proving that the courts held property more sacred than human life. We have seen where a bloodthirsty military officer who ordered innocent men and women beaten by thugs who infested our city last summer, contrary to all rules of right and justice, made foreman of the grand jury which investigates these thugs. We have seen men held in jail awaiting trial who had been convicted of no crime denied the privilege of seeing their friends, while others who have been found guilty by a jury and sent to the workhouse have received visitors at their pleasure, with cigars, tobacco, cigarettes, etc; therefore, be it

"RESOLVED, That we most heartily condemn our police and common pleas courts for their friendship to the 'interests,' and their shown antipathy to human rights and justice; and, be it further

"RESOLVED, That we call upon all fair-minded persons to aid us in the overthrow of the present court practices where property is more sacred than human life, and establish in its stead a system where human rights and liberty will be paramount to property."

TWELFTH WARD BRANCH.

The Twelfth Ward Branch swung into line for The Socialist subscription contest, and will be up and doing.

EUBLIN'S LECTURE.

Prof. Charles Eublin will lecture Wednesday evening, February 22, at the Chamber of Commerce, on "The Twentieth Century City." Prof. Chas. Eublin is known the country over for his peculiar social ideas. However, those who know him well realize it is simply another case of a man being ahead of his time. Prof. Eublin is of unusual training as a sociologist. He was educated at the University of Pennsylvania and Northwestern University. He was a Yale post-graduate and studied at some time in the university at Leipsic.

Two prisoners, both named Hayes, were received at the penitentiary last week. One, Harry B. Hayes, of Cleveland, embezzled bonds which are said to have been valued at $200,000, while the other man, Harry D. Hayes, of Ashland county, was convicted for stealing food for his family.

When it came to assigning these men to work, the man who had stolen food for his family was given a place in one of the bolt shops, while the other was given an easy "job" in the storekeeper's office. All the privileges of the prison will be extended to Harry E., while Harry D. will be forced to spend his nights in a dark and poorly ventilated cell.

Each purchaser of a ticket will receive the Chicago Daily Socialist for four months, in addition to the enjoyment to be derived from the five evenings of entertainment and instructions.

SOMETHING ABOUT TAXES.

Comrade Editor: The United States of America is a free country, and the finest place in the world to live in, but is it not awful when a citizen of the said United States of America must kick on the way the people are being taxed and taxed, then retaxed.

Just a few of the retaxes: A grocery store and meat market must have a milk license, a meat permit, a wagon license, a butterine license, a cigarette license; if he has a dog on his place, a dog license, and maybe afterwhile, if he handles chickens, he will need a chicken license.

Here is something I don't know and would like to know: What becomes of all of this money that is paid into the city treasury? Can I have a statement of how much money was paid into the city treasury last year for taxes? Can I get a statement of what became of the said money, and why we really need these taxes? Are we not taxed enough already on our properties? Do you think it's right, after paying our property tax, which includes our wagons and horses and dogs, that we must also pay to have the permission from the city to drive a horse or ride a bicycle on the streets of Columbus? I say NO!

Away with extra taxation. We do not need it. It just makes hardships, and a man can not be a free citizen when he is taxed to death. That's what caused the revolutionary war between the United States of America with England. Too much tax. They are pushing this thing too far. They are pushing it to extremes. Now, look out for a civil revolution. We must use the ballot-box and use it right. Never again will I vote a Republican or Democratic ticket. That was the first mistake I ever made when I threw my first vote away.

If we can elect a Socialist Mayor here in Columbus next time, and also a majority in Council, we will be able to cast off this extra taxation. Come on, business men, stick with the class from which you make your living, and all the workers will come in also. Then we will show a few high-muck-a-muck hardship and panic breeders some things. Three cheers for Socialism, the only clear idea of Christianity.

JACOB H. MONINGER.

The Socialist Makes Fair Proposition To Secure The Co-Operation Of All For The Next Campaign.

READ EVERY WORD OF OUR OFFER.

The Socialist wishes to co-operate with the City Central Committee, the Ward Branches and the precinct workers of the Socialist party of Columbus in educating the voters and organizing our forces so that we may reap the full benefit of our educational work.

We believe that one of the most effective means of educating the workers and of propagating Socialism is through the columns of a good Socialist paper. The paper goes each week into the home and carries some message, some truth, to each of its readers. While we make no apology for our paper, we are determined that each issue shall be an improvement over the previous one.

The subscription list is the life of any paper. Without it, it dies. We want at least 10,000 subscribers on our books before the campaign opens. We must have them if The Socialist is to be the power for good that it should be in the fight of 1911 in Columbus, "the Storm Center of Socialism."

OUR PLAN.

Here is our plan to put money into the treasuries of the City Central Committee and of the Ward Branches for use in organization and propaganda work, as they may determine:

1. We will pay to each Ward Branch 12½ per cent. of all money for subscriptions collected and turned in by its member to The Socialist.

2. We will pay over to the treasury of the City Central Committee of Local Columbus 12½ per cent. of all money collected and paid in by the Ward Branches for subscriptions to The Socialist.

LIST OF PRIZES.

As Prizes or special rewards for the workers we offer the following:

1. To the Branch turning in the largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, in proportion to membership of the Branch in good standing, we will give $75 in books, to be selected by the Branch, or in money.

2. To the Branch turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, under the foregoing conditions, we will give $50 in books or money.

3. To the Branch turning in the third largest amount of money on subscriptions as stated we will give $25 in books or money.

INDIVIDUAL REWARDS.

1. To the member of any Branch turning in the largest amount of money on subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $25 in gold.

2. To the member of any Branch turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $15 in gold.

3. To the member of any Branch who turns in the third largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $10 in gold.

CONDITIONS.

The only conditions we impose in this contest are that the members of Branches will get all their sub. cards from the literature or special agent of their respective Branches and that this agent will at all times have on hand a supply of sub. cards and make returns to The Socialist of all subscriptions received not later than Wednesday of each week. Sub. cards will be supplied by this office at any time. This contest will be limited to Branches and Locals in Franklin County.

This Contest Began On Saturday, Feb. 11, and Will Close Tuesday, November 7, 1911

Information as to details of this contest will be cheerfully furnished by this office.

THE TIMBER TRUST.

The assertion that a vast timber trust, dwarfing Standard Oil by comparison, is in the making, and startling statistics showing how the government has lost millions in disposing of timber lands are contained in a special report sent to Congress by Herbert Knox Smith, commissioner of corporations.

It appears from the report that nearly all the vast timber land in the United States is owned by wealthy men. It is stated that 195 men hold one-half of the privately owned woods of the entire country. One-half of Florida is in the hands of a few individuals, and grave fears are expressed for the future.

"Four-fifths of the standing timber in this country," Smith says, "is now privately owned, and three vast holdings alone—those of the Southern Pacific Company, the Weyerhauser Timber Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company (including their subsidiary companies) together have 238 billion feet, or nearly 11 per cent of this privately owned timber.

"These three holdings," the report says, "have enough standing timber to build an ordinary five or six-room frame house for each of the 15,000,000 families in the United States. If sawed into lumber and placed in cars, their timber would load a train about 160,000 miles long.

"The largest holders are cutting little of their timber. They thus reserve to themselves these incalculable profits, which are still to accrue with the growth of the country, the diminishing timber supply and the further concentration and control thereof.

"Many of the very men who are protesting against conservation and the national forest system because of the 'tying up' of natural resources, are themselves deliberately tying it up far more effectively for private gain."

The report declares the timber now standing will last only about 55 years.

Such continued "standing timber," the report states, "if permitted to continue and increase, makes probable a final central control of the whole lumber industry. A few strong interests ultimately holding the bulk of the timber can set the price of timber and its products.

"When the timber has been cut, the land remains. There has been created, therefore, not only the framework of an enormous timber monopoly, but also an equally sinister land concentration in extensive sections.

"Finally, to timber concentration and to land concentration is added, in our most important timber section, a closely connected railroad domination. The formidable possibilities of this combination in the Pacific-Northwest and elsewhere are of the gravest public importance.

"The possibilities of power involved in such a concentration of land ownership, irrespective of the timber, hardly require discussion.

"The danger of abuse of that power, in the absence of restrictive regulations, is obvious. This danger, moreover, is greatly multiplied because a few of the largest owners of land also occupy dominating positions in railroad transportation over great sections of the country."

The report says the greatest owner of timber lands in the country is the Southern Pacific Company, with its total of ten billion feet.

Taft Gets Cold Reception.

President Taft's visit to Columbus, on Friday of last week, evoked no enthusiasm. He was carried in an automobile from the Union Station for a parade. His escort consisted of Troop B and several auto loads of local celebrities. The progress through the business streets was like a march through a graveyard. There was a ripple of applause at the Rail-Light office and the Buckeye Republican Club. At the Corn Show there were about 2000 visitors, more interested in corn than in presidential beef. Even Captain Bush, "the hero of Death Valley," failed in his duty. The salute due the president is 21 guns, but the powder used by Battery C was so poor that only 11 guns were fired. Capitalism cheats even when supplying ammunition to its hired murderers. At Memorial Hall less than 500 people attended the reception in honor of Taft, though the Buckeye Republican Club had labored long and hard to pull off a big affair. About 150 people remained for the ball. The dance program was beautiful typographically, but the club was so hard up that it had to sandwich the numbers in between advertisements of undertakers, laundries, sewer pipe dealers and cafes. The event was a "cheap skate" affair. No wonder the president had an attack of throat trouble.

The old parties close their headquarters after each election, but the Socialists keep open house all the year, every day.

SOCIALISM AND WAR.

No, Brother Patriot, the Socialists do not believe in war. There is no danger that we will suffer a "foreign invasion." And the "wars" we have nowadays are either to secure markets abroad or to put down the striking workingmen at home.

All of the vast sums now spent for war—ships and standing armies—we will preserve for our own good. Even at the present time this nation is spending more money for war equipment than for education. And, "War is hell." So said General Sherman, and he ought to know.

Even now the Socialist party is the greatest peace agency in the world. We do not get the credit, but we do the work. We teach the working people of all countries not to FIGHT, but to UNITE.

If the masters of the bread want to scrap over their difficulties let them choose their own weapons and do our own fighting. As long as we must submit to be fleeced by rent, interest and profit, it matters not as to the name and nationality of the fleecers.

We are actually beating swords into plowshares NOW. We are the WORKERS, and we stand for construction, not destruction.

Frederick Guy Strickland.

RAILROADS AS MURDERERS.

Accidents are sometimes unavoidable, but from the number taking place in the industries of this country it would appear that they are something more than accidents.

When killing is done by the railroads it should be labeled right, and a remedy sought.

The interstate commission reports that during July, August and September 2948 people were killed and 19,380 injured on steam operated railways.

This shows a large increase in casualties over corresponding periods of previous years.

The butcheries of the railroads is getting beyond the endurance point.

By comparing statistics it will be seen that the increase in "accidents is in proportion to the increase in dividends.

In other words, it DOES NOT PAY to MAKE THE RAILROADS SAFE.

Big dividends demand a heavy loss of life and limb. To protect the workers and the travelers would cost something, and the owners of the roads do not propose to add any expense to the operation.

After all, life is the cheapest drug on the industrial market. It will be cheap until the people begin to realize that they have something to say. Then they will own, and life will be more precious than things owned.

WHY MILWAUKEE?

The Milwaukee Social Democratic Herald, last week, issued a special "Progress Edition," to celebrate the opening of the magnificent building which is now owned and occupied by the papers and its great printing plant. Victor Berger tells why Milwaukee has accomplished what it has, as follows:

"Because our methods were more logical and more consistent than in other places.

"Because we displayed more perseverance and more 'aimfulness' than the workingmen of other cities.

"Because the policies and the leadership of our party have not changed in almost twenty years.

"Because our movement never ran off on a tangent. We did not deviate in either direction. We did not yield to bourgeois reform organizations nor to anarchistic impossibilism."

The people of Columbus are being urged to contribute at least one dollar each toward the purchase of an open-air school site and its equipment for receiving the children who are being excluded from the public schools, because they are afflicted with tuberculosis. The number of these victims is steadily increasing under the cruel industrial conditions prevailing in the city and the squalid, unsanitary homes where thousands of wage-earners are obliged to live. It is a hopeless task trying to suppress the "white plague" while conditions are making tubercular patients faster than hospitals can care for them.

GAS COMPANY IS CONTRARY.

The Federal Gas and Fuel Company has given the city law department a jolt by appealing to the circuit court against the decision of the common pleas court, which held that the company should pay the city 5 per cent. on all gas sold at more than 15 cents per thousand feet. The Federal Company does not propose to divulge any information to a master commissioner, as directed and takes refuge behind the bulwark of all grasping corporations—the courts. In the meantime, the gas ordinances are before the council. There is nothing doing there, but the gas meters keep working whether you burn any gas or not. The extra pressure moves the indicator just the same. The Socialists are the only folks alive to the situation, and are carrying on a persistent campaign of education on this question.

HARPER GETS IT AGAIN.

What do you think those huskies did at the meeting of the Columbus Federation of Labor last Monday night? They turned a deaf ear to the siren tones of a plea for George Harper, who wants to be mayor of this city. A request came from the Brick Masons' Union, asking that Harper's candidacy for the Republican nomination be endorsed. With a dull thud the request was laid upon the table. George's political corpse will be under the table before 1912 dawns. The labor unionists of Columbus have at least become class conscious and do not seem disposed to aid any stool-pigeon of the Master Class, even if he masquerades as a workingman.

Aroused by the publication of a letter to Governor-elect Hoke Smith, outlining a plot to spread the deadly boll-weevil through the cotton fields of Georgia and other states, farmers and commercial bodies are preparing to act for the preservation of the crop.

In this letter and during his visit to the governor, a prominent business man of New Orleans exposed a plot of cotton speculators to flood Georgia and the Carolinas with the boll-weevil, and then buy October cotton, hoping to reap a fortune by the scarcity of the staple and the rise in the price, coupled with their advance knowledge of conditions.

The sensational disclosure is the talk of the South, and is considered so seriously that every possible precaution will be taken to prevent the success of the plotters. What will not men do for profit under this devilish capitalistic system.

According to statements in the local daily papers, only three per cent. of the animals slaughtered in Columbus are properly inspected during the butchering process.

Two government inspectors are employed daily at one plant, inspecting meats intended for interstate commerce. The city of Columbus, which is supposed to be enforcing meat inspection, has not that many men employed to watch the 60 slaughter houses in the city.

One man is detailed by the city to this work. Once in a while he has an assistant. He is supposed to examine all animals slaughtered for Columbus markets, health officials say, while there are three plants in the city engaged in butchering 10 hours a day and 57 others also are active. The only solution of the trouble would be a city slaughter house, but private interests protest against that, as usual.

A prominent business man of Columbus said recently: "I will not worry even of the Socialists should carry this city. I could live on a pirate ship." No doubt he could. The business men of Columbus, and every other city, are living on one of the worst pirate ships that ever sailed the Sea of Time. Admiral J. Pierpont Morgan is in command, with Admirals Rockefeller and Carnegie, retired, as advisors. The black flag of the trusts floats from a big fleet of pirate ships, while the ordinary business men are captives, who will soon have to walk the plank into the sea, by order of conscienceless freebooters, who control trade.

The annual tax title sale has been going on at the court house this week, and a lot of benevolent shylocks have been bidding in the titles to property upon which the taxes have not been paid. The bids range from a one-hundredth part of the property up to the whole thing. The benevolent shylocks then collect 25 per cent. interest from the delinquents. By the way, some leading lights in the political and business world have been careless about their taxes.

The price of flour dropped 80 cents per barrel in Columbus last Wednesday, and the retail dealers find themselves overstocked with flour at the higher price. The millers played a neat trick on the grocers and bakers. The middlemen sure are having a hard time of it. Following the slump in flour comes the announcement that ice will be 5 cents higher on the hundred pounds the coming summer. What was saved during the recent mild weather will be lost when the hot spell comes.

When Railway Men Will Be Considered.

BY AGNES H. DOWNING.

In the year 1903 3,470 railroad employes were killed in the United States. That would be one to every 426 of those employed; 53,367 were injured, which is one in every seventeen employed. And this year was a fair average, except that the killing and maiming is on the increase.

As to the relief offered there is practically none. On some roads there is a loose sort of accident insurance, for which the employe pays. The fund is in the hands of the company, and in case of injury the company pays out as it sees fit. But the injured person who has paid for his insurance must release the employing company from all legal responsibility for his injury, before he can partake of its benefits.

The only other remedy, of course, is to bring suit against the company for damages. If it can be proven that the injured person was himself negligent, or that the injury took place through the fault of a fellow workman, in most states, he can recover no damages at all. If he sues he is up against a long drawn-out suit, a corporation-made judge, and the cunning counsel which themoney of a corporation is always able to buy.

The doctrines of "contributory negligence" and "fellow servant" were tenets of the old English common law, and grew up at a time when there was no dangerous machinery used in the industrial world. And only a few of the states have so far been fair enough to pass laws suited to the changed condition.

When they have employers' liability acts the companies are legally responsible for maiming men. But here again the law's delays rest most heavily. The case will be carried from court to court and from term to term until the crippled supplicant is literally worn out and often drops the case through sheer fatigue. It is a poor man, disabled, with few friends and less money, against the railroad kings, with judges and lawyers at their command, who have a regular business in defeating the just claims of workmen.

So in general in the United States, of all the hosts injured in the railroad service, a few may receive inadequate assistance from the companies, but the great army of cripples must shift for themselves.

Contrast this with Germany, where the Socialist influence is felt. Charles Edward Russell, in his admirable work, "Why I am a Socialist," says:

> In Germany, for instance, the maimed railroad employe is invariably held to be the patient and care of the public; he has been injured in the service of the community, and the state, which operates the railroads for the community's profit, proceeds at once to the relief of the fallen public servant. And for many reasons that seems to be wise policy.

All the processes in this relief are wonderfully direct, simple and speedy. No court proceedings are ever necessary, no summons and complaint, no lawyers, no trials, no juries, no witnesses. Contributory negligence has nothing to do with the matter; neither have fellow servant clauses. The accident is certified by the local railroad authorities and the physician of the railroad department. Then, from a fund provided by the state for the purpose, and accessible without courts and without delays, the government's great insurance department begins to pay an indemnity that is continued so long as the injury lasts, no matter how long that may be, and calculated on the fixed basis of a percentage of the man's wages.

The benefit of the loss of right arm is from 66 2-3 to 80 per cent of his regular wages; loss of left arm, 60 to 70 per cent of his wages; loss of both arms, 100 per cent. For the loss of a leg he is compensated similarly. For the loss of a hand he will get from 50 to 60 per cent of his wages, or for both hands he will get 100 per cent. There are compensations smaller, of course, for the loss of a finger or thumb, or for any other injury done him.

When the great organized power of labor is felt by sending Socialist members to the legislatures and to Congress, as they have Socialist members in the legislative bodies of Germany, railroad workmen in the United States will have similar protection.

INCENTIVE UNDER SOCIALISM.

(By Harold Metcalf.)

One of the stock arguments against Socialism is that, under the arrangement of things it would bring about the efficient man would not be rewarded for his efficiency, and that it would drive incentive from the world. One critic has even gone so far as to describe the whole theory of Socialism, or industrial democracy, as the mere whining of the inefficient man because he does not receive as much of the world's wealth as his natural superior; and he goes on to say that political democracy is both wrong and absurd because it gives the ignorant man as much power in making of laws and governments as his intellectual superior. I do not, of course, concede that under Socialism the efficient and superior man would not receive his proper reward, nor that there would be no incentive, as they express it, under Socialism for men to try to do their best. But that point I do not propose to argue now. What I desire to contend at the present time is, that under capitalism as at present conducted, the efficient man receives no reward at all for his efficiency, and that capitalism furnishes no true incentive whatever to the world. Under capitalistic industry today the efficient and the inefficient man receive exactly the same pay in all the trades and in all the various kinds of work. There is not the slightest endeavor, or even pretense, to make any distinction between the two whatever.

To illustrate my point, I will take the cotton mills of New Bedford, and they are typical of industry as conducted under capitalism everywhere.

We will take, first, the slasher tenders. There are, of course, good slasher tenders and poor slasher tenders. And yet all, in any given mill, receive exactly the same pay, approximately $13 per week. Or, take the spinners. There are, of course, good spinners and poor ones. Yet all of these receive, in any given mill, exactly the same wage.

Or, take the loom fixers. There are, of course, good, efficient loom fixers, and very poor ones. Yet all of these, good and poor alike, receive, in any given mill, exactly the same wage.

The argument might be put up that this fact does not apply to weavers, or to any of the other kinds of work where the laborer is paid per amount of work turned out. Upon second thought it will be plainly seen that the same condition does prevail in all piecework the same as in the work where the laborer is paid so much per day or per week. Under the piecework system the only test of efficiency is speed. The worker is not paid according to how well he does his work, but according to how much he turns out. He may be the best weaver in the world, his work may be perfect, and yet he will receive the same pay as the poorest weaver on the job.

What right has any one to expect a man to do good work when he receives nothing for making that extra effort? Can you blame him for not doing any better work than that required by the minimum standard?

I imagine a good many people might try to answer the contention I make by saying that the efficient man can rise up to a higher position, and in this way secure pay that adequately represents his ability. This would only be begging the question, but I will pay some attention to this argument. In the first place, every man in the world seems to be born and fitted by his mental and physical characteristics to a certain kind of work, and he is congenitally incapable of fulfilling a position of superintendence. A man may be the best weaver, the best slasher tender, the best loom fixer or the best spinner in the mill, and yet he would never be selected for one of the "boss" jobs. The reason is that the qualifications are entirely different. He is not, then, selected for a position of superintendence because he does his work well in any line of work. What hope, therefore, has he of getting one of these better paid positions by doing his work well?

In the second place, it is mathematically impossible for every man to rise up to one of these better paid positions. To illustrate, let me take the Whitman mills of New Bedford. This corporation employs something like 2000 people. But the better positions, general superintendent, department managers, overseers, second hands, all told, can not be more than twenty or thirty men. It is absurd to say to each one of these 2000 people that he may secure one of these positions.

It is a false ambition besides. And now imagine the position of each one of these 2000 people. He knows that no matter how well he may do his work, how far above the average he may spin, or slash, or weave, his pay will be the same as the poorest man in the mill. What incentive is there for him to spin well, to slash well, to weave well, or to do anything well? How can efficient men, who love to do things well, and who would like to make their work an art, be developed so long as this system prevails? Can we wonder that they do their work just well enough to hold their jobs, but no better, and why it is that slave drivers are necessary to see that they do even this?

Talk about lack of incentive under Socialism! How could it be more barren of true and ennobling incentive as industry under capitalism now is? The whole condition recalls to my mind the famous sentence of Ruskin, "Life without work is robbery work without art is brutality."

The Socialism of High Finance.

The famous "Communist Manifesto" was written by Marx and Engels nearly sixty-three years ago. It was the first systematic promulgation of the general theories, principles and policies of Modern Socialism. It was, at one and the same time, a scientific treatise, a masterpiece of polemics, a general plan of campaign, and the battle cry of the awakening young giant—the modern proletariat. Its terse brevity, its compact force, its depth and its breadth, its mordant satire and its defiant eloquence, give it a unique place in the grand literature of the world. In the literature of Socialism it is the supreme classic.

Of late years, however, this incomparable Socialist masterpiece seems to have lost something of its former great popularity. Being a classic, it has begun to suffer the fate of all classics. It is admired but not read, at any rate, not as much as it used to be read and as it deserves to be read. Many of the misunderstandings that have troubled the Socialist movement of this country might never have arisen, or having arisen would easily have been overcome, if the Manifesto had been widely read and understood. Certainly most of the famous "57 varieties" would never have arisen to plague us, for every one of these varieties has been described, analyzed and reduced ad absurdum in the "Communist Manifesto."

It is of these varieties that one is involuntarily reminded when he reads in the papers that Mr. George W. Perkins has retired from active partnership in the great Banking house of J. P. Morgan and Company, in order to devote his supposed great abilities to the promotion of "profit sharing." The papers, as was to be expected, are making a great-to-do about this "gr-reat plan of reform." First, because it is proposed by Mr. George W. Perkins, a partner of J. P. Morgan; and everything proposed by George W. Perkins, a partner of J. P. Morgan, must, in the very nature of things, be a "gr-reat plan." And, secondly, because the editors of these papers, "great metropolitan dailies," are very busy men, who can not be expected to find time for doing a little reading in political economy. It is perfectly true that the "profit sharing" scheme was discussed in considerable detail by John Stuart Mill in his "Political Economy," which, by the way, was published in the same year as the "Communist Manifesto," and Mr. George W. Perkins' "gr-reat plan of reform" is nothing more than a stale, warmed-up joke. But it really would be unfair to expect editors of the "great metropolitan dailies" to know this, or knowing this to tell their readers about it.

Now "profit sharing" is not a bad scheme at all, in its way. Certainly not for the capitalists. When workingmen in a factory are told that at the end of the year they will get a share of the profits beyond a certain percentage, these workingmen are pretty sure to do everything they can do to raise the total profit above that percentage. And at the end of the year the workingmen will be given their share of the extra profit, the remainder—usually the great bulk of it—going to the capitalists, who thus obtain a clear net gain without any exertion or risk on their part.

To illustrate: Let us suppose that the average net profit of a given factory has been, for a number of years, 6 per cent. per annum. The factory has, of course, been run on the same principles as all other capitalist factories. The buildings, the machinery, the tools, the raw materials, the finished products and the resulting profits all belong to the capitalist. The workers have not the slightest interest in effecting any savings or economies or improvements of any sort. The wages they obtain for their labor are the only thing they are interested in. In fact, they would rather get their wages without working, or working as little as possible, and foremen and overseers must be hired to see to it that every workman does the amount of work expected of him.

But now our capitalist turns "social reformer." Perhaps he is also a member of the Civic Federation. At the bountiful banquets of that estimable body he has learned, possibly from the mouth of Mr. Samuel Gompers himself, that "the interests of capital and labor are identical." That has not hitherto been the case in his own factory. Our capitalist knows this from his own experience. He has had strikes and threats of strikes. His workmen do not work as he thinks they should work. They do not work hard enough and fast enough. A certain percentage of the raw material always goes to waste. Tools and costly machinery are being roughly handled. Clearly there has been no "identity of interests between capital and labor" in his own particular establishment. And scrupulously honest man of business that he is, our capitalist adopts a pious resolution to mend his ways and to do what lies in him to establish the identity of interests.

He assembles his workmen and proposes "profit sharing." They will not have to work longer or harder than they have been used to. "Just a little more care and willingness" will do the trick. The factory has been bringing him, year in year out, 6 per cent. on the invested capital. Every increase above this profit he is willing in future to share with the workmen—10 per cent. for them, 90 per cent. for himself. "The rest depends upon themselves."

The workmen accept the proposition. A little extra money for the holidays would be very welcome, indeed. They are most diligent and careful throughout the year. And the profits pile up. From 6 per cent. on the invested capital they rise to 8 per cent., from $60,000 to $80,000. Of the $20,000 extra profits, the capitalist thereupon takes 10 per cent., or $2000, and distributes it among his 200 workmen, giving each man a nice Christmas gift of $10, and pockets the remaining $18,000 himself.

Nor would it make any difference in principle if the proportion were reversed, and the capitalist took $2000 for himself while he distributed $18,000 among the workmen. The point is that whatever portion of the extra profits went to the capitalist it would be pure velvet.

And now can any one doubt "the identity of interests between capital and labor?" Surely, everybody will answer "yes" to Mr. George W. Perkins' honest query:

"Is these results is there not a form of Socialism of the highest and of the most ideal sort—Socialism which makes real partners of employers and employes, yet reserves the right of private property, retaining the capitalist incentive to enterprise, but giving the worker a new inspiration for effort, humanising a vast organization, promoting good will and industrial peace?"

This "form of Socialism of the highest and of the most ideal sort" has been described in the wicked "Communist Manifesto" as follows:

CONSERVATIVE OR BOURGEOIS SOCIALISM.

"A part of the bourgeoisie is desirous of redressing social grievances, in order to secure the continued existence of bourgeois society.

"To this section belong economists, philanthropists, humanitarians, improvers of the condition of the working class, organisers of charity, members of societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals, temperance fanatics, hole and corner reformers of every imaginable kind. * * *

"The socialistic bourgeois want all the advantages of modern social conditions without the struggles and dangers necessarily resulting therefrom. They desire the existing state of society minus its revolutionary and disintegrating elements. They wish for a bourgeoisie without a proletariat. The bourgeoisie naturally conceives the world in which it is supreme to be the best; and bourgeois Socialism develops this comfortable conception into various more or less complete systems. In requiring the proletariat to carry out such a system, and thereby to march straightway into the social New Jerusalem, it but requires, in reality, that the proletariat should remain within the bounds of existing society, but should cast away all its hateful ideas concerning the bourgeoisie."

The "Manifesto" goes on to describe other forms of this "Conservative or Bourgeois Socialism"—the highest and most ideal sort of Socialism, as Mr. George W. Perkins would say—and concludes with the words that this sort of Socialism "is summed up in the phrase: The bourgeois is a bourgeois—for the benefit of the working class," to which Mr. Perkins will surely say, Amen!

SOCIALISTS IN ACTION.

News From The World Wide Movement Of The Workers.

NEWS FROM THE NATIONAL SOCIALIST HEADQUARTERS

The National Executive Committee met in session at National Headquarters at 11 a. m., Saturday, February 4, adjourned for the day at 12:30 p. m., and again met in session at 12:45 Monday, the 6th, and adjourned at 4:15. Printed copies of the minutes have been sent through the usual channels of party information.

The sub-committee of the National Committee, known as the Investigation Committee, met in session at 2 p. m., Saturday, February 4, and held six sessions: Saturday afternoon and evening, Sunday morning, afternoon and evening, and Monday morning, continuing to 12:30 noon. An adjourned meeting of the sub-committee will be held February 25.

Word of the death of Comrade Fred W. Long, of Philadelphia, on February 4, was received the same day. The following action was taken by the National Executive Committee:

"That the National Secretary be instructed to telegraph Comrade Harry Parker, of Philadelphia, asking him to attend the funeral of Comrade Fred Long as the representative of the National Executive Committee, and on its behalf and at its expense to lay an appropriate wreath upon the grave."

FRED LONG RESOLUTION.

Adopted by Local Philadelphia, Socialist party, February 5, 1911:

"Whereas, Death has taken from among us what was mortal of our veteran comrade, Fred W. Long; and,

"Whereas, Fred W. Long was one of the pioneers of the labor and Socialist movements in America, having for more than a quarter of a century given his magnificent mind, inspired pen and eloquent tongue to our cause with unfailing zeal and loyalty, for which he has undergone long years of physical suffering and mental anguish; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the Socialist Party of Philadelphia, express the deep sense of loss we feel in the departure of our dear comrade, and the equally deep sense of appreciation for the exceptional service he rendered at the forefront of the struggle at a time when such ability and devotion as his counted for more than words can tell. It is with bowed heads and overflowing hearts that we offer our tribute to his memory.

"(Signed) J. T. CONNOR,
"Secretary."

Republican Alderman Bogk, of Milwaukee, has published a statement trying to discredit the Socialist administration upon the ground of increased cost in salaries paid to city employes. Comrade C. P. Dietz, city comptroller, shows that the city was greatly benefitted by this fact; that during these months the city was doing thousands of dollars worth of public work on its own account, and states:

"If the work had been let to private contractors there would have been no charge on the city's books for labor under those contracts, but the entire amounts, including material and the contractor's profit, would be charged under one contract item. Where, however, the city does the work, the entire amount is divided on the books, as so much for labor, so much for material, and the profit is eliminated, to the advantage of the city. Necessarily, therefore, when the city did its own work during these months the item of wages on the city's books were increased accordingly. The only question involved on this point is 'What benefits accrued to the city?' The answer is, 'The contractor's profits.'"

Comrade H. C. Tuck, editor of the "World," published at Oakland, Cal., has been arrested on account of exposing in its columns the system of detention employed by the police department. The organization committee of Branch Oakland has authorized the opening of a defense fund. All contributions should be sent to William Serb, 328 Twelfth street, Oakland, Cal.

By a recent referendum, in Oklahoma, the following were elected members of the National Committee: Oscar Ameringer, Indiana Building, Oklahoma City; Carrie C. Block, Lookeba; George R. Owen, Oklahoma City, and John F. Wills, Granite.

By a recent referendum in Texas, Comrade E. B. Meitzen, of Hallettsville, was re-elected State Secretary, and Comrades P. G. Zimmermen, of Hamlin, and W. S. Noble, of Ranger, were elected members of the National Committee.

On January 6 the municipal election in Star City, W. Va., resulted in electing Comrade William Shay as mayor and Comrades Beznor, Kennedey, McShaffer and Stansbury to the city council.

J. MAHLON BARNES,
National Secretary.

OHIO SOCIALIST NEWS.

ITEMS FROM THE BULLETIN ISSUED BY SEC. G. A. STORCK.

Pleasant City has applied for a charter, with eight singers. Comrade I. A. Bajeh is the secretary and Comrade W. H. Crawford the organizer.

Comrade James O'Neal has been filling a number of dates in Ohio, and while passing through Columbus stopped off to make a short call before going back to his home in Terre Haute, Ind.

Since the publication in The Appeal to Reason that the State Executive Committee has "barred" The Appeal to Reason Lecture Bureau from sending its speakers into Ohio, a number of resolutions have come in condemning the S. E. S. for their actions. In behalf of the State Executive Committee I wish to state that this information given out by The Appeal to Reason is wrong and conveys the wrong impression to the comrades in the state. The fact of the matter is that The Appeal to Reason was simply asked to route its speakers through the State Executive Committee, as all other speakers are asked to do. The State Executive Committee is simply trying to enforce the law that was adopted by referendum vote of the membership, and which carried almost unanimously.

Every turn of the hour seems to add to the work in the state office, and this will now continue as we have long passed the time for the usual slump after the election.

Even the postoffice officials are taking notice of the amount of mail that is passing through their hands, and have made remarks concerning it.

G. A. STORCK,
State Secretary.

WHAT A BLIND MAN DOES.

Comrade Claude L. Ferguson, the blind orator, walked briskly into State Headquarters Wednesday and handed Secretary Storck an application for a local at Delaware with fourteen names attached. Comrade Ferguson organized Delaware Monday evening. He is making a tour through unorganized territory and is doing good work. Comrade Ferguson is a speaker of unusual ability and one of the most cheerful fellows in the world. His address is 514 G street, Findlay, Ohio.

INTERCOLLEGIATE SOCIALIST SOCIETY.

Readers of this paper are earnestly requested to send the names and addresses of college men and women of their acquaintance who are interested, or likely to become interested, in Socialism to Harry W. Laidler, Organizer of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society, Room 903, 105 West Fortieth street, New York City.

The society was organized in 1905, for the purpose of promoting an intelligent interest in Socialism among college men and women by the formation of study chapters in the colleges and among alumni and by the general distribution of literature. Already study chapters have been formed in more than a score of American universities, including Harvard, Yale, Clark and Brown, in New England; Cornell, Columbia, Barnard, C. C. N. Y., N. Y. University, the N. Y. Dental Colleges, Rochester University, the University of Pennsylvania and the Meadville Theological School, in the Middle Atlantic States; Marietta College, Kansas State Agricultural College, Wisconsin University, the University of Michigan and Morris Pratt Institute, in the Middle West; the University of Washington and Stanford University, on the Pacific Coast. The president of the society is J. G. Phelps Stokes, the first vice president Upton Sinclair; treasurer, Morris Hillquit, and secretary, Algernon Lee. The organizer will be pleased to furnish any information concerning the society, and literature will gladly be sent on request.

The Question Box.

Why should a man who votes the Socialist ticket and reads Socialist papers and books join the organization?

J. F.
Springfield, O.

Whenever two or more are threatened by a common enemy, or seek a common end, they can better protect themselves and further their common interest by working together. And they can do this more effectively as an organization than without it. A disorganized mass of men trying to accomplish something is nothing more or less than a mob. And, like a mob, they move without directing intelligence and can not act as a unit in overcoming difficulties.

Organization amounts to an agreement of the membership to co-operate in the accomplishment of the end desired. The unites of an organization understand each other and can act so as to help each other and thus more effectively help themselves.

Many organizations have defeated their purpose and have aroused prejudice against organization in general by permitting themselves to be dominated by a dictator, a faction or a clique. This objection to organization does not apply to the Socialist party, because it is democratically controlled; that is, each member has an equal voice in deciding matters of importance.

Throughout the centuries the working class has outnumbered its oppressors; but the ruling class has been organized and has been careful to keep the workers disorganized. During these centuries of oppression and exploitation the workers have had a common cause, but have been kept in ignorance or unconsciousness of their class interests by petty divisions, that mean nothing to them but everything to the masters, who would keep them disorganized and helpless.

It is not sufficient to generate sentiment in favor of Socialism. To make such sentiment a force it must itself take a co-operative form in an organized movement to educate the membership, push the propaganda and move as a unit according to well-considered tactics toward the thing desired. The Socialist party is the co-operative militant organization of Socialism.

It is a democratically controlled organization of Socialists to educate its members, propagate Socialism and capture the political power necessary to the establishing of an industrial working-class republic. Every Socialist should be a member of the party, without which he would have no ticket to vote and with which he becomes an equipped soldier in a thoroughly drilled army.

Reading Socialist papers is good, and the study of economics most valuable, but to become an integral factor in the overthrow of Capitalist misrule you should join the party and thus feel the inspiration of comradeship and strengthen the arm that is to hold aloft the torch that is to free society from the curse of wage-slavery.

PHILLIPS A SOCIALIST.

Anna Strunsky Walling, in the New York Call, tells of an interview she had with David Graham Phillips, the murdered novelist, the week Tolstoy died. In her article Mrs. Walling quotes Phillips as saying:

"A hundred years from now," he said, "there will not be a city in the world that will not boast a monument to Marx."

She continues: "These were his words, and I think them worth recording, because there are not many authors in America whose books are widespread, whose fame and success are established, who have twice read through, as he did, Marx's 'Capital,' who have made a thorough study of him. 'Don't read it,' he told me that he warned his sister, 'if you do not mean to follow every page, every sentence, because the spirit of the book will escape you and you will lose the key to the whole.'

"It is said in an issue of The Call, the day he was shot, that he had never avowed himself a Socialist. I knew him only as a Socialist. In the same way, Dostoyevsky in Russia never avowed himself a Socialist, yet he died under torture in Siberia as Phillips did at the hands of a vicious fool for the truth he espoused in his writings.

"Did it ever occur to Phillips that he was taking his life in his hands by pilloring the plutocratic American woman? I only know that in our last conversation, after giving me a synopsis of his unfinished book on the white slave trade, I remarked that it will hit them even harder than 'Her Husband's Story,' and asked, 'What do you think they will do to you for it?'

"He shrugged his shoulders, and said, quietly, 'Kill me, perhaps.' Was he jesting? At the time I did not think he was."

It will be recalled that the capitalistic press, in glaring headlines, stated that Phillips had been shot by a Socialist. It seems that the victim was what the papers falsely said his slayer was.

THE FIGHT BEGINS.

Comrades and Friends of the World: When the newspapers and others ask you if the Warren protest meetings are over tell them the story of that naval battle of the War of 1776, when the English commander asked Paul Jones if he was ready to surrender, and Paul Jones replied: "No; we have just begun to fight." Comrades, let our watchword be: NO; WE HAVE JUST BEGUN TO FIGHT.

INSIDE FACTS FROM OHIO'S PEN.

How the State Has Made Millionaires by the Contract System.

The Ohio pen was built October, 1815, at Mound and Scioto streets, and removed to its present site in 1843. The same year Peter Hayden was let in "on the ground floor," with a contract with the State of Ohio, for the employment of prison labor in his shops within the walls. Peter Hayden died a multi-millionaire. His sons continued in the business of employing convict labor. They, too, became multi-millionaires, and as the "Hayden Saddlery Company turn out many hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of goods each year—all made by convict labor, for which the State of Ohio receives an average price of 75 cents per diem for each laborer. In 1886 a commodious factory, three stories in height, was erected at the cost of the taxpayers of this state, in order that Peter Hayden might employ more men, and the state contracted to furnish enough convicts to supply all the laborers Mr. Hayden might require, at 75 cents per day for each man, at an average. Now, as to the value of the goods manufactured by the "Hayden Saddlery Company" each year, it will be ascertained that that value approximates $1,000,000, if not more. This company has a branch factory located on the "outside of the prison." Convict-made goods are shipped from the prison factories to the factory and warehouse outside the walls, from whence it is reshipped to customers.

By this reshipping process the necessity (legal) of branding "convict-made goods" as "such" is obviated. Besides, it is calculated to render an "investigation" as to the true value of the "yearly output" of convict labor in the penitentiary a complicated problem. The class of merchandise, as well as the quantity thereof, will convince even the most casual investigator who views the complicated machinery used in "its" manufacture that the use of skilled labor is the first and imperative requirement. No unskilled "foreigner," or other "day laborer" could be trusted to operate the machinery involved in the manufacture of that class of merchandise. It is a self-evident fact that the employers of prison labor do not care to employ unskilled laborers, and that very few Italians, Hungarians or other foreigners are actually in their employ at any time, or were so employed within the last twenty-five years. What has been stated with regard to the "Hayden contract" will apply to the "Columbus Bolt," "E. B. Lanman" and "other prison contracts," equally as well. In 1885 the contract labor system, as applied to convict labor in this state, reached its highest efficiency and has continued for the twenty-five years succeeding that date. Many contractors have become millionaires as a result of employing convict labor.

From December, 1885, until December, 1910, the prison records prove that over 32,200 convicts were received at the Ohio penitentiary. During that period—twenty-five years—an intermediate penitentiary (where convict labor was leased to outside contractors) also was erected and "filled" with convicts.

It will also be seen that during those years succeeding legislatures of the state added upward of thirty new statutes to the criminal code, all providing for a term of imprisonment in state's prison for each and every "violation."

Now, from the time—October, 1815—when the first prisoner was received, at the old prison until December 31, 1885—a period of seventy years—less than 18,000 prisoners were received.

The entire population of the State of Ohio in 1815 was less than 450,000 souls. In 1885 it had reached 2,500,000 souls, and the population increased in the last twenty-five years something less than one and a half millions. And in that short time, twenty-five years, over 32,200 men and women were enslaved, and their labor sold to contractors at an average of 75 cents per day per capita.

This increase in "crime"— or in "convictions," whichever you like—is out of all just proportion to the growth of the population of the State of Ohio for the last quarter century, and would seem to indicate a deliberate exploitation of "poor" and unfortunate men by their fellow-men, and for purely personal and economic reasons.

It is a fact, and one that is gradually becoming realized by all classes and throughout the country, that it is only the "poor man" that is sent to prison.

Rich malefactors escape imprisonment almost invariably. The few exceptions who are sent to prison do not work on prison contracts. They do not eat of the coarse, unwholesome food served to the friendless, penniless convict.

And in a few months, or a year at most, they are liberated, to enjoy their stolen thousands, through the exercise of gubernatorial or managerial clemency. But that class of convict is always able and willing to "pay its way" and put up the ransom price demanded by those in power at that time. Prison statistics prove that courts are more lenient in the way of sentences when the culprit is an alien and unskilled day laborer than in the case of an American or German mechanic, and where the crime charged is the same. There is a threefold reason for the obvious leniency of the courts to alien laborers:

First, the Italian or Hungarian laborer is seldom to be found who can not command "ready money."

Second, the foreign vote is delivered as a "unit."

Third, the prison contractor requires "skilled labor" with which to operate his machinery and foundries.

The crimes committed by the latter class of convicts are invariably crimes of violence, and very few of dishonesty—"rape," "murder," "manslaughter" and shooting, cutting and stabbing and assault to wound—never to kill. For, if a foreigner kills, it is but manslaughter, and the penalty in his case is from one year to two years; if he fails to kill his victim outright, it is merely an "attempt to wound," and one year is long enough.

THE PRISON SHYLOCK AND HIS POUND OF FLESH.

The Werz Bill, abolishing prison contract labor, became a law five years back. Today the Columbus newspapers bemoan the fact that the majority of the penitentiary prisoners are now idle because of the enforcement of the Werz Bill. One of these cartoons refers to the prison idle house as an "Inferno." Yes, we realize that, when FREE LABOR is given the KEY TO THE STREET. The shacks styled homes are never cartooned as Infernos. And they forget to inform the public that while the convicts are not working nevertheless they are eating. This is not the case with many of the great army of honest, unemployed citizens. But, of course, this is a horse of another color. Who is to blame for this chaotic state? Why, the past and present prison wardens and the board of prison managers. They knew this law had been enacted. So did the school book and school furniture trust, and all other source of political iniquity.

When the Mansfield Reformatory board of managers were notified of the passage of the law, they at once made preparation to take care of the prisoners. They equipped their institution with machinery, and the prisoners today manufacture articles for the state's use. And that is why we hear of no Infernos existing in Mansfield.

Talking of Infernos, we never heard of any of these newspapers publishing the facts as to why prisoners are sometimes kept in our county jails, in absolute idleness, from three months to a year before they are brought to trial. But these are days when men talk of the glorious majesty of the lion and the tearful expressions found in the eys of man-eating tigers.

Of course, there is some hope for these poor afflicted and soon-to-be-evicted prison bolt contractors, and this hope lies in the employment child labor.

In 1905 the United States Commissioner of Labor issued a report on convict labor; pages 93-173 are made up of letters sent in by various firms, some of them located in the State of Ohio, who have been financially ruined by competition with convict labor.

Prison walls make their own silence. The only way that the actual facts can be given to the public must be acquired by secret methods. Men have been maimed and killed, men have died of persecution, disease and torture, behind prison walls. The youthful prisoners who come to this institution without friends on the outside are given a task to perform, which, in many instances, is beyond their strength and calling, and a failure to comply with the same meets with the edict, "Go to the cellar."

The parole law, which was made for the prisoners' reformation, has simply been held as a club over the paroled prisoner's head. At times, when the population of the penitentiary was low, the law relating to infractions of paroles was made more stringent on the prisoners was once again used to enlarge the fortunes of the prison contractor. Men who were turned over to the contractors as infirm prisoners were never known to be returned in the able-bodied class. Considering that infirm prisoners were secured at a much cheaper rate, the benefit to the contractor can be readily seen.

We have two living disgraces to a Christian community in the city of Columbus—one is our city prison, a dungeon whose very atmosphere carries disease and vermin to all who come in contact with its inmates. Little better can be said of the Ohio penitentiary. It may cost more to guard prisoners in the open air. Penologists may say that it is detrimental to have prisoners exposed to public gaze; but in the making of roads the prisoners would be engaged in a work that is necessary to the welfare of the nation, and, above all, living in a healthy atmosphere.

We believe that circumstances and environments are the only sources through which the criminal can reach the path of honest citizenship.

Prison contract labor has got to go from the State of Ohio, and the responsibility for whatever might occur within the penitentiary walls rests upon the shoulders of the warden, the board of prison managers and the prison contractors, who want "the pound of flesh," but who would spurn to keep the human wreck of bones used in their brutal service.

Jim Henderson.

The Columbus city council is investigating the tenement houses of the city, preparatory to considering the proposed housing code, which is a commendable measure. The thought occurs to the writer that if the dwellers in the dismal rookeries that disgrace this town received the full product of their toil they could own their own homes, and good ones, too.

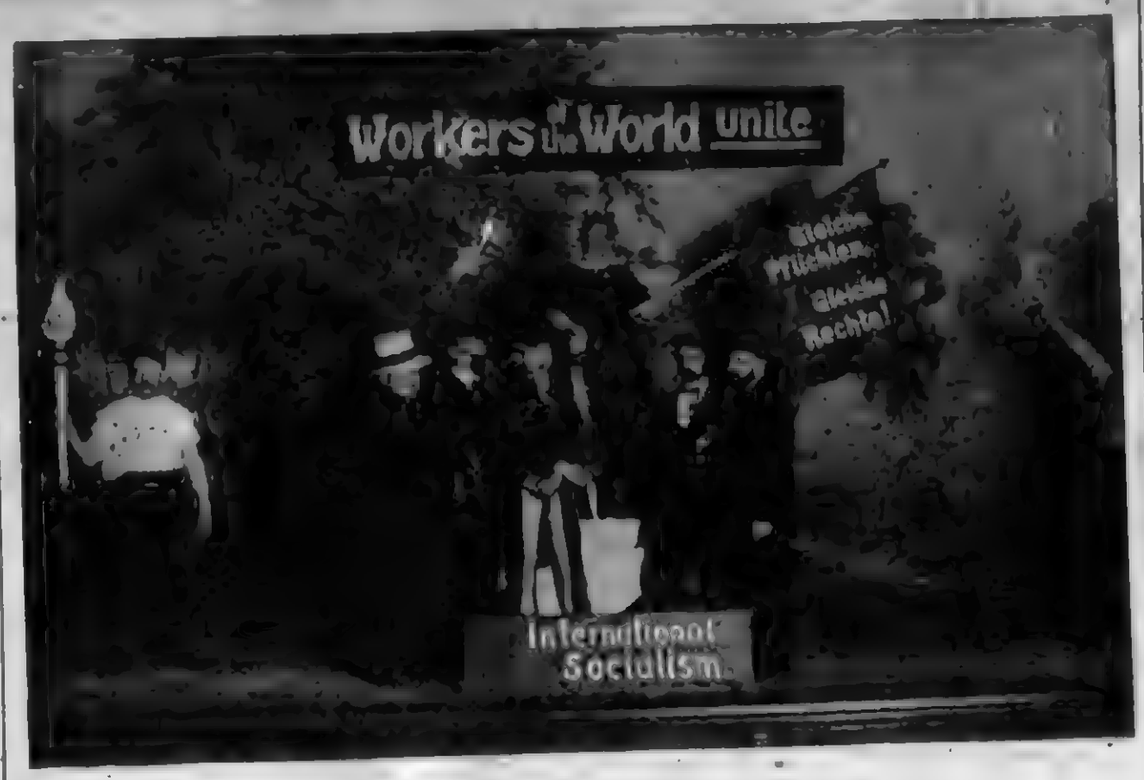

Tableau Presented at Socialist Glee Club Ball Last Saturday Evening.

OUR BOOSTERS.

The Socialist desires that all of the old sub cards issued when The Socialist was started be turned in at once. The new cards issued for the sub contest take their place.

Chillicothe shows up with a nice club of subs this week.

The branches and locals in Franklin county are taking hold of the subscription contest all right. Agents and comrades should make returns and have cards sent in promptly. With our growing list new subscribers may not get their papers the first week, but there will be as little delay as possible

Comrade W. S. Allen, of Palmer, Mass., sends a subscription and a kind letter of appreciation.

Comrade J. H. Sims, the "old war horse" of Bethel, sends for a bundle of The Socialist.

Mrs. J. Schmidt, of Norwood, Ohio, sends a yearly, and promises more.

W. J. Haus, secretary of Local Lancaster writes for The Socialist's clubbing rates, and promises news from that place.

Columbus now is accorded the title of "The storm center of Socialism" all over the country.

Branches and comrades can obtain sample copies of The Socialist at this office any time, to use in securing subs.

Comrade Theodore Moore, of Delaware, was a visitor at The Socialist office Tuesday. Local Delaware will boost The Socialist.

The Socialist has secured the services of Comrade Frederick G. Strickland for dates in Ohio, as soon as the Chicago Daily Socialist lecture course is completed. Locals can secure Comrade Strickland under a very liberal offer. All inquiries should be addressed to The Socialist, 26 North High street, Columbus, Ohio. It is not necessary to praise Comrade Strickland for Ohio. Socialists know his matchless ability. The terms will enable any local to realize a handsome sum.

ELEVENTH WARD BRANCH PROGRAM.

The Eleventh Ward Branch Socialist will give a musical and literary entertainment, followed by an instructive talk on "The Relation of Socialism to Christianity," next Thursday evening. Following is the program:

Music by the orchestra, overture, "Salutation" (by Koehly); Address of Welcome, by Comrade Dr. Kinnell; Recitation, by Miss Marion Woody; Vocal Solo, by Miss Vina Heilar; Recitation, by Miss Edith Bues; Flute Solo, by Chas. Wagner, accompanied by Mrs. Lottie Wagner; Reading, by Mrs. J. L. Bachman; Address, by Comrade Mrs. Sylvia Vermillion; Selection by Orchestra, "Serenade Summer Night" (by Sutton); Address, by Comrade J. L. Bachman. Music and refreshments.

A general good social time, after which the orchestra will render a selection, "W. M. B. March" (by R. B. Hall).

TWELFTH WARD BRANCH.

The Twelfth Ward Branch had an entertainment Thursday evening of this week, at 174 East Fifth avenue, consisting of dancing, cards and refreshments. There was a good attendance.

NOBLE WORKER DIES.

Prof. W. D. Wattles, one of the ablest speakers and writers of the Socialist party, died at Ruskin, Tenn., Tuesday, February 7, aged 50 years. The funeral services were held at Elwood, Ind., on Friday of last week, Fred G. Strickland delivering an appropriate address. Business was suspended at Elwood, and the city did honor to a man who had given his life to the cause of humanity. Comrade Wattles was the author of "Jesus the Man, and His Work," and other well known books. He was also a poet of a high order. Another noble worker has passed from life.

OHIO SOCIALIST NEWS.

Coke Otto, with five signatures, have applied for charter; Ritman, with eleven names, and West Park, with five names. Comrade Dave Jenkins, of the managerial department of the Cleveland Citizen, assisted in getting the latter together. The names of the local will be Local Rockport.

Comrade Ferguson, the blind orator, went to Delaware, O., and came away with a petition with fourteen names for a charter. This county had no local, and therefore it is quite interesting to know that they have been taught and made to see the necessity of organizing by our blind agitator.

Comrade Ferguson works under great disadvantage, because of being blind, but his good work merits the assistance of all comrades in the arrangements of his meetings.

Comrade Ella Reeve Bloor has been in the city of Columbus for a few days, awaiting further instructions from the national office. Comrade Bloor is a national speaker and organizer of the Socialist party.

The movement is going fine in the state, and we will no doubt enjoy the greatest activity between this and next fall that we have ever experienced in the state.

G. A. STORCK,
State Secretary.

STRICKLAND AT MARION.

The Socialists of Marion, Ohio, had a splendid meeting Monday night. There was a big crowd, and Comrade Fred G. Strickland gave a stirring address on "Labor and the Federal Courts," which aroused those present as only Strickland can arouse his [illegible]

DEBATE AT DAYTON.

Two Thousand People Hear Strickland Defend Socialism.

The National Theater was packed from pit to dome Sunday afternoon by 1060 people, gathered to heaf Fred Strickland and Prof. A. A. Mayslles debate the question, "Is Socialism Practical?" Mr. Strickland appeared as the champion of the practicability of Socialism and Prof. Mayslles, who is superintendent of schools at Brookville, opposed him from the standpoint of an independent Democrat.

The applause given Comrade Strickland and the faint response evoked by his opponent indicated the sentiment of the audience.

PROLETARIAN PROGRAM.

Socialist Glee Club Forward Has Most Successful Ball.

The Socialist Glee Club Forward demonstrated, last Saturday evening at Red Lion Hall, how thoroughly German Socialists can do things and learned that the comrades in general have a high regard for the efforts of the Glee Club. Red Lion Hall was crowded with a mass of happy men, women and children to participate in the masquerade ball and to enjoy the picturesque sights of the carnival of fun. The affair was in striking contrast to the "frosty" ball of the Republican Buckeye Club the night previous at Memorial Hall, where President Taft was an attraction and where the bourgeoise tried to put on airs like real "massiecy." The throng at Red Lion Hall was composed of the proletariat—the only real people, after all.

Dancing commenced shortly after 8 o'clock, and continued until midnight. At times there was hardly room for the waltzers so great was the crowd. At 9 o'clock took place the grand march of the masked and quaintly costumed folks, led by Otto Othmar. The prizes were awarded to Mrs. Ella Birkefeld and Jacob Reichert. The judges were D. J. Ferfell, Christian Schoenun, C. A. Cashdollar, James Watkins and Fred Schwalbach.

Then came the unmasking, and this was followed by the surprise of the evening. The great stage curtain rose and there stood revealed a scene entitled "International Socialism"—the Goddess of Liberty, holding the banner inscribed "Gleiche Pflichten, Gleiche Rechte"—Equal Responsibility, Equal Rights. She was surrounded by a Socialist group, representing the leading nations, a torch-bearer and a laborer. The effect was wonderful and the great throng cheered loudly and long. The characters were as follows: Mrs. Peter Messmer, Goddess of Liberty; George Conrad, torch bearer; M. Nowaki, representative of labor; Jacob Erdel, Uncle Sam; Jos. Seymenich, France; Carl Birkefeld, Germany; George Wendel, Russia. We reproduce the tableau in this paper.

The comrades of the Glee Club realized a handsome sum from the entertainment, and are highly pleased with the encouragement given.

THE WAIL FROM A JUDGE.

We noticed a wail going up a few days ago from one of the judges of the common pleas court against the board of pardons at the penitentiary, for pardoning a prisoner without the consent of the trial judge. This is the same judge who enjoined the striking streetcar men, and all others, from telling the truth that a streetcar strikebreaker was a scab. If he was so powerful in that case, why is he such a weakling now? Why don't he enjoin the board of pardons from paroling or pardoning a prisoner without the advice or consent of the trial judge? Is he afraid the people are watching these things? He probably knows that the judicial tyranny practiced in the Warren case has aroused the people until Taft was compelled inject not only his ponderous self but his majestic spleen into the case. He probably knows that the people, through their press, are able to get the truth in these cases and the crooked work of the judges can not be covered up, as it has been when none but the capitalist papers were to be depended upon for the news. He now asks for a law to give him and his class full control of all the unfortunates who come under their majestic speel for all time. When the people get wise to the official tyranny of the capitalistic courts, they will soon relieve them of that power which they have assumed.

CITY ORGANIZERS MEET.

The organizers of the various ward branches met Sunday morning and considered matters of importance in the work of the organization. Comrade D. J. Farrell, who was elected City Organizer last week, outlined a plan for the development of "home talent" speakers before the city campaign begins, which will give us a "flying squadron" of orators when the battle is the fiercest.

THE CORN SHOW GUEST.

A caricature of a trust,
With a sixty-inch bust,
Rolled into an automobile
And with Governor "Jud"
Cut quite a large "splud,"
Then went to the corn show to spiel.

But this gigantic "mut"
And his bodyguard Butt
Didn't take worth a cent in this town;
Not a hand-clap or cheer
Could be heard far or near
To welcome poor Theodore's Clown.

WINDOW GLASS WORKERS.

Columbus Window Glass Workers will vote, Sunday, February 19, for national officers.

ELECTRICAL WORKERS.

At their last regular meeting four new members joined the ranks. The Woman's Eight Hour Bill was indorsed, and the Legislative Committee instructed to watch for developments with the Employers' Liability Bill.

BREWERY WORKERS.

Members of Joint Executive Board: H. Brown, G. Compson, M. J. Giblin, W. Prehm, J. Friel; Secretary, John Girard. The local unions deserve credit for the well attended meetings. Labor legislation receives considerable attention, and much interest appears to be paramount with the Employers' liability measure. Adolph Kummer, president of No. 11, Cincinnati, was re-elected president of the Central Trades Council by a handsome majority.

The newly organized Cincinnati Union of Brewery Labor and Ice Plant Workers, Local 221, was addressed by International Secretaries Probstle and Hubner. This local was organized by Brother Kummer. What is profitable to Cincinnati should be valuable to Columbus. We have a big field to work in.

TOBACCO WORKERS.

Tobacco Workers' Union again wishes to inform all uses of tobacco that "Honest Scrap," "Red Man," in fact all tobacco that does not bear the blue label of the Tobacco Workers' International Union is the product of the American Tobacco Company, the trust. Tobacco with the union label is a guarantee that it is prepared in clean, sanitary workshops and by well-paid labor.

STEREOTYPERS' UNION NO. 14.

This local met Monday evening, and indorsed all labor legislation introduced by the Ohio Federation of Labor.

THE UNION LABEL.

Wave the Stars and Stripes and create enthusiasm. Demand the UNION LABEL and create your own enthusiasm. Remember, the money YOU earn BELONGS TO YOU. Then spend it with friends, not foes. Tell your mother, wife and sisters to help their sex by refusing to buy the product of the prison, workhouse and sweatshop. DEMAND UNION LABEL GOODS.

GAS FITTERS AND PLUMBERS.

The Columbus local is gaining strength every meeting. Their National organizers' reports prove achieving good results through Building Trades Councils, and they apparently go outside of their own craft lines to strengthen weaker brethren. This is the real definition of industrial unity. The national office keeps its membership well posted on labor legislation before Congress. This matter of importance appears in the February journal:

BIG NAVY PLOT TO KILL EIGHT HOURS.

"Washington, D. C.—After sending admirals and naval constructors to congressional committees to fight the eight-hour law, the secretary of the navy has himself appeared in open opposition to an eight-hour day. He asserts that the government can make great saving by working its men long hours and that private firms will not bid as long as the eight-hour law is in effect.

"Extreme suspicion has been aroused by the complete absence of bids for the construction of war vessels, and Representative Calder of New York has introduced a resolution in the House directing the secretary of the navy to report as to 'whether there is evidence of any combination or agreement among ship builders that is operated to the disadvantage of the government; also whether there is an evidence of an agreement among ship builders, respecting bids for contracts for warships.'"

THE CHICAGO GARMENT WORKERS' STRIKE.

The Garment Workers' strike, after twenty-two weeks' duration, has been called off by the Executive Board, with the consent of National President Thomas Rickert. The Chicago Federation of Labor, who have been active in supporting the strike, with the co-operation of Mrs. Raymond Robins ad her corps of lady workers, were not consulted in the matter, neither was a referendum vote taken.

The conditions under which these people were compelled to work were of the vilest kind:

1. Denied the right to belong to and discrimination against and dismissal for belonging to a trade union.

2. Compelled to secure a pass from a foreman to get a drink of water or go to the lavatory.

3. Compelled to pay for soap in the wash-rooms.

4. Petty fines for various infraction of rules, materially decreasing their earnings.

5. The system changed from week to piecework, and the prices paid being so low as to make the highest speed necessary to earn sufficient to keep body and soul together.

And many other tyrannies too numerous to mention.

The capitalist press sends out this statement, we suppose as a warning to others:

"The strikers must return to work in the shops of the 'association' houses as individuals. The open-shop policy of the employers will be maintained. All grievances, if any, will be adjusted by the employers with each individual employe."

How long, oh, Lord! must women and children suffer industrial torture to appease the greed of our modern Herods?

The Illinois Legislature has appointed a committee to investigate the Garment Workers' social conditions. Of course, we shall next hear of LABOR being recognized. Some trade unionist will be made chairman of a legislative labor committee made up of bankers and lawyers. There is only two moves now on the board: The first is INDUSTRIAL form of organization, and the other is a clear class-conscience vote at the ballot-box. Let us have pure, unadulterated virtue, instead of veneerism.

OHIO LABOR LEGISLATION.

To the Columbus Socialist: I beg leave to submit the following, which I hope may prove of interest to your readers. It is a short summary of the work along lines of interest to the workers of our state:

The non-partisan Judiciary Bill, which was introduced by Mr. Reynolds in the Senate, January 9, and by Mr. Evans, of Cuyahoga in the House, on January 10, and which provides for the election of the judiciary on separate, or non-partisan, ballots, passed both houses and only lacks the governor's signature to become a law.

The bill introduced in the Senate by Mr. Green, and in the House by Mr. Evans of Cuyahoga, providing for an eight-hour work day for women, is still in committee. It is meeting with the usual opposition by the manufacturing interests, who place their own selfish interests, reckoned in dollars and cents, above the well being of society in general and the workers in particular.

I therefore urge upon you, fellow-trade unionists, the necessity of writing your representatives and urging them, in no uncertain terms, the advisability of supporting this and all other measures in the interest of labor. They are hearing from the opposition daily, so it is up to you to be equally active in your interests.

Other bills of interest are the Semi-Monthly Pay Bill for railroad men, by Mr. Calvey of Cuyahoga, which is on today's calendar; the Railway Clearance Bill, by Mr. Bell of Stark; the bill providing that miners shall be paid for all coal mined before it passes the screens, by Senator Green; the Dean Bill, by the senator of the same name, and the bill providing for a Constitutional Convention, delegates to be elected on a non-partisan basis, at the coming fall election.

There are many others, but time and space will not permit mentioning them all. I will endeavor to keep you informed each week on the progress made.

I want to repeat that it is very necessary that you should acquaint your representatives with the fact that you are insisting that they redeem their campaign pledges by supporting the bills named, and all others of like character, if they wish to have the support of labor in the future.

Yours fraternally,
IKE E. BYRUM,
Legislative Agent, Ohio State Federation of Labor.

MINES CROWDED.

It is reported by the president of the local union at Huntington, Ark., that the mines there are crowded to such an extent that the men find it very difficult to make both ends meet.

STAY AWAY.

Benton, Ill., Jan. 25, 1911.

Editor Mine Workers' Journal:

All miners, mine laborers and other laborers are hereby notified that the mine of the Benton Coal Company, located at Benton, Ill., is overcrowded with men and turns very slow. Men already here are unable to make a living for themselves and families.

JAMES TOWAL,
Secretary Local 2221.

On investigation I find the above statement to be true, and would advise all miners to stay away from above mentioned place until you receive further notice.

J. H. WALKER,
President District 12, U. M. W. of A.

THE LEATHER WORKERS.

At the last regular meeting it was decided to watch the actions of the state legislature in regard to preventing the repeal of the Werts bill. Prison labor is one of the curses of the nation. For many years leather goods have been one of the principal articles produced by convict labor. We append an extract sent to this office:

"Rhode Island, the state dominated by Aldrich, offers perhaps the worst example of "farming out" prisoners. Under a five-year contract, dated July 7, 1906, and renewable for five years more at the option of private contractors, the labor of the inmates of the Rhode Island penitentiary and the Providence county jail is sold to the Reliance-Sterling Manufacturing Co. at the rate of a trifle less than 25 cents a day per man. This company is really a gigantic prison labor trust, for it also leases the convict labor of Connecticut, Michigan, Indiana, Nebraska and South Dakota penitentiaries, and the reformatories of New Jersey, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, eleven establishments in all. The enormity of the graft under the Rhode Island contract may be estimated from the fact that this same company pays 62½ cents a day in Nebraska for the convict's labor, and that Tennessee, for example, gets $1.10 a day for a convict's work from the Gray-Dudley Hardware Co.; Missouri gets 70 cents a day from the Star Overall Manufacturing Co.; West Virginia 65 cents a day from the Kraf Manufacturing Co., and Maryland 55 cents a day from Oppenheim, Oberndorf and Co., shirt manufacturers. The very difference in prices points to enormous graft. For example, the Reliance-Sterling Manufacturing Co. manufactures shirts, the cost by free labor being not less than $1.20 per dozen, while it pays Rhode Island 30 cents a dozen. Furthermore, the state charges this trust no rent for the use of its huge factory, charges nothing for power, heat, light, or even drainage, and exacts no taxes. What graft!

COLUMBUS FEDERATION.

New Officers Installed and Important Legislation Endorsed.

The Columbus Federation of Labor had a busy session last Monday evening. The following officers were installed: J. H. Henderson, president; Harvey Peck, vice president; C. C. Appel, financial secretary; Herman Mertz, recording secretary; George Deibel, treasurer; J. Beitsch, librarian; F. Bentz, A. L. Leavitt and Geo. Phrem, trustees; Carl Roth, sergeant-at-arms; J. B. Mass, doorkeeper; H. E. Bailey, W. F. Hauck, W. C. Jenkins, George Phrem and Al Stephens, members of the executive board.

Delegates were obligated from the Bakers, Brewery Drivers, Brewery Engineers and Firemen, HorseShoers, Web Pressmen and Streetcar Men.

The Federation endorsed the women's eight hour bill, municipal firemen shorter work day, and the legislative committee was instructed to investigate the majority and minority reports of the employers' liability bill commission.

A committee consisting of Delegates Giblin, Suddick, Lyddy, Hauck, Peck, Richmond, Prof. Hammond and President Henderson to work for the housing code ordinance before the city council was selected.

Legislative Agent Byrum, of the Ohio Federation of Labor, was given the floor, and explained to the body the intent of the various labor bill now pending in the House. The visiting delegate was accorded all the honor that becomes his office, and the co-operation of the Columbus Federation of Labor was assured him. The executive board will meet one hour before the regular meeting, on the second Monday in the month.

Delegates Hauck, Liddy, Haslett and Dry were given charge of the Union Label entertainment. The same will consist of pictures, singing and lecture. Get busy, brethren, and help to make this venture a success.

Trustees Leavitt and Prehm were instructed to secure other quarters.

A communication from the Brick Masons' Union, asking the endorsement of George Harper for mayor, was received, and; by unanimous vote, was laid upon the table.

THE PESSIMIST.

Balancing the Account.

"By working my mill day and night," said a manufacturer of fine silk, "I get my money for three per cent."

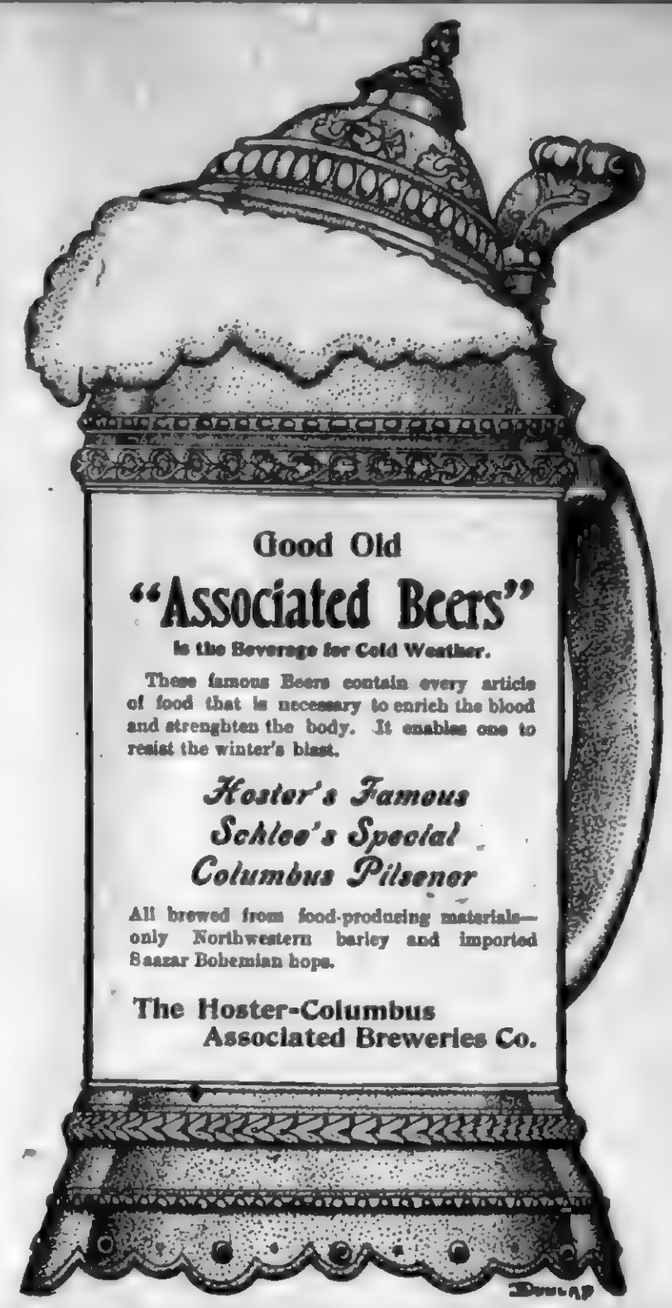
"That may be true enough so far as you are concerned," replied the Pessimist, "but every time you write the name of one of those children on your night-shift time book you draw a check on the fund of social energy, and some day, either in your time or in the time of your children, society must square that account."

The financial report of State Secretary Storck for December shows total receipts for the month of $1,142.94, which includes the balance on hand December 1. The total expenditures for the month were $482.90, leaving a balance January 1, 1911, of $660.04. The membership report shows 591 new members initiated during December, with 2796 paid up to date, and total membership enrolled of 4705. The tabulated report shows that 49 locals made no statement of their membership, as required by the constitution.

One of our leading hotels have been put on the "don't patronize list" by our business men. The aforesaid proprietor let out a contract for refurnishing to a firm out of the city. Cheaper, of course. Traveling men have quietly but firmly been told to cut it out. What occurred a few years ago when workingmen tried the same game on one of our papers? Treason and conspiracy.—Hamilton Searchlight.

NOTICE TO CO-OPERATORS.

It is proposed to form a co-operative home buying company, along the lines laid down by the National Co-operative Homestead Company., viz.: The members of the company will buy, or rent, with the privilege of buying, a tract of land for the purpose of farming and gardening. This tract will be sold by the owners, in lots to suit, directly to the members of the company, each deed being made out to the purchaser upon his payment of the price, independently of whether others pay for their land.



The company will then lease the several tracts from the individual members (if they consent), and farm it as a whole, thus saving a large part of the expense.

It is hoped to build a village, in which everyone shall get, at actual cost, a home with modern conveniences.

If any reader is interested, let him send his name to Co-operator, care of The Socialist, Columbus, Ohio, or Box 27, Grove City, Ohio.

WOMAN'S DEPARTMENT.

A REVIEW OF THE PANKHURST LECTURE.

Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, the fighting suffragette, paid Columbus a brief visit February 4, 1911. After reading in the newspapers of the wild excesses of the militant English suffragette we were somewhat unprepared for the quiet, girlish, dignified Miss Pankhurst. When she stepped upon the platform of the Chamber of Commerce auditorium, at 2:30 p. m., the hall held several hundred people. Not many, you say? Well, no, not if we consider the size of our city, the charm of the speaker and the importance of her message. But Columbus women are more interested in style and bridge than in economic and political problems. Thus, when we say several hundreds were there, we do so with something akin to pride, for it is very rarely indeed that such a large suffrage meeting has been held in this city.

The speaker appeared to be not over twenty-five years of age; we understand that she is only twenty, but her gravity and earnestness made her seem older. She had a face full of sensitiveness and intelligence. Her hair was was very plainly and simply arranged—a startling contrast to the puffs and curls of the average American girl. Without wishing to appear frivolous, we believe that Miss Pankhurst would probably create a somewhat better impression if she gave just a little more attention to her personal appearance. Her dress was made of a good, soft satin, but evidently was quite old and was badly wrinkled; its fit, to be plain, was atrocious.

Miss Pankhurst had a rather bad habit of stooping and hunching over considerably while talking, yet this seemed to add to her earnestness. Her gestures were poor, most of them meaningless and nervous. However, for a girl of twenty, Miss Pankhurst surely possessed the power of charming her auditors. Seldom have we seen an audience give such careful attention to any speaker. For almost two hours that queer little figure—Miss Pankhurst is not a large woman—held her audience in a spell. There was hardly a stir, if perchance some one coughed or a baby whispered to itself every one seemed annoyed—they did not wish to lose a word. Perhaps a quarter of the audience were men, and they appeared as much interested as the women.

And her message? A Socialist could not have explained the need of woman suffrage better. The keynote was that women in large numbers are forced to work for their living, and that the wages paid them are less than those paid men. Working women need the protection of the vote as well as workingmen. While men have failed to bring to themselves any large measure of economic liberty, they have the power to do so. And the men have neglected to vote for men and measures that would bring them the highest good, yet it is a fact that the condition of workingmen, unenviable though it may be, is superior to the condition of working women.

The speaker mentioned briefly the common law status of women, where wives were almost the slaves of their husbands; she showed how many of the ancient handicaps still exist. She told how the laws regarding the guardianship of children are still unjust to mothers, how divorce is frequently harder for women, how women receive less pay than men for the same work, and how the double standard of morals works to the constant hardship of women, although women as a class are the chief guardians of morality.

Miss Pankhurst recalled the use of English women in mines, and told how they did the hardest sort of work for less wages than men received. In the English schools the girl teachers receive about half what the boy teachers do—they begin to teach while very young in that country. The difference in pay is purely a matter of sex, as the girls almost invariably receive higher grades in the examinations than the boys. The speaker then went on to say that it was just because they were bound to obey laws which bore so heavily and unjustly on them that they were demanding a voice in the making of the laws.

The English women have been working since 1865 for suffrage. At first they achieved some measure of success, but as times became worse they demanded the full parliamentary suffrage.

At first the women appeared at the cabinet meetings and asked if they would be enfranchised. This they had a legal right to do. But their questions were not answered. When they persisted in asking the questions, they were hustled out of the meeting with blows and taunts. English people are allowed to present petitions asking for any desired legislation. The women's petition would not be received. When they attempted to force its recognition, they were beaten and arrested.

The remainder of the lecture was a graphic description of what we have already read in our newspapers and magazines—how the women have courageously continued the fight to force the English cabinet to receive their petition and grant its prayer; how they have been beaten, insulted and imprisoned, starved and maltreated while confined; how they are apparently no nearer success than a year ago; but how they will never given up until enfranchised.

Can American women conceive of such conditions in America? Do you think American men would refuse American women a vote if they wished to have it? How can you justify your indifference and indolence? Perhaps you do not need the protection of a vote—come and help the 6,500,000 working women of the country who do need it.

ELLA JUNE PURCELL.

ATTENTION!

The Woman's National Committee calls your attention to the fact that the last Sunday in February has been set aside as Woman's Day, and that the National Executive Committee has requested the locals to observe this day by holding a special meeting for women. As far as possible women speakers should be secured.

IS WOMAN ECONOMICALLY WORTHLESS?

Professor Patten, of the University of Pennsylvania, an original and progressive thinker, declares that one of the four major causes of the increased cost of living is the "new status" of woman. Civilization and mechanical progress, he says, have deprived women of their former share in bread winning, and they are "left with their hands idle."

"Let women take up their share of the work and the pressure on the resources of the family will be equalized," concludes Professor Patten.

Let us see. The next census will probably show that about 7,000,000 women are engaged in gainful occupations, in spite of our "civilization." It will not show how many millions work longer hours than any factory or office employe, in kitchens, nurseries, tenements, flats, farm-houses, without getting any "wages" at all, but we know that the wife of the laborer, the mechanic, the clerk, the small shopkeeper, the struggling farmer, the young professional man does not sit with "hands idle."

Is not the woman who cooks and washes, cleans, sews, brings up children doing her share of the work of the family? Is she economically worthless? The number of idle women is very small in this country, and of this number the majority devote themselves to charitable and reform work, to the cultivation of letters and art, to the propaganda of political and moral causes. Sending them into offices and factories would scarcely benefit civilization.

Man does not live by bread alone; and have not foreign observers extolled American women for their successful pursuit of culture and idealism? Even from an economic point of view, the women who do not toil are not worthless. Morals and aesthetics and culture have their economic value to society.—Chicago Record-Herald.

REGARDING PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

In many of the large cities there is a marked decrease in the circulation of books. Many causes are hinted at; among others, the ever popular moving picture shows, the promotion of out-of-door spirits, etc.

Wouldn't it be nearer the point to give as the real reason the plain truth—lack of time? Those who must depend upon the public libraries for their literature are largely among the working class of people. Long hours of toil are not conducive to great love of research. The little time left to working people to call their own is usually spent in recreation less taxing than reading or study. When the time comes in which only a part of the day is required for work, there will be a greater desire for reading on the part of all, and an opportunity to enjoy its pleasures in one's own home. In that day there will be no Carengie libraries; they will all have been turned into public art galleries, and every man will be the proud possessor of his own library, for they are as necessary to development as air and sunshine. "Without books God is silent, justice dormant, natural science at a stand, philosophy lame, letters dumb, and all things involved in Cimmerian darkness."

WEEKLY SERMONETTE.

"For where your treasure is, there will your heart be."

The treasure pearl of every life should be the highest ideal of which that life is capable of shaping. Then the ideal should be tenderly guarded, lest through neglect its beauty become marred. The best ideal can only be formed by desiring at all times the highest good. It is not always possible to know just what the highest good is; but by reaching out constantly after what we believe it to be, we are drawing our hearts nearer and nearer toward the treasure goal of all goodness—God.

A LEAGUE OF POLITENESS BEING FORMED.

We read that a World's League of Politeness is in course of organization. The mother of the movement is Fraulein Meyer, of Berlin. She has discovered that politeness is practically almost a lost art, and traces its decline to the spirit of luxury. Those who become members of the League of Politeness must wear badges, and woe to the man wearing such a badge who takes a seat in a streetcar while a woman stands. He will be dishonorably discharged. The predominance of the system that makes for luxury has probably more to do with the death of politeness than anything else.

The spirit of commercialism, of which Henry D. Thoreau complained when he said, "I can not easily buy a blankbook to write thoughts in; they are commonly ruled for dollars and cents," has blotted out from our midst nearly all semblance of politeness. People no longer have time to be polite. It is not so much the fault of the people as the fault of conditions. Two men were recently so engrossed in discussing a business proposition for the benefit of the "company" that they permitted a woman holding an infant in her arms to stand in the isle of a streetcar. The "company" had been so kind to them. It was probably giving them just enough to live, and, deplorable fact, had taken from them the first essential of a gentleman—politeness. Now and then we find, in spite of the many causes that work against politeness, rare souls who seem born to it, as the sparks fly upward. They fairly radiate politeness, and it is the chance meeting with these natures that gives us real pleasure and furnishes us a glimpse of that delightful, old-world quality which was universal when the race was happier and freer; when all living was sweet and pure, and there were no bonds to bind.

If a World's League of Politeness will help to bring us back into these dimly remembered paths, may its membership increase and may its popularity know no bounds.

WORK AMONG WOMEN.

There are a number of reasons why the Socialist party should carry on special propaganda among women. Among them are the following:

Woman is disfranchised. The Socialist party demands equal suffrage for all, regardless of sex, color or race.

Woman's disfranchisement is a great factor in holding her in economic slavery.

Woman's position in industry is a much lower status than man's. She seldom receives equal wages for the same grade of work.

Woman has become a very large part of the industrial world. She is the most formidable competitor man has in the industries.

Woman is the mother of the race. She needs education, that she may intelligently point the way to freedom to her children.

Woman is one-half of the race. Without her support we cannot bring in the co-operative commonwealth.

As Franklin Wentworth has said: "We must never for a moment neglect the propaganda work we can do within the walls of our own homes; for until women enter heart and soul into all our councils and all our efforts I can not bring myself to have great hopes for Socialism, and I know that capitalism will have small fears of it.—Progressive Woman.

CARES NOT A "POUF" FOR FASHIONS.

The most distinguished woman in France, Madame Sara Bernhardt, recently said to an American woman, who asked her about the prevailing fashions: "Pouf! What care I about fashions? Do you think for one moment that I would have my clothes dictated by some one else? I think not." To American women, who are prone to imitate the ways and clothes of actresses, here is a nugget of wisdom from the greatest of living actresses that every woman might remember and heed. French-women to her fingertips as she is, the great actress makes herself absolutely independent of what are called "French fashions, to which the American woman has so ignorantly made herself a slave. With a "Pouf" does this great woman blow away the shrine at which the American woman worships.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Women Prominent in Various Fields.

A YOUTHFUL POETESS.

Miss Muriel Rice, of New York, a member of the Poetry Society of America, has attracted much attention by her poems, which do not follow along the old beaten paths, but are in theme "universal." A number of her verses have been translated into the German by the noted poet and critic, Dr. Theodore Lessing.

A WOMAN CHAUFFEUR.

One first woman to become a licensed chauffeur is Miss Natalie White. It is said she is very skillful, and presents a nice appearance in her smart, workmanlike attire.

A MAGAZINE PHOTOGRAPHER.

One of the most widely known and best photographers is a woman—Jessie Tarbox Beals. The best bird's-eye views of the World's Exposition at St. Louis were taken by her from a balloon.

A WOMAN SURGEON.

Dr. Mary Crawford is a resident of Brooklyn. She is a woman surgeon, who graduated from Cornell with the degrees of A.B. and M.D. She then entered the Williamsburg hospital as an interne, and upon after was assigned to ambulance duty, a difficult position, which she filled very ably. She is now assistant house surgeon at the same hospital, and conducts a children's clinic at the Seney hospital, besides having an extensive practice in Brooklyn.

PASS SUFFRAGE MEASURE.

Sacramento, Cal.—The senate constitutional amendment providing for the submission of the question of woman's suffrage to the people was passed in the assembly, by a vote of 65 to 13. The amendment already has passed the senate.

Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont has offered prizes to members of her Artists' Branch of the Political Equality Association of New York, for the best pieces of sculpture and posters illustrating the cause of "votes for women." She will give $150 in all.

Luella Twining writes that it is not "polite" for women to appear on the streets alone in France. They may uncover their faces, may go about unveiled, and may even sit at the table with members of the opposite sex. But not yet shall members of "the better classes," the "protected" women, venture about the streets alone. It is a man's world. And in a man's world the first thought of woman is of her sex. The psychology of such a society can not be other than brutal and demoralising. The society which demands that a woman veil her face before appearing upon the street has its foundation set in the mire of human degradation. And it never can rise above its thought about its women.

LINCOLN.

"In him, distilled and potent, the choice essence of a race!
Far back the Puritans—stern and manful visionaries,
Repressed poets, flushed with dreams of glowing theologies!
Each new succession, out of border hardship,
Refined to human use the initial rigor of the breed,
Passing to the next, the unconscious possession of a perfecting soul!
Each forest clearing gave something of neighborly grace,
The rude play of cabin-bred natural people something of humor,
Each mountain home something of inner daring,
Each long-wandering life something of patience and of hope!
In the open, far-seen nature grandly chiseled
The deepening wistful eyes.
Each axman and each plowman added
Another filament of ruggedness;
Unknown minds dumbly cried for liberty;
Mute hearts strove against injustice.
* * *
At last was ready the alembic, where
Nature stored and set apart
Each generation's finest residue,
Waiting for the hour of perfect mixture—
And then the Miracle!"

SOCIALIST SCHOOL COMMANDMENTS.

(By Jim.)

Do not be cowardly. Be a friend to the weak, and love justice.

It is not cowardly if you run away when some great danger threatens you. For instance, if you met a wild animal in the woods, it would be certain death for you to show your courage by standing still if you were not in possession of a loaded gun or if you were not a good marksman.

It would not be courage if you saw a house threatening to fall and you would remain, while the walls were leaning over, ready to kill you. Nobody would pity you if you were killed that way, because everybody would consider you crazy.

But it would be cowardly if you feared danger which could be met and turned aside, or if it threatened some one else whom you could save by being courageous.

Just think how dreadful you would feel if you were skating on the ice and broke through. The first thing you would do would be to try to crawl out again, but if you found you could not do it then you would cry for help. Now just imagine how you would be frightened to death to see every one of your friends running away and leaving you to drown.

Remember, that just as you would feel, so others would feel if you were a coward, where you could save somebody from trouble or even from death.

THE STEP-MOTHER AND THE WISE CHILDREN.

(A Parable.)

There was a house in which there was nothing but cold stoves, in dread of a fire which might happen. The owner of the house was a miser. She often said:

"There are walls, ceilings and even a roof to this house. There are weather-stripe nailed to the doors and a double set of windows to keep out the cold. Besides, every crevice is filled with putty and a good coat of paint has closed up even the pores of the wood. What more do you want?"

But her children cried and begged: "Oh, mother, why don't you make a little fire at least in the playroom? It is so very cold that we are almost frozen to the bone."

But the stingy mother was not moved by their entreaties, and simply replied:

"There, now, be quiet. Of what use is a stove? You are young and have good, fresh blood in your bodies. Do not stir the air, sit close together and you will warm one another. Winter will not last long, and when spring comes you may enjoy yourselves in the fields. Don't expect me to burn up coal simply to warm up the chimney. No, no, you must be satisfied with things as they are and then you will enjoy the warm springtime all the more."

She, however, wrapped herself up in furs, put on thick woolen stockings and stuck her feet into nice, warm felt-slippers. Thus comfortably dressed, she strutted about the room and scolded or advised the children.

"Why," said she, "I don't know what is the matter with you! I feel real warm and comfortable."

Not only was the room cold and cheerless, but the children were in rags and the skin peeked through many holes in their clothing. They suffered much and cried bitterly, but this did not move the old lady to pity.

One day the eldest boy had a splendid idea. He called his brothers and sisters together, and said:

"Why should we freeze? Our very souls will freeze if we stand this much longer. We will die before spring appears. I have a good plan, but if I carry it out alone mother will punish me severely, but if you will all agree to help me, then we will be warm."

"We want to be warm! We don't want to freeze to death! show us how to get warm!" So the different children cried out.

"Let us chop up all the chairs and tables and set them on fire in the stove, and we will be warm and comfortable."

"Hurrah! That's what we will do!"

They were so cold that they were desperate. They did not care what their step-mother would do to them. Soon the wood was sputtering in the flame and the children danced around in glee.

"Oh, isn't this fine!" they said. "We will call mother and tell her she may warm herself also."

Who knows what a parable is? And what does this parable teach?

TOYS OF OLD PERU.

In the graves o ancient Peru have been discovered spinning tops almost identical in shape with the ones used at this modern age. In China was made a discovery of a top almost exactly similar to the one found in Peru, and scientists are at a loss to understand how these little articles could have been so much alike, and yet be found in countries so far apart.

It has been estimated that the toys are at least 3000 years of age. Old Egyptian toys have been found which show that they were arranged on wheels, much as the toys of today are made. Toys, very much alike in all particulars, have been discovered in all parts of the globe, and their age dates back into the thousands of years.

WHOSE HOUSE IS THIS?

On Fifth avenue and Seventy-seventh street, in the city of New York, stands a brand new house.

It cost $7,000,000 to put it up and over $2,000,000 for furnishings.

This house, furnished costs $10,000,000.

Now, to whom does this house belong? Does it belong to some thrifty workingman? Is it the property of some one with brain and muscle, who has done good and useful work?

NO.

William A. Clark owns that house.

And who is William A. Clark? Why, he is the ex-senator from Montana.

And what did he do for Montana?

He grabbed all the land and timber he could lay his hands on. He got hold of all the mines and smelters he could snap up.

HE DID MORE.

He went to the senate and helped protect all the land thieves and mining interests in the West. He helped the employers to crush and degrade labor and to beat the unions in their strikes.

In other words, William A. Clark rode along in his chariots with long knives on the hubs, sticking out to mow down the common people wherever he was able to pass through.

For this tyranny and thievery the bosses of Montana made him United States Senator. For this the people gave him wealth and luxury untold. For this they built him a ten million dollar house in New York.

He did not build this house himself. He never laid a brick or painted a wall. He never tacked on a lath.

Moreover, he never earned one dollar of the ten million put into the house. He never raised his finger to do a useful act.

BUT HE HAS THE HOUSE.

Those who built the house live in tenements. Those who furnished the money for it live in shacks.

AND WHY?

Because they gave the money and the house to William A. Clark. They gave him a ten million dollar house.

For ten million dollars you could build 5000 houses each costing $2000. But you gave these 5000 houses away to ONE MAN—and to a fellow who NEVER EARNED A CENT.

Why didn't you give them to some poor fellow who lost his leg or his arm in some mine or factory? Why didn't you keep these houses for yourselves and your widows and Babies?

Have you been quite true to yourself and your family?

When we talk about Socialism you want to remember that it means nothing more or less than that you, the workers, shall keep the houses you build. You shall keep the good things you create. You shall not be compelled to give a big ten-million dollar house to ONE man and his wife and poodle dog, who can't possibly use it all, who don't live in it more than a few months of the year anyhow, and leave SCORES of YOU with YOUR WIVES AND CHILDREN HOMELESS.

You shall not be compelled to give this ONE man, his wife and poodle dog millions of dollars in addition, which they squander on monkey dinners while you and your wife and children go hungry.

That's what Socialism means. Do you think it is right or do you not?—Chicago Daily Socialist.

Brave soldiers have died on the battlefield and holy martyrs have gone smiling to the fagot and the sword, but the children of their murderers have erected monuments to their memory.

THE FOURTH ESTATE

Novelized by
FREDERICK R. TOOMBS
From the Great Play of the Same Name by Joseph Medill Patterson and Harriet Ford.

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON AND HARRIET FORD.

"Why, the gentleman who—eh, with whom you made an appointment for 9 o'clock this evening—here—at your office."

Brand still refused to show his hand.

"I should be very glad to hear what you have to say, Mr. Dupuy, but, frankly, I don't know what you are driving at."

The visitor was annoyed. He was positive that Bartelmy would not send him on a wild goose errand. Surely the judge and Brand had come to terms regarding the silence of the Advance as to the Lansing iron case decision. The editor was playing with him now, he knew—dangling him on a verbal hook to tantalize him.

"Oh, come, you know who I mean—Bartelmy!" snapped the judge's despicable tool.

"Judge Bartelmy!" exclaimed Brand in surprise. "Well, what about him?"

Dupuy produced a card, which the editor glanced at.

"What's this?" he asked. Then he read: "'Dupuy will represent me.' In what?"

He started to put the card in his pocket.

"Perhaps you would better let me have that so I can return it to him." Dupuy reached eagerly for the card, which Brand slowly extended to him. "This refers to that transaction of which you and he were speaking this afternoon," continued the lawyer.

Brand laughed loudly.

"Well, Dupuy, I'm a poor hand at guessing riddles. I give it up. What's the answer?"

The lawyer became impatient.

"The transaction involving the—ah—the investment—of a certain—sum of money," he explained haltingly.

"A business deal I was going into with the judge?" in amazement.

"Precisely."

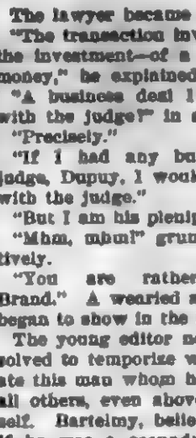
"If I had any business with the judge, Dupuy, I would prefer to do it with the judge."

"But I am his plenipotentiary."

"Mhm, mhm!" grunted Brand negatively.

"You are rather unreasonable, Brand." A wearied and hopeless look began to show in the lawyer's visage.

The young editor noted this and resolved to temporize with and exasperate this man whom he despised above all others, even above Bartelmy himself. Bartelmy, believed Brand, even if he was a scoundrel, actually had superior mental ability, was a brilliant thinker and acted boldly in many of his dishonest transactions on the bench. But Dupuy—he was to Brand the hanger-on, the skulker, the vandal jackal that devoured corpses in the night that braver animals had fought and killed by day. His eyes blinked in the light, did Dupuy's. It was in the underground runways that he coursed the swiftest. And as these thoughts sped through his brain the editor looked away absently.



Dupuy came hot on his trail.

"Shall I make an appointment with him for you, say, tomorrow morning?" he anxiously queried of the newspaper man.

"I don't care."

"Then I'll do it!" he said decidedly and moved away from the desk. "And—er—" He saw that Brand was still indifferent. He returned to the desk. "Things will remain stationary until then?" he asked.

"Things never remain stationary in a newspaper office," responded the managing editor laconically.

"A business deal."

"What I mean is that there would be no story—er—about him until you see him."

"I don't know what you are talking about."

"Can we let it go over for one day?"

"I don't know what you are talking about."

"You insist on his coming here personally?"

"Of course I don't. I don't insist on anything."

"How much time have we got?"

"He knows all about that."

Dupuy was immeasurably relieved at this last remark. It was the first time that Brand had indicated that Bartelmy and he had had an engagement.

"Mr. Brand, I can almost assure you that my client will keep his appointment." The lawyer's voice rang out firmly.

The editor nodded carelessly toward the speaker, who spun on his heel and speedily strode away. The telephone bell sounded. Brand bent over quickly.

"Hello! Who—oh, yes, Mr. Nolan. No, sir, not yet, but I think we'll have him landed all right in about half an hour. Please don't worry about it. It'll be all right. Just go away and hide somewhere, for they'll be doing the baby act as quick as I trap him, and you'll be squeezed to death before we get to press. You promised me this chance. You want to know what's going on? Well, where will you be? Triple 8 Plaza. Get off the wire, Miss Stowe. Yes, Mr. Nolan, they cut in on us. I'll call you up later."

CHAPTER X.

BRAND hung up the telephone receiver with an anxious expression on his face. "Nolan must keep away from this," he muttered tensely. "Let him take a train or go to sleep or bury himself if he wants to. If Bartelmy or Dupuy gets hold of him after I've shown my hand there'll be the merry d—l to pay, and if they find him they might succeed in coaxing— I wonder if Nolan will stick; I wonder if Nolan will stick," he kept repeating over and over to himself.

The noise of voices raised in indignation broke in upon him from the outer hall at his right. "Oh, that's a chestnut," some one cried; "he's always out, always when I come."

The editor glanced around and saw Sylvester Nolan leading in his friend Powell, the poet.

"You're not out, are you, old man?" asked young Nolan of Brand. "Who's that fly duck that tried to keep me from coming in?"

"I'm sorry, Nolan; I'm very busy tonight, and you'll have to excuse me. I'm very busy."

"Brandy, old boy, I came in on business. Want to get a job for my friend Powell here. He's a poet." He dragged the wan eyed rhymester up to Brand's desk.

The editor looked Powell over.

"We don't carry poets on the payrolls," he grunted.

"But just look at this one. Powow, let Mr. Brand see your ode to the opening of the Omaha exposition. He went in the competition with this."

Powell handed the poem to Brand.

"And I see he came out with it," snorted the newspaper man.

"Yes, sir," agreed Powell faintly.

"People haven't time for poetry," commented Brand.

"That's what I've been trying to tell Powow," put in Sylvester. "He was born after his time."

"How would you like to be a reporter?" asked the editor.

Powell's eyes gleamed with a sickly color that showed that he was enthused.

"A reporter! Oh, yes, sir!" he said.

Brand took down the phone.

"Hello! Give me night city editor, please. Hello! That you? I've got a cub here named Powell. Please give him a week's trial. Report to city editor."

"Where is he, sir?" asked Powell, bewildered.

"You're a reporter now. Find out."

"Yes, sir." He started toward the hall door.

"Over here, Powow!" cried Sylvester, leading him in the opposite direction.

Joe Dillon now added to the managing editor's troubles by again coming into the office.

"Thank you, Mr. Brand," he began. "Could you spare me a little car fare?"

Brand tossed him a quarter. "Never mind now," he said. "Say, Joe, go out with that cub tonight. It will give you something to think about, and you can show him as much in a night as he'd learn in a month alone. Mr. Dillon, allow me to present you to Mr. Sylvester Nolan. Mr. Dillon broke me into the business," said the editor to the newspaper owner's son.

Sylvester drew a ponderous wad of bills from his pocket and offered the top one to the old "down and outer."

"You want to handle my friend Powow with gloves," advised Sylvester. "He's just full of temperament."

The old newspaper man indignantly refused the money which young Nolan held out to him and plunged out of the office.

The poet stood a mute witness to the proceedings.

"Go after him!" commanded Brand.

"Thank you, sir," and Powell darted frightenedly after Dillon.

"Who is that old jokes?" asked Sylvester of the editor.

"He was the best reporter that the Advance ever had."

"What's the matter with him?"

"Booze."

"Too bad! Well, a fellow ought to learn to control himself," remarked Sylvester pompously. "Now, Brandy, old boy, I want to ask you just one more favor tonight, in reference to a little actress friend of mine, Miss Guenevieve McKenzie."

"Oh—come—don't"—

"Run her picture in a prominent place, won't you?" Sylvester handed Brand a photo. "Miss Guenevieve McKenzie. Don't you know her? She's in the second row at the Tyroll, and it's a darn shame. I've got a libretto for her later on. Can't you help her out and get her a small part now?"

"I'm afraid that is hardly in my line."

"You'd be doing a favor to the show, for she's good enough to be a prima donna. She's been kept back by jealousy. Told me so herself. When will you have it in—tomorrow?"

"I scarcely think we can do that sort of thing in the Advance. We don't print pictures of chorus girls unless there's some good story about them—lost jewels, barred from a hotel on account of a dog, divorce or"—

Sylvester broke in relievedly, "Oh, she's been divorced!"

"Has she! When?"

"Last year."

"That's dead. Wait till her next. She doesn't go in."

"Why—why—won't you do it?" stammered the young man, who, deeply appreciating the fact that he was his father's son—yes, indeed—failed to comprehend how any employee on the Advance could refuse him anything. "She's the cutest little girl you ever saw, you old gasoot. You stick to me, and I'll give you an interest in this paper some day. Why, she was in"—

He inserted the point of the lead pencil.

"That all may be," responded Brand, rising to end the conversation, "but the Advance doesn't issue passes to the stage entrance."

Sylvester's jaw fell in his astonishment at this unexpected blow, and after a moment, after vainly endeavoring to find appropriate words for a reply, he went out of the room.

Brand was impatient because of the precious time that had been wasted. He had work to do and little time in which to do it, and it was the most important work he had ever done in his life.

He sent the office boy to bring the two reporters, Howard and Jeff. Speaking to Miss Stowe, the "central" of the Advance's private telephone system, he said: "Do not put anybody else on this wire until you hear from me, no matter how long it takes. Understand? Connect this phone with editorial room 4 and have it connected until I tell you. Now be sure about this. Understand? Again he repeated, as it concerned the success of his entire scheme, "Don't break the connection until I tell you myself."

The two reporters came in.

"Now, boys, understand what I want you to do. You've got to take, word for word, a conversation I'm going to have here. Go in room 4. You, Jeff, take the receiver."

"Yes, sir."

"And you, Howard, take the extension. Thus you will each hear what is said. Keep it glued to your best ear and take down every word you hear tonight between Judge Bartelmy and me. The judge will sit in the chair at the right of my desk. I will be in my own chair. The telephone will thus be midway between us. Whatever words he and I say will be said almost directly over the mouthpiece of the phone. Now, you see what I am going to do"—

Brand took a lead pencil from his pocket and began a proceeding which the two reporters, accustomed as they were in their business to ingenious strategy, failed at first to understand. Then the scheme dawned on them. Brand took the telephone receiver from the hook, and the metal arm immediately snapped upward, establishing the connection. Then he inserted the point of the lead pencil in the small aperture under the little metal arm or hook and deliberately broke it off. The tiny wedge thus held up the hook. Brand now hung up the receiver, and the pencil point prevented the weight of the receiver from bearing the hook down and breaking the connection. The connection was made continuous without the slightest indication that such was the case. Every word now spoken within a reasonable distance of the mouthpiece would be conveyed to the telephone and the extension telephone in editorial room 4, where Howard and Jeff were to be stationed. They had stenographers' pads with them, on which they were each to take down the conversation in shorthand.

"This phone will be open all the time that Bartelmy is here," announced Brand. "Go in there, Howard, and see if you can hear Jeff and me talking. Sit over here, Jeff." He pointed to the chair at his right. Howard went out.

"Now, Jeff, take down this and take down what you say to me," continued the editor.

Brand turned to Jeff and began to talk in a natural tone of voice.

"Jeff, you know I think the dog in the moon was seven times too slow in his journey through the paths of men, having lost 6,749,789,274,480 pounds in his auto northward. Is that your opinion?"

"No, not entirely. Hence and hereafter we complain of such a miraculous egotism of generality and solecism of peaceful garments and cold thought."

Brand struck a blow on the desk.

"On the contrary, it was unquestionable and with nasty justice, miscalled

"One can never be too careful about matters of this kind."

namby-pamby—got it?" cried the editor, bending over the mouthpiece. "Come in, Howard!"

Howard hurried into the room.

"Compare your notes, boys," instructed the managing editor.

They held the records side by side and quickly glanced over them.

"They are almost exactly the same," they exclaimed in unison.

A smile of satisfaction spread over Brand's face.

"All right. Now chase back to room 4, both of you!"

The office boy brought Brand a card. He took it, and as he glanced at it his eyes narrowed down into little sparks of light.

"He's on time," he murmured. "Very well, Durkin," he ordered, "show him in, and, Durkin, remember, don't let any one else in under any circumstances."

A half a minute later Judge Bartelmy stood in the doorway. He nodded briefly to Brand, and his eyes swept around the entire room before he stepped in. Slowly he proceeded in front of Brand's desk.

"Good evening, judge," said the editor.

"Good evening, Mr. Brand."

"Let me take your things. I'll hang them up," offered Brand. Just as Dupuy had been, Bartelmy was in evening dress. He took off his white kid gloves and put them in his pocket and then handed his hat and coat to the editor. Brand opened the door of a closet at the right hand side of the

OUR INDUSTRIAL PROBLEMS.

Richardson Makes Plain Their True Basis.

The second lecture of The Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course, Tuesday evening, at Board of Trade auditorium, was given by Comrade M. A. Richardson, of California, on "The Basis of Our Industrial Problem."

National Organizer Ella Reeve Bloor gave a brief talk upon the necessity of women organizing in the interest of home and children. Comrade Richardson's address was a concise treatment of the history of the age-long struggle for subsistence, starting with the savage, traced through barbarism, slavery, serfdom, to the wage slavery of today. The basis of the present capitalist system was laid when the barbarian found that it was better to put war captives to work than to eat them. Step by step, period by period, the speaker followed the progress of the centuries and the constant prevalence of the principle of profit and exploitation. Labor has never received more than enough to feed and clothe the laborer and reproduce himself. With mathematical exactness he showed that the working class today averaged $3 per day out of $10 produced, and that the capitalistic parties were simply fighting over the other $8. He closed by urging that the Socialist must teach the lesson of economic truth, each man to his neighbor and fellow-worker. The address was replete with solid facts, keen satire, ready wit and convincing argument.

I have a big bargain in a 10-R., modern, double pressed brick, within 8 squares of Ohio State University, South, at $5600. Palmer, 354 W. Eighth Ave.

THE SOCIALIST LYCEUM COURSE.

There still remain four numbers of the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course and the purchase of a ticket at One Dollar, is a good bargain. The next lecture will be Tuesday evening, February 14, at the Board of Trade Auditorium. The entire list as follows:

Geo. R. Kirkpatrick, "The Present Class Struggle," February 28.

John W. Slayton, "Unionism and Socialism," March 7.

Fred and May Strickland, "The Socialist Party," March 14.

Season tickets have been placed with the Ward Branches for sale or may be obtained at City Headquarters, 184½ South High Street. Each purchaser of a ticket will receive the Chicago Daily Socialist for four months, in addition to the enjoyment to be derived from the five evenings of entertainment and instructions.

CHEER UP, COMRADE!

Yes, brother, you may think that you are marooned on the rock-bound island of Drudge, in the midst of a Sargasso-like Sea of Capitalism, and you think oft repeated times that to attempt to get to the mainland, out across that derelict-ridden ocean of despair, adrift with hulks of humanity, abrim with the mob of the miserable flotsam and jetsam, that the tide of the panic has floated in, and enmeshed by the green, slimy tentacles of the Seaweeds of Ignorance and a-cluster with the barnacles of poverty, that it is too much of a task, and I see you turn as if to give up the watch for the flame of hope that you have waited for all of these long, weary years.

But, no! You catch a ray of light through the darkness, and as you look again you behold the arm of progress aloft in the lighthouse of brotherhood, holding the signal flame that flashes you a message from the promised land of economic freedom.

So don't give up, brother mine, for the mighty knowledge of economics that has been instilled into the minds of the multitude throughout the entire civilized (?) world will bear fruit and you will be freed from your "island," freed from the shackles of the modern industrial penitentiary, that separates you from your dear ones most of the twenty-four hours of the day, and this fruit of the tree of knowledge will give you and I, and all of us, strength that will enable us to brush away the sea-fogs of superstition from our eyes, and, when we glance—the ocean will be safe for all, the derelicts removed, and in place of our cluttered Sea of Capitalism we shall see from our island a vision of stately forms of real men and real women, beauteous and vibrant with the tread that denotes strength—strength to meet life's gales as they come through sorrow and through acts of Nature over which we have only partial control; and we shall hear the gladsome murmur of the curling waves splashing from the Sea of Socialism.

Now Get Busy!

The Socialist Wants 10,000 More Subscribers in Columbus Right Away.

The Workers in "The Storm Center Of Socialism" Have A Chance To Make Good.

All That Is Needed Is "A Long Pull, A Strong Pull, and A Pull Altogether."

The Socialist Makes Fair Proposition To Secure The Co-Operation Of All For The Next Campaign.

READ EVERY WORD OF OUR OFFER.

The Socialist wishes to co-operate with the City Central Committee, the Ward Branches and the precinct workers of the Socialist party of Columbus in educating the voters and organizing our forces so that we may reap the full benefit of our educational work.

We believe that one of the most effective means of educating the workers and of propagating Socialism is through the columns of a good Socialist paper. The paper goes each week into the home and carries some message, some truth, to each of its readers. While we make no apology for our paper, we are determined that each issue shall be an improvement over the previous one.

The subscription list is the life of any paper. Without it, it dies. We want at least 10,000 subscribers on our books before the campaign opens. We must have them if The Socialist is to be the power for good that it should be in the fight of 1911 in Columbus, "the Storm Center of Socialism."

OUR PLAN.

Here is our plan to put money into the treasuries of the City Central Committee and of the Ward Branches for use in organization and propaganda work, as they may determine:

1. We will pay to each Ward Branch 12½ per cent. of all money for subscriptions collected and turned in by its members to The Socialist.

2. We will pay over to the treasury of the City Central Committee of Local Columbus 12½ per cent. of all money collected and paid in by the Ward Branches for subscriptions to The Socialist.

LIST OF PRIZES.

As Prizes or special rewards for the workers we offer the following:

1. To the Branch turning in the largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, in proportion to membership of the Branch in good standing, we will give $75 in books, to be selected by the Branch, or in money.

2. To the Branch turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, under the foregoing conditions, we will give $50 in books or money.

3. To the Branch turning in the third largest amount of money on subscriptions as stated we will give $25 in books or money.

INDIVIDUAL REWARDS.

1. To the individual turning in the largest amount of money on subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $25 in gold.

2. To the individual turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $15 in gold.

3. To the individual who turns in the third largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $10 in gold.

CONDITIONS.

The only conditions we impose in this contest are that the members of Branches will get all their sub. cards from the literature or special agent of their respective Branches and that this agent will at all times have on hand a supply of sub. cards and make returns to The Socialist of all subscriptions received not later than Wednesday of each week. Sub. cards will be supplied by this office at any time. This contest will be limited to Branches and Locals in Franklin County.

This Contest Began On Saturday, Feb. 11, and Will Close Tuesday, November 7, 1911

Information as to details of this contest will be cheerfully furnished by this office.

COUNCILMEN ARE DODGING.

That conditions were "shocking," "awful," "horrible" and "disgraceful," etc., were admissions quickly made and with fervor by members of city council when they were piloted, on an automobile trip, about the city tenements Friday afternoon of last week, so that they could appreciate the need of a tenement code. BUT, after agreeing that matters were as bad as they could be in many places, some of the councilmen Saturday said they would be unwilling to vote for the tenement code. Some of those most emotional in expressing horror over what was found were afterwards the most emphatic in protests against the code.

Councilmen had so far recovered from their trip through the tenements that they again dodged the housing code at the regular session on Monday night. Some members are quoted as declaring that the new code is too severe in its restrictions upon builders, and others that "it is a shame that a code to correct conditions can not be passed that would not interfere with anybody." The health department comes in for much blame because of the unsanitary conditions found in the quarters where the poorer people are obliged to live. There is an evident purpose on the part of councilmen to side-step responsibility. The health officials come back by saying that the present laws are inadequate to enforce healthy and decent regulations. It was ever thus. Legislators, city, state or national, always are more ready to listen to the protests of the "interests" than of the people. Columbus councilmen were "horrified" when they visited the rookeries and shacks that they found inhabited by swarms of human beings. One member of council exclaimed: "We all ought to go back and resign." Next day they were talking about consulting builders and property owners before deciding how to vote. Whose representatives are these councilmen? The general idea is that they represent the people, but when any progressive measure is proposed that will "interfere with anybody," they always want to consult the men who profit by the evil conditions. Under a Socialist regime the first consideration would be the betterment of the surroundings of the real people, the workers. By the way, some good people in Cincinnati had a shock the other day when the names of 300 owners of property, declared to be used for questionable purposes, were read aloud by Secretary L. A. Watson, of the Cincinnati Vigilance Society, in his report on social purity conditions at a meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, composed of all the Protestant preachers of the city, the other day. The names of owners included noted philanthropists, legislators, judges, doctors, attorneys and even charitable institutions. Ministers listening to the recital were shocked from time to time as the names of their own parishioners were read from the list. We wonder how a list of the owners of such property as the councilmen found in this city would look. It may be published before long.

WHAT MILLIONAIRE AND SOCIAL LEADER SAYS

"The seed of our social system, which has reached its flower in the idle rich, was planted in the too fertile soil of American industry. It is watered with the bloody sweat of labor and the salted tears of bitter poverty and suffering. It is fertilized with the dead bodies of men and women outworn in the grim battle of life. Tended and watched it is by a foul horde of underlings, hired judges in the law, panderers in politics, prostitution in the pulpits, lickspittles in college chancellories, Judases in the press, blackmailers in business, and miserable time-serving parasites, clinging like leeches upon the administrative bodies of the nation.

"This nation is betrayed. Can any thinking man say that the growth of this system could have been possible without criminal negligence on the part of those public servants sworn to guard the true and lawful interests of the people of the nation?

"The exercise of the people's power through statesmen is curbed, directed and controlled by groups of money interests.

"America, then, is a plutocracy."—Frederick Townsend Martin, in Everybodys' Magazine.

THE NEWPORT OF THE WEST

Six society girls of Akron were guests at a St. Valentine's Day dinner, at which an ape occupied the chair of honor.

The ape was Consul, dignified with the added title of educated chimpanzee. The girls were Miss Lucy Sawyer, daughter of Akron's mayor; Miss Evelyn Church, daughter of President A. B. Church, of Buchtel college; Miss Lorene Wannamaker, daughter of Judge R. M. Wannamaker; Miss Adele Carpenter, Miss Pauline Risch and Miss Mary Waters. The chaperons were Mrs. W. T. Sawyer, wife of the mayor, and Mrs. R. M. Newton. The dinner, served in a private dining-room of the Garfield hotel about four o'clock in the afternoon, is the talk of social Akron. Society women hardly know whether to feel slighted or grateful because they were not invited. Consul, in dinner garb, displayed most correct manners in dining with the young women, who were attired in party gowns. Only once did he exhibit a tendency to show ill breeding. That was when a waiter approached with mock turtle soup that Consul thought too hot. He protested slightly when the steaming dish was placed before him, but objected more strenuously when the hot substance burned his mouth. In monkey language, the guests insist, the big ape called for ice cream, but was pacified with a drink of water. Before the luncheon a reception was held, William T. Grover, who is entertaining Consul, introducing the ladies to the chimpanzee, who bowed politely and shook hands all around. At dinner all the ladies faced Consul, who was in his best of moods. Consul dined rather sparingly, as he had a late breakfast. He drank water with sugar in it, and he doted on the ice cream. Very daintily he held his glass and spoon in his hand, and he ate with the same ease and gracefulness as his entertainers. When it would have been time for cigars, had there been men present, Consul offered an apology to the ladies and lighted a cigaret.

The glorious Buckeye State is steadily approaching the high plane of civilization which has been reached at Newport, and other places, where the idle rich endeavor to create high ideals and lofty examples of advancement.

SOCIALISM AND THE INDIVIDUAL.

No, we are not going to destroy individual rights under Socialism. It is the present system that robs the individual of his liberties. The fundamental right is the right to be suitably employed and to receive each one his entire social share of the product. Without that right, brother worker, you are robbed.

But, when that right is established, remember that permanent employment under a just social order means also the opportunity for leisure. It is only the necessary work of feeding, clothing, housing, warming and making ourselves comfortable that we will attempt to do by social action. All other work will fall under the head of intellectual, esthetic or ethical, and will be left to the individual. And there will be the necessary time and equipment, so that each one may truly express himself in the fields of individual labor.

Then, dear brother, you will become something more than a mere stomach with feeding appendages. You will become a human being, and you will follow the particular line of individual effort which is most pleasing to you. Such a condition would certainly not reduce us all to a "dead level." We are pretty nearly on the dead level now.

Your heart and your head will not have much chance as long as it takes all your waking hours merely to provide yourself with the physical necessities of life. When there is neither want nor the fear of want, when there is leisure as well as work for all the able-bodied, and when the young, the aged and the unfortunate are adequately provided for, without a demoralizing charity, then will the individual have the real chance to be himself or herself.

Frederick Guy Strickland.

A VERY DEADLY PARALLEL

Yesterday, while former President Charles W. Eliot, of Harvard, was declaring that every woman should bear one child every two years between the ages of 24 and 40, a starving little girl was found lying beside the body of her mother, who had starved to death in a New York City hovel, the father of the family being ill with consumption in the Bellevue hospital; a young mother of 22 years killed herself to escape the slow starvation which had overtaken the family; a Yonkers mother was offering her baby to any family that would feed it, this being impossible for her to do, and a man was arrested on the water front for holding up a tobacconist to procure money for his destitute family.

It is announced that Prof. F. A. McKenzie, professor of Economics and Sociology at the Ohio State University, has given his written endorsement of the objects and aims of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society. Prof. McKenzie has long been known as a man of broad views and deep scholarship. His action is no surprise.

"JUST A JOKE."

The practical joker is at work. One morning recently a High street store was besieged by a throng of young women, who gathered in response to an advertisement offering employment to a stenographer. The ad had been inserted as a "joke" by some one who wanted to annoy the firm. Another alleged "joke" was perpetrated Tuesday, when an ad appeared in the evening papers for a colored porter and the wages offered were $12.50 per week. Applicants were asked to call at a printing office near the City Hall. Before supper time thirty-five colored men were lined up inside the office and more were outside. Late into the night and by daylight the next day colored men visited the office indicated by scores. No porter was needed. It was a "joke" directed at the proprietor of the printing office. Such things are cruel and only emphasize the necessity for a fool killer.

RATHER BIG PROFIT

A gentleman who visited the West Rushville gas and oil field, last week, discovered that the company which owns the gas wells in that field gets 5 cents per 1000 cubic feet for gas supplied to the Columbus companies, who sell it to private consumers at 30 cents per 1000 cubic feet. Pretty good margin for profit, isn't it? But the attorneys for the companies say that the people can "take it or leave it, meaning, of course, that you can pay the price demanded or go without it.

Reactionary members of the Columbus city council sidetracked the public playgrounds system Monday night by having the ordinance fixing salaries for the system referred to the judiciary committee, where it is the avowed purpose to smother the measure. Councilman George Harper, whose "platform" declares for playgrounds, voted to refer the ordinance to an unfriendly committee.

The chief argument used in the opposition to the department by Councilmen Heintz and Mahanna is that playgrounds and the like are unnecessary, that such institutions did not exist in the days when they were boys, and that it can't be seen where the present generation of adults could be improved in any way. The opponents of playgrounds overlook the fact that conditions have changed greatly in cities in the last twenty-five years, and they also seem to have forgotten what they beheld when they visited the squalid tenements last week.

The Daily News last Monday published an elaborate interview with Florizel Smith, who has recently returned from an extensive tour in Germany. That gentleman praises the excellent municipal methods in use in the pricipal cities of the Fatherland. Nowhere, however, does he state the fact that almost all of these cities are under the control of the Socialists, so far as local affairs are concerned. In fact, the "model" cities of continental Europe owe their beauty and fame to the progressive program of Socialism.

The ministers of the Protestant churches of Columbus had a fine time, last Monday, in discussing the matter of inviting the Rev. Billy Sunday to hold a series of meetings here. Some of the pastors were very outspoken in condemning Sunday's methods. It appears that Billy is booked ahead until 1912, and the Arch City may have to continue on the road to hades for another year. It is also given out that before Sunday opens his batteries on a town he has detectives work up evidence as to the habits and characteristics of the prominent men of the place. They sure would find material in Columbus.

There appears to be an epidemic of "charity balls" prevalent in Columbus. This spirit of feudal benevolence extends into China. Recently one of the monthly magazines gave out the news that Deacon Morgan was after Chinese bonds. He appears to have secured them, for this notice appears on the windows of a local bank: "Depository for Chinese famine funds."

It should be noted by Socialists that on November 7 of this year the electors of Ohio will elect delegates to a constitutional convention, which will assemble January 9, 1912, to draft a new organic basis for the laws of Ohio. This will afford a splendid opportunity for the advocacy of the principles of Socialism.

The report comes regularly and persistently that the motormen and conductors employed on the streetcars of Columbus are organizing, with the intention of demanding better conditions and more pay. It is not strange that they should be doing so. Human flesh and blood cannot endure everything.

Bachman will deliver an address and some excellent music will be on the program. Refreshments will be served, and tickets are selling at 10 cents. The Eleventh Ward Branch members are a hustling lot and are booming things. Every Socialist in the city should invest at least 10 cents in this entertainment.

OUR INDUSTRIAL PROBLEMS.

Richardson Makes Plain Their True Basis.

The second lecture of The Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course, Tuesday evening, at Board of Trade auditorium, was given by Comrade N. A. Richardson, of California, on "The Basis of Our Industrial Problem."

National Organizer Ella Reeve Bloor gave a brief talk upon the necessity of women organizing in the interest of home and children. Comrade Richardson's address was a concise treatment of the history of the age-long struggle for subsistence, starting with the savage, traced through barbarism, slavery, serfdom, to the wage slavery of today. The basis of the present capitalist system was laid when the barbarian found that it was better to put war captives to work than to eat them. Step by step, period by period, the speaker followed the progress of the centuries and the constant prevalence of the principle of profit and exploitation. Labor has never received more than enough to feed and clothe the laborer and reproduce himself. With mathematical exactness he showed that the working class today averaged $2 per day out of $10 produced, and that the capitalistic parties were simply fighting over the other $8. He closed by urging that the Socialist must teach the lesson of economic truth, each man to his neighbor and fellow-worker. The address was replete with solid facts, keen satire, ready wit and convincing argument.

I have a big bargain in a 16-R., modern, double pressed brick, within 3 squares of Ohio State University, South, at $5600. Palmer, 384 W. Eighth Ave.

THE SOCIALIST LYCEUM COURSE.

There still remain four numbers of the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course and the purchase of a ticket at One Dollar, is a good bargain. The next lecture will be Tuesday evening, February 14, at the Board of Trade Auditorium. The entire list as follows:

Geo. R. Kirkpatrick, "The Present Class Struggle," February 28.

John W. Slayton, "Unionism and Socialism," March 7.

Season tickets have been placed with the Ward Branches for sale or may be obtained at City Headquarters, 184½ South High Street. Each purchaser of a ticket will receive the Chicago Daily Socialist for four months, in addition to the enjoyment to be derived from the five evenings of entertainment and instructions.

CHEER UP, COMRADE!

Yes, brother, you may think that you are marooned on the rock-bound island of Drudge, in the midst of a Sargosso-like Sea of Capitalism, and you think oft repeated times that to attempt to get to the mainland, out across that derelict-ridden ocean of despair, adrift with hulks of humanity, abrim with the mob of the miserable flotsam and jetsam, that the tide of the panic has floated in, and enmeshed by the green, slimy tentacles of the Seaweeds of Ignorance and a-cluster with the barnacles of poverty, that it is too much of a task, and I see you turn as if to give up the watch for the flame of hope that you have waited for all of these long, weary years.

But, no! You catch a ray of light through the darkness, and as you look again you behold the arm of progress aloft in the lighthouse of brotherhood, holding the signal flame that flashes you a message from the promised land of economic freedom.

So don't give up, brother mine, for the mighty knowledge of economics that has been instilled into the minds of the multitude throughout the entire civilized (?) world will bear fruit and you will be freed from your "island," freed from the shackles of the modern industrial penitentiary, that separates you from your dear ones most of the twenty-four hours of the day, and this fruit of the tree of knowledge will give you and I, and all of us, strength that will enable us to brush away the sea-fogs of superstition from our eyes, and, when we glance—the ocean will be safe for all, the derelicts removed, and in place of our cluttered Sea of Capitalism we shall see from our island a vision of stately forms of real men and real women, beauteous and vibrant with the tread that denotes strength—strength to meet life's gales as they come through sorrow and through acts of Nature over which we have only partial control; and we shall hear the gladsome murmur of the curling waves splashing from the Sea of Socialism.

Now Get Busy!

The Socialist Wants 10,000 More Subscribers in Columbus Right Away.

The Workers in "The Storm Center Of Socialism" Have A Chance To Make Good.

All That Is Needed Is "A Long Pull, A Strong Pull, and A Pull Altogether."

The Socialist Makes Fair Proposition To Secure The Co-Operation Of All For The Next Campaign.

READ EVERY WORD OF OUR OFFER.

The Socialist wishes to co-operate with the City Central Committee, the Ward Branches and the precinct workers of the Socialist party of Columbus in educating the voters and organizing our forces so that we may reap the full benefit of our educational work.

We believe that one of the most effective means of educating the workers and of propagating Socialism is through the columns of a good Socialist paper. The paper goes each week into the home and carries some message, some truth, to each of its readers. While we make no apology for our paper, we are determined that each issue shall be an improvement over the previous one.

The subscription list is the life of any paper. Without it, it dies. We want at least 10,000 subscribers on our books before the campaign opens. We must have them if The Socialist is to be the power for good that it should be in the fight of 1911 in Columbus, "the Storm Center of Socialism."

OUR PLAN.

Here is our plan to put money into the treasuries of the City Central Committee and of the Ward Branches for use in organization and propaganda work, as they may determine:

1. We will pay to each Ward Branch 12½ per cent. of all money for subscriptions collected and turned in by its members to The Socialist.

2. We will pay over to the treasury of the City Central Committee of Local Columbus 12½ per cent. of all money collected and paid in by the Ward Branches for subscriptions to The Socialist.

LIST OF PRIZES.

As Prizes or special rewards for the workers we offer the following:

1. To the Branch turning in the largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, in proportion to membership of the Branch in good standing, we will give $75 in books, to be selected by the Branch, or in money.

2. To the Branch turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, under the foregoing conditions, we will give $50 in books or money.

3. To the Branch turning in the third largest amount of money on subscriptions as stated we will give $25 in books or money.

INDIVIDUAL REWARDS.

1. To the individual turning in the largest amount of money on subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $25 in gold.

2. To the individual turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $15 in gold.

3. To the individual who turns in the third largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $10 in gold.

CONDITIONS.

The only conditions we impose in this contest are that the members of Branches will get all their sub. cards from the literature or special agent of their respective Branches and that this agent will at all times have on hand a supply of sub. cards and make returns to The Socialist of all subscriptions received not later than Wednesday of each week. Sub. cards will be supplied by this office at any time. This contest will be limited to Branches and Locals in Franklin County.

This Contest Began On Saturday, Feb. 11, and Will Close Tuesday, November 7, 1911

Information as to details of this contest will be cheerfully furnished by this office.

COUNCILMEN ARE DODGING.

That conditions were "shocking," "awful," "horrible" and "disgraceful," etc., were admissions quickly made and with fervor by members of city council when they were piloted, on an automobile trip, about the city tenements Friday afternoon of last week, so that they could appreciate the need of a tenement code. BUT, after agreeing that matters were as bad as they could be in many places, some of the councilmen Saturday said they would be unwilling to vote for the tenement code. Some of those most emotional in expressing horror over what was found were afterwards the most emphatic in protests against the code.

Councilmen had so far recovered from their trip through the tenements that they again dodged the housing code at the regular session on Monday night. Some members are quoted as declaring that the new code is too severe in its restrictions upon builders, and others that "it is a shame that a code to correct conditions can not be passed that would not interfere with anybody." The health department comes in for much blame because of the unsanitary conditions found in the quarters where the poorer people are obliged to live. There is an evident purpose on the part of councilmen to side-step responsibility. The health officials come back by saying that the present laws are inadequate to enforce healthy and decent regulations. It was ever thus. Legislators, city, state or national, always are more ready to listen to the protests of the "interests" than of the people. Columbus councilmen were "horrified" when they visited the rookeries and shacks that they found inhabited by swarms of human beings. One member of council exclaimed: "We all ought to go back and resign." Next day they were talking about consulting builders and property owners before deciding how to vote. Whose representatives are these councilmen? The general idea is that they represent the people, but when any progressive measure is proposed that will "interfere with anybody" they always want to consult the men who profit by the evil conditions. Under a Socialist regime the first consideration would be the betterment of the surroundings of the real people, the workers. By the way, some good people in Cincinnati had a shock the other day when the names of 300 owners of property, declared to be used for questionable purposes, were read aloud by Secretary L. A. Watson, of the Cincinnati Vigilance Society, in his report on social purity conditions at a meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, composed of all the Protestant preachers of the city, the other day. The names of owners included noted philanthropists, legislators, judges, doctors, attorneys and even charitable institutions. Ministers listening to the recital were shocked from time to time as the names of their own parishioners were read from the list. We wonder how a list of the owners of such property as the councilmen found in this city would look. It may be published before long.

WHAT MILLIONAIRE AND SOCIAL LEADER SAYS

"The seed of our social system, which has reached its flower in the idle rich, was planted in the too fertile soil of American industry. It is watered with the bloody sweat of labor and the salted tears of bitter poverty and suffering. It is fertilized with the dead bodies of men and women outworn in the grim battle of life. Tended and watched it is by a foul horde of underlings, hired judges in the law, panderers in politics, prostitution in the pulpits, lickspittles in college chancellories, Judases in the press, blackmailers in business, and miserable time-serving parasites, clinging like leeches upon the administrative bodies of the nation.

"This nation is betrayed. Can any thinking man say that the growth of this system could have been possible without criminal negligence on the part of those public servants sworn to guard the true and lawful interests of the people of the nation?

"The exercise of the people's power through statesmen is curbed, directed and controlled by groups of money interests.

"America, then, is a plutocracy."—Frederick Townsend Martin, in Everybodys' Magazine.

THE NEWPORT OF THE WEST

Six society girls of Akron were guests at a St. Valentine's Day dinner, at which an ape occupied the chair of honor.

The ape was Consul, dignified with the added title of educated chimpanzee. The girls were Miss Lucy Sawyer, daughter of Akron's mayor; Miss Evelyn Church, daughter of President A. B. Church, of Buchtel college; Miss Lorene Wannamaker, daughter of Judge R. M. Wannamaker; Miss Adele Carpenter, Miss Pauline Risch and Miss Mary Waters. The chaperons were Mrs. W. T. Sawyer, wife of the mayor, and Mrs. R. M. Newton. The dinner, served in a private dining-room of the Garfield hotel about four o'clock in the afternoon, is the talk of social Akron. Society women hardly know whether to feel slighted or grateful because they were not invited. Consul, in dinner garb, displayed most correct manners in dining with the young women, who were attired in party gowns. Only once did he exhibit a tendency to show ill breeding. That was when a waiter approached with mock turtle soup that Consul thought too hot. He protested slightly when the steaming dish was placed before him, but objected more strenuously when the hot substance burned his mouth. In monkey language, the guests insist, the big ape called for ice cream, but was pacified with a drink of water. Before the luncheon a reception was held, William T. Grover, who is entertaining Consul, introducing the ladies to the chimpanzee, who bowed politely and shook hands all around. At dinner all the ladies faced Consul, who was in his best of moods. Consul dined rather sparingly, as he had a late breakfast. He drank water with sugar in it, and he doted on the ice cream. Very daintily he held his glass and spoon in his hand, and he ate with the same ease and gracefulness as his entertainers. When it would have been time for cigars, had there been men present, Consul offered an apology to the ladies and lighted a cigaret.

The glorious Buckeye State is steadily approaching the high plane of civilization which has been reached at Newport, and other places, where the idle rich endeavor to create high ideals and lofty examples of advancement.

SOCIALISM AND THE INDIVIDUAL.

No, we are not going to destroy individual rights under Socialism. It is the present system that robs the individual of his liberties. The fundamental right is the right to be suitably employed and to receive each one his entire social share of the product. Without that right, brother worker, you are robbed.

But, when that right is established, remember that permanent employment under a just social order means also the opportunity for leisure. It is only the necessary work of feeding, clothing, housing, warming and making ourselves comfortable that we will attempt to do by social action. All other work will fall under the head of intellectual, esthetic or ethical, and will be left to the individual. And there will be the necessary time and equipment, so that each one may truly express himself in the fields of individual labor.

Then, dear brother, you will become something more than a mere stomach with feeding appendages. You will become a human being, and you will follow the particular line of individual effort which is most pleasing to you. Such a condition would certainly not reduce us all to a "dead level." We are pretty nearly on the dead level now.

Your heart and your head will not have much chance as long as it takes all your waking hours merely to provide yourself with the physical necessities of life. When there is neither want nor the fear of want, when there is leisure as well as work for all the able-bodied, and when the young, the aged and the unfortunate are adequately provided for, without a demoralizing charity, then will the individual have the real chance to be himself or herself.

Frederick Guy Strickland.

A VERY DEADLY PARALLEL

Yesterday, while former President Charles W. Eliot, of Harvard, was declaring that every woman should bear one child every two years between the ages of 24 and 40, a starving little girl was found lying beside the body of her mother, who had starved to death in a New York City hovel, the father of the family being ill with consumption in the Bellevue hospital; a young mother of 22 years killed herself to escape the slow starvation which had overtaken the family; a Yonkers mother was offering her baby to any family that would feed it, this being impossible for her to do, and a man was arrested on the water front for holding up a tobacconist to procure money for his destitute family.

It is announced that Prof. F. A. McKenzie, professor of Economics and Sociology at the Ohio State University, has given his written endorsement of the objects and aims of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society. Prof. McKenzie has long been known as a man of broad views and deep scholarship. His action is no surprise.

"JUST A JOKE,"

The practical joker is at work. One morning recently a High street store was besieged by a throng of young women, who gathered in response to an advertisement offering employment to a stenographer. The ad had been inserted as a "joke" by some one who wanted to annoy the firm. Another alleged "joke" was perpetrated Tuesday, when an ad appeared in the evening papers for a colored porter and the wages offered were $12.50 per week. Applicants were asked to call at a printing office near the City Hall. Before supper time thirty-five colored men were lined up inside the office and more were outside. Late into the night and by daylight the next day colored men visited the office indicated by scores. No porter was needed. It was a "joke" directed at the proprietor of the printing office. Such things are cruel and only emphasize the necessity for a fool killer.

RATHER BIG PROFIT

A gentleman who visited the West Rushville gas and oil field, last week, discovered that the company which owns the gas wells in that field gets 5 cents per 1000 cubic feet for gas supplied to the Columbus companies, who sell it to private consumers at 30 cents per 1000 cubic feet. Pretty good margin for profit, isn't it? But the attorneys for the companies say that the people can "take it or leave it, meaning, of course, that you can pay the price demanded or go without it.

Reactionary members of the Columbus city council sidetracked the public playgrounds system Monday night by having the ordinance fixing salaries for the system referred to the judiciary committee, where it is the avowed purpose to smother the measure. Councilman George Harper, whose "platform" declares for playgrounds, voted to refer the ordinance to an unfriendly committee.

The chief argument used in the opposition to the department by Councilmen Heintz and Mahanna is that playgrounds and the like are unnecessary, that such institutions did not exist in the days when they were boys, and that it can't be seen where the present generation of adults could be improved in any way. The opponents of playgrounds overlook the fact that conditions have changed greatly in cities in the last twenty-five years, and they also seem to have forgotten what they beheld when they visited the squalid tenements last week.

The Daily News last Monday published an elaborate interview with Florizel Smith, who has recently returned from an extensive tour in Germany. That gentleman praises the excellent municipal methods in use in the pricipal cities of the Fatherland. Nowhere, however, does he state the fact that almost all of these cities are under the control of the Socialists, so far as local affairs are concerned. In fact, the "model" cities of continental Europe owe their beauty and fame to the progressive program of Socialism.

The ministers of the Protestant churches of Columbus had a fine time, last Monday, in discussing the matter of inviting the Rev. Billy Sunday to hold a series of meetings here. Some of the pastors were very outspoken in condemning Sunday's methods. It appears that Billy is booked ahead until 1912, and the Arch City may have to continue on the road to hades for another year. It is also given out that before Sunday opens his batteries on a town he has detectives work up evidence as to the habits and characteristics of the prominent men of the place. They sure would find material in Columbus.

There appears to be an epidemic of "charity balls" prevalent in Columbus. This spirit of feudal benevolence extends into China. Recently one of the monthly magazines gave out the news that Deacon Morgan was after Chinese bonds. He appears to have secured them, for this notice appears on the windows of a local bank: "Depository for Chinese famine funds."

It should be noted by Socialists that on November 7 of this year the electors of Ohio will elect delegates to a constitutional convention, which will assemble January 9, 1912, to draft a new organic basis for the laws of Ohio. This will afford a splendid opportunity for the advocacy of the principles of Socialism.

The report comes regularly and persistently that the motormen and conductors employed on the streetcars of Columbus are organizing, with the intention of demanding better conditions and more pay. It is not strange that they should be doing so. Human flesh and blood cannot endure everything.

AN OBJECT LESSON FROM A SOCIALIST'S STANDPOINT

"Look Upon This Picture and Then Upon That."

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—The old story of American wealth and a foreign title meeting at the altar was restaged today in the marriage of Miss Helen Vivien Gold, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Jay Gould, to Lord Decies of England. In St. Bartholomew's church, before an audience that represented America and English aristocracy this 18-year-old girl and her fiance of 44 years were wedded this afternoon.

PIPE THE SPARKLERS!

The wedding presents, which were not shown to the guests, were among the most beautiful and costly ever received by a New York bride, although they did not equal those received by her sister, Marjorie, at her wedding to Anthony J. Drexel, Jr., last April. The presents represented a value of at least $100,000. The costliest was from the bride's father, the coronet of a baroness, which Lady Decies will wear at the coronation of King George. The coronet is tipped with nine pear-shaped diamonds. The father also gave the bride a long chain of diamonds, while Edwin Gould, her uncle, gave a diamond corsage ornament. Mrs. Gould gave her daughter a necklace of diamonds, a sautoir of pearls, a diamond and ruby ring and a pearl ring.

The wedding gown was of heavy white duchess satin, in semi-empire style, heavily embroidered with silver roses. The train was eight yards long. The veil was of real lace. The bride's dress was made in Paris, as was the rest of her trousseau, on which was spent, according to a reliable report, the snug little sum of $40,000.

FORTUNE FOR FLOWERS.

Ten thousand dollars' worth of flowers had turned the interior of the church into a veritable bower.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—Within a few blocks of the wealthiest section of Brooklyn, Mrs. Mara-Sidel starved to death today. Her husband, Peter Sidel, who has sacrificed himself to try to keep his wife alive, is in St. Catharine's hospital suffering from hunger and exposure. He, too, may die. The couple's baby died a few weeks ago, shortly after it was born, because its mother could not give it sufficient nourishment.

A SCENE OF POVERTY.

The police were called to 435 Bushwick avenue today. In a garret room, whose broken windows permitted the snow to sift in until it almost covered the floor, they found Mrs. Sidel lying on a bed, dead. Over her was piled the bedclothing and her husband's overcoat. Beside the bed on the floor, unconscious from exposure, lay Peter Sidel.

BABY WAS FROZEN.

At the hospital, to which he was hurried, he told his story: "I had plenty of work until last fall. Then I lost my job, and since then have struggled, oh, so hard to get another, but have failed. We were dispossessed, and sold our furniture, all but the bed and stove. Then we got this garret, and were let live here without paying rent. Two months ago our baby was born. It didn't live long and the doctors told us it starved and froze to death.

FAINTED FROM HUNGER.

"Monday I got a job as a night porter and earned $1.25, which I brought home. My wife went out to buy food and fainted on the street from weakness. They carried her up here, and I got her some food, which she ate. Maybe we ate too much for starving people."

DO RICH MEN'S SONS GO TO WAR? IF NOT, WHY NOT?

(From George Kirkpatrick's "War—What For?")

The king of Prussia and the emperor of France had a personal quarrel about who should be or who should not be the new king of Spain—which was none of their business. They got "real mad." War was declared.

The "honor" of the precious pair of parasites was at stake. Nothing but blood would wash out the stain upon their "honor." Of course, royal blood was too precious for this laundering process. "Noble blood" was, of course, not available—for such purposes.

The blood of common working-class men would do very well for these blues to do their washing in. They were too cowardly to take each a sword and a Winchester and go out behind the barn or into the woodshed and "settle" it, risking their own putrid blood. No—oh, no! The red ooze of kings and nobles is not to be wasted as long as a lot of cheap wage slaves are standing around willing to be butchered—with pride—for the experience and the honor of it.

"To the front! To the front! A million men to the front!"

Instantly a multitude of the strong men of the working class blindly rushed to the front—as ordered, and asking no more questions about the justice of the war than the cavalry horses asked.

Did the working people of France and Germany have any grudge against one another? Not the slightest. But they butchered one another by the tens of thousands.

Do rich men's sons sometimes voluntarily join the militia?

Yes, sometimes; but very, very rarely. One of the bluest-blooded Vanderbilts of New York was recently a captain in a specially handsome regiment. But, mark you—in ninety-nine cases in a hundred, well-armed, well-trained militiamen fight unarmed, untrained workingmen and women, which is not so very, very dangerous—for the militiamen. To an intelligent rich man an unarmed wage earner in strike for an extra nickel to buy bread as "the enemy," and an armed, trained soldier whose business is murder, as "the enemy"—these look different, you know.

For years New York millionaires and all the other "best people" "pointed with pride" to the famous Seventh regiment of the National Guard, the "rich man's regiment," the "gilt-edged regiment" of lovely young millionaires, many of whom rode to the armory for drill in their automobiles. This regiment of the American nobility of lard-and-tallow-steel-coal-and-railway millionaires, ready at any moment to defend and save their dear country from "the enemy," this regiment was, indeed, the pride of the village called New York. These glistening patricians taught the common people patriotism. "So they did."

Until the Spanish War broke out.

Then these fakir patriots—what did they do—then?

Resigned.

Or did what amounted to the same thing—voted not to go to the war.

Certainly, they did. Promptly, too, and intelligently.

Why not?

Surely you do not expect a lot of intelligent men to leave their happy homes, to go to hell and make themselves ridiculous, do you? Why, the cost of a rubber tire would pay the war wages of a cheap man of the "lower class" for six months.

"Didn't one millionaire go to war in Cuba?"

Yes. Out of our six thousand patriotic, flag-waving millionaires, one, just one. A young, green one went to the war in Cuba—"of a little excitement and a lark," he said. He found large quantities of excitement, "all right," he said, and some cold lead. He was killed. As a millionaire "patriotically" going to war his case is an exception, clearly an exception, a conspicuously, lonely, vain and stupid exception; and that exception will never be imitated. Too much intelligence—among the millionaires. Even his millionaire friends laughed at him for going to war. But he wanted a "hot time." He got the hot time"—and the cold lead.

There were several thousand other millionaire flag-wavers instructively conspicuous in that war—by their intelligent, patriotic absence.

It is instructively significant that the capitalist newspapers gave more than a hundred times as much space to the death of the one millionaire soldier in the Spanish-American War as they gave to the death of any hundred humble working-class soldiers who were slaughtered in the same war.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

A table of retail prices paid for food by Americans in Panama, brought to New York recently by a canal official, shows that many staple articles of diet are cheaper in Panama than in the large cities of the United States, although they are shipped from American ports at heavy expense for freight and refrigeration. American meats can be bought in Panama at from two to five cents a pound less than in Ohio, while butter and egg prices are about the same. Vegetables are a trifle lower in prices and groceries also lower.

Now, as one of our most highly respected and illustrious fakers would say, there's a reason. The United States government is the storekeeper in Panama, and even at the low prices charged for the necessaries of life down there Uncle Sam made a neat profit last year of $600,000 on sales amounting to $5,925,000. The government's subsistence department transacts the business. The supplies are purchased in quantities to last three months, and fresh vegetables are shipped from New Orleans each week.

In addition to the sale of food the government undertakes to provide for all householders. Dry goods stores are maintained and so are shoe stores and a full line of hardware, household equipment and furniture also is carried. The government also manufactures and sells ice in Panama. It takes a train of 21 cars, including 11 refrigerator cars, each day to distribute goods to the various stations of the supply system, and two tugs are used to make deliveries to points reached by water.

All this, remember, is done by the United States government down in Panama, where the problem of distribution, climatic conditions and distances considered is a much more complicated one than is to be encountered in any of our home cities.

The government could conduct an ice plant, a general store or a meat market in Columbus much more easily than it can in Panama. There is only one obstacle in the way of establishing a business of that kind in the United States. It would interfere with private graft—some people call it profit.

When we Socialists obtain control of the machinery of government, these private grafters or profit-takers will find mighty slim picking. Business will be transacted for and by all the people collectively and the high cost of living will have become only a hideous memory.

THE NEWEST ENCYCLOPEDIA AND DICTIONARY.

DEMOCRACY—A form of government where the people collectively govern by elected representatives.

Long supposed to be the form of government in the United States of America, but now found out to be a popular fallacy.

DEMOCRAT—From French, Demi, half, and English Crazy, insane—meaning half insane. NOTE—One who votes the Democratic party ticket.

REPUBLIC—A country where the monarch has either been kicked out or killed, also a country where all the old monarchial ideas are still in existence, such as "divine right," etc. Also the country in which among the idle rich the idea is firmly rooted that there always was and always will be poor people, and that they, the predatory rich, are the Creator's exclusive agents in the handling of the necessities of life.—See your capitalistic papers for confirmation of this fact.

REPUBLICAN—From Latin, Re, back, and English, Publican, one who collects tolls. Therefore, one who collects monies with his hand held behind his back. See Grafter.

SOCIALISM—A government by the workers for the workers, whether of hand or brain. Where all things used colectively shall be collectively owned and all things used privately by a worker or the members of his family shall be privately owned.

SOCIALIST—One who believes in the principles and gives all the time and money he or she can spare to educate those who, less fortunate in having had an opportunity to study Socialism, know nothing of the question; also a member of the Socialist party local, paying dues and attending meetings regularly.

MOSSBACK—One who has stayed in a rut so long that he is covered with a coating of moss both mentally and physically—formerly a term of contempt for a farmer, but at present used to distinguish those gullible workers who swallow all they hear relating to their condition from some bladder of hot air, hired for so much per diem by the Republican and Democratic parties to put in the thinks for those workers whose brains are too atrophied to realize they are being handed the hook. There are various kinds of mossbacks, a few of the common kind are carpenter mossbacks — machinist mossbacks — electrical mossbacks — plumbing mossbacks—painting mossbacks — bricklaying mossbacks — printing mossbacks, also laboring mossbacks, besides the retired mossbacks.

CITIZEN—From city, a large town and an, belonging to, belonging to a large town—One of the mob whose vote was worth from 50 cents to $10, now in some cities a stockholder in a corporation run by the big stockholders, called a commission.

P. S.—The small stockholders usually get it "where the chicken got the axe."

VOTER—One who receives a price for voting. A common occurrence in the Republican party, also the Democratic party, which has to keep up its end. Also one who took money from both old parties and voted for whom he pleased, the poor devil, thinking he was acting honestly.

NOTE—The same voters were corrupted by most of the prominent business men of those towns, who, now believe that a business administration is the old way of governing a city.—Moral: Can you draw spring water from a sewer.

BRIBE—

"Do thou but think
What 'tis to cram a maw, or clothe a back,
From such a filthy vice; say to thyself:
'From thy abominable and beastly touches
I drink, I eat, array myself and live.'
Measure for Measure III-2."

MARK TWAIN CALLED ROOSEVELT DIPOSTOR.

Humorist Said Providence Sent Him As Punishment for Nation's Sins.

Unpublished manuscripts left by the late Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) are to be sold at auction here next week. The star of the lot was written by the author March 6, 1909, and is entitled "An Article on the Inauguration of President Taft and the Deliverance of the Country from Roosevelt."

In it Twain says: "Astronomers assure us that the attraction of gravitation on the surface of the sun is twenty-eight times as powerful as is the force at the earth's surface, and that the object which weighs 217 pounds elsewhere would weigh 6000 pounds here. For seven years this country has lain smothering under a burden like that, the incubus representing in the person of President Roosevelt the difference between 217 pounds and 6000. Thanks be, we got rid of this disastrous burden day before yesterday, at last. Forever? Probably not. Probably for only a brief breathing spell, wherein under Taft we may hope to get back some of our health.

"In four years we may expect to have Roosevelt sitting on us again with his twenty-eight times the weight of any other presidential burden that a hostile Providence could impose upon us for our sins.

"Our people have adored this showy charlatan as perhaps no impostor of his breed has been adored since the Golden Calf; so that it is to be expected that the nation will want him back again after he is done hunting other wild animals heroically in Africa, with the safeguards and advertising equipment of a park of artillery and a brass band."

SOCIALISTS IN ACTION.

News From The World Wide Movement Of The Workers.

NEWS FROM THE NATIONAL SOCIALIST HEADQUARTERS

In the Mexican border states, where the citizens are best acquainted with the facts of the conflict between troops of the Mexican government and the revolutionists, monster meetings are being held by Socialists, trade unionists and citizens of all classes, expressing sympathy for the Mexican revolutionists and protesting against United States troops being sent to the border, also demanding belligerency rights for the Mexican revolutionists.

Comrade Wallace D. Wattles died on February 7, at Ruskin, Tenn., and was buried at his home, Elwood, Ind., on February 10. The Socialist local was in charge of the funeral services. Universal respect was shown, even the business houses closing two hours in the afternoon. Comrade Fred G. Strickland delivered the funeral address. Wallace D. Wattles was well known as a lecturer in the Socialist party in the Middle States. He served Indiana actively for one year as organiser. He was a recognized author and short story writer. He was associated with the original group called Social Crusaders.

On February 14 nominations for members of the Woman's National Committee closed. Under date of the 15th, report was made to the National Committee of all nominees having received five or more nominations, the number required to place a candidate's name on the ballot. All qualified nominees were supplied with a copy of the report and notified by personal letter. Acceptances and declinations will remain open until February 24. The names of nominees not heard from on or before that date will not appear on the ballot. A complete list, of all nominations will appear in the February issue of the Official Monthly Bulletin.

The following comrades have accepted the nomination for member of the Woman's National Committee: Carrie W. Allen, New York City; Ella Reeve Bloor, Waterbury, Conn.; Winnie Branstetter, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Octavia Floaten, Denver, Colo.; Bertha M. Fraser, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Ida Crouch-Hazlett, Lewistown, Mont.; Selma Jokela, Smithville, Minn.; Antoinette Konikow, Malden, Mass.; Lena Morrow Lewis, San Francisco, Cal.; Caroline A. Lowe, Chicago, Ill.; Theresa Malkiel, Yonkers, N. Y.; Kate Richards O'Hare, Kansas City, Kan.; May Wood-Simons, Girard, Kan.; May Strickland, Anderson, Ind.

The following comrades have declined the nomination for member of the Woman's National Committee: Grace D. Brewer, Girard, Kan.; Corinne Brown, Chicago, Ill.; Harriet D'Orsay, West Lynn, Mass.; Janet Fenimore, Anderson, Ind.; Bertha H. Mailly, New York City; Sarah S. Perkins, Boston, Mass.; Rose Pastor Stokes, Stamford, Conn.; Florence Wattles, Elwood, Ind.; Marion Craig Wentworth, Salem, Mass.

In the Chicago municipal campaign, or rather in the race for the nomination at the primaries for a candidate for mayor, the usual issues of big business are the only ones in evidence among the old party contestants. But so flagrant has become the use of money by the transportation companies, the telephone, gas and hog-killing interests that the Chicago Tribune, on the 17th inst., printed the following in large letters at the head of the first page:

"The attention of every voter in Chicago is called to an editorial in the Tribune of today, entitled 'Who Is Putting UP?' The editorial proceeds: 'Who Is Putting Up?' The intelligent but forceful question—Who Is Putting Up?—is the most vital interrogation point before the voters of Chicago today. Nine citizens are hunting three nominations for mayor: three Democrats, five Republicans, one Socialist. The latter candidate can be eliminated in the discussion of this question. We all know that sweat and blood furnish the campaign funds with which his (the Socialist's) party fights its battles. But what about the other eight? Who Is Putting Up?"

GENERAL SOCIALIST NEWS.

In the recall city election in Seattle, Wash., last week, the Socialists polled close to 6000 votes. Their showing was a "surprise," the dailies said. Sure! Lot more surprises coming.

The brother of General Madero, who is leading the revolution in Mexico, declares that when Diaz is overthrown free press and free speech will be guaranteed. He also says that all Socialists in Mexico are fighting under the revolutionary flag.

Jack London, the well-known Socialist and dare-devil author, is reported to be fighting in Mexico on the side of the insurgents. If he meets any of those strikebreakers and gun men from Colorado, the immediate neighborhood will be kept warm.

The elections in Finland are now finished. The total Socialist vote amounts to 321,000 (5000 more than last time), while that of all the bourgeois parties together is 480,000. There is no doubt that a sharp conflict with the Russian government will at once begin.

Leo Deutsch, the bold and daring fighter, whose entire life has been dedicated to the service of the proletarian revolution in the dominions of the Czar, one of the founders of the Russian Social Democracy, an irreconcilable rebel, an unselfish, modest and unassuming martyr to the cause of freedom, has arrived in this country and is speaking to immense crowds in the Eastern cities. He will probably make a tour through the country.

Simon Wing, the first Socialist candidate for President of the United States, died in Boston at the ripe old age of 84. He was the candidate of the S. L. P. in 1892, and polled 21,164 votes. Wing was a fine old gentleman, with a great heart and unlimited sympathies for the working class. He was the inventor of many photographic devices, chief among them the multiplying camera. But few people, however, know him as an inventor. He was a useful citizen in society and passed to his long rest admired and respected by all who knew him.

Cables from Berlin either misstated the facts or daily newspapers on this side garbled them. It was stated that Paul Singer's funeral, while the largest demonstration that ever took place in Berlin, was witnessed by 50,000 people and that 10,000 took part in the procession. Somewhere a cipher was dropped from the figures, as the number who marched in the funeral procession was fully 100,000, while 500,000 more people were on the streets as spectators. The passing of Singer has caused some of the papers to express the opinion that the opportunist wing of the Socialist party will become predominant, but such is not the case, as those who are regarded as the active leaders of the party are of one accord in declaring that there will be absolutely no material change in the policies of the movement, which has grown to its present immense power by adhering strictly to working class interests without compromise.

Dr. Albert Suedekim, Socialist member of the German parliament, has returned to the Fatherland after making a three months' lecturing tour under the auspices of various civic bodies in this country. Before sailing for Europe Dr. Suedekim declared that "the year 1911 will be a decisive year in the history of the Socialist movement of Germany, and of the world. The election to the Reichstag, which takes place next fall, will show the world that the Socialist party of Germany has the majority of voters in the Fatherland behind it. We expect a tremendous victory at the polls at the next election." Dr. Suedekim said the full strength of the Socialist party has never been revealed to the masses in the United States. "You, here," he added, "judge the strength of the Socialist movement in Germany most universally by the number of members in the German Reichstag. Now this alone is a great deal, for we have 53 Socialists in the Reichstag. But this is not all of the strength of Socialism by any means. In addition to the 53 members in the Reichstag we have about 200 Socialists in the various Diets, or state parliaments. Then we have nearly 6000 Socialist representatives in the various city and town councils. These latter Socialist representatives are doing great work for Socialism. Whatever advance Germany has made over other countries in labor legislation, in the solution of the housing problem, in the checking of infant mortality, was made largely through influence of the Socialist representatives."

SOCIALISTS WIN SUIT.

Milwaukee Administration Saves the City Over $200,000.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Feb. 18.—An important suit was decided in favor of the city, in Judge Tarrant's court Monday.

Several years ago the city built the First avenue viaduct. Before work was begun, and to expedite the same, Alderman Koerner stated that he had releases from all of the property owners in his pocket.

Later on, suits were started aggregating $234,000 damages, asked by the several owners in the valley crossed by the viaduct. This notwithstanding that a gradual incline has been built from the valley below to the viaduct above giving easy access to the same. In fact, it is much easier to get to the surface from the valley below than it was before the viaduct was built.

The first suit started was by the Pabst Brewing Company, and the jury awarded them a verdict for $4800 damages to a saloon property in the valley. A motion for a new trial in this case has been made, and will probably be granted.

The second suit was by the Grom Coal Company, which asked $30,000 damages to its property. In its employ were a combination of the best legal talent of the city, against which appeared Assistant City Attorney Williams, who fought the city's case single-handed. The resulting verdict is a feather in Mr. William's cap, of which he may well be proud.

How these companies can imagine that they have been damaged by the building of the viaduct is beyond the average mind. It looks altogether too much as if it were a part of the capitalist game to mulct the people at every opportunity and as if Alderman Koerner's statement at the time was made to pull the wool over the remaining aldermen's eyes by making them believe that everything had been arranged to safeguard the city.

It looks as if, had not the Socialist administration, with its business-like city attorney's office, intervened, these and many other suits against the city would have been easy.

Yes, from the capitalist standpoint, the Socialist administration is a most miserable failure to conserve the interests of the capitalists—a most abject failure to provide for them, as had been customery.

AN IMPORTANT POINT OF VANTAGE IN THE CLASS STRUGGLE.

To the workers of West Virginia Socialism has come as a great light in a dark place, and as one of our speakers remarked, "They are taking it as a new religion." From the day of entering the state at Martinsburg until the closing meeting among the railroad men of Ronceverte, it was one continual enthusiastic rally for Socialism. The miners of Winifrede, just a small mining camp, gave 100 votes for Socialism, and the meeting there was characteristic of the hopefulness of these miners that their freedom is really coming through Socialism. On arriving at the Junction we were told that no trains were running to the mines on Sunday on the private coal road, but one of the miners had found a way for the Socialist speaker to get there by providing a railroad bicycle, which he pedalled down the track while the organiser from "civilised" Yankee land held on behind, standing on the rail. Four miles of this traveling was quite exciting, but the welcome received at the end of the journey by the miners and their wives more than made up for the difficulties of the journey. Here, in little cabins hardly fit for animals to live in, we found many Socialist papers; and all eager to hear Socialist news. The meeting, in a hall dimly lighted, was packed with men, women and children, with earnest, eager faces. From this town, after almost a day's journey, we found the next town among the miners on top of a mountain, with just time to wash our face. We were driven by a mule team over the mountain four miles to the Socialist hall, built by the miners themselves, with their own labor and their own money for the Socialist party of Sanger.

At Oak Hill, the next evening, two women, mother and daughter, walked four miles, carrying a baby, to the meeting. The interest of the women was a great feature of the West Virginia trip. In Star City, where the Socialists have elected their mayor and four councilmen, several women members of the party, with thirty men members, met the speaker at the train and gave three rousing cheers for Socialism. The courage of these comrades, mostly glassblowers from Indiana and Ohio, was remarkable. They have carried the seeds of Socialism from these states to the soil of West Virginia, and although they are working on half time, have no money and no outside help, they are bravely fighting the Republicans, who are trying to unseat them by property qualifications in the election laws.

In Bistersville a leading business man, Abner Thomas, is likely to be elected as Socialist mayor. They are putting up a strong campaign. In Point Pleasant the meeting was held in the old court house, nearly 100 years old, where the old Corn Stalk Indians fought their memorable battle. Here at the first Socialist meeting of the town they packed the building. In Moundsville they have 100 members of the Socialist Local.

All along the line—at Mannington, Fairmont, Cameron, Berkeley Springs—the same interest, the growing belief in the power of Socialist political action was manifest, until at Hinton and Ronceverte the railroad men crowned the trip with two rousing meetings. O. A. Pope, the chairman of the Grievance Committee of Greenbrier Division, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers of Hinton, and Comrade H. F. Link, of Ronceverte, arranged two wonderful meetings, under all kinds of difficulties. At the latter place, at noon of the day of the meeting, the chairman of the board of education announced that he would not allow the Socialists to hold a meeting in the school house, as advertised. Then the comrades induced a "moving picture" manager to rent them his theater after 9 o'clock. They then billed the town with the change of place and had a fine meeting after all. The constant zeal and courage of these isolated workers is an inspiration to renewed energy and effort to those of us who live in comfortable cities, where in five minutes we can have access to other comrades, to meetings, and all sorts of progressive, educational advantages, and as we enjoy these let us give a thought to our comrades in the miners' cabins of West Virginia and renew our joy in being a part of such a glorious movement, which really does weld the great mass of workers into an organization of lasting solidarity.

THE SITUATION AMONG GERMANS.

Kaiser's Realm Presents Interesting Field for Socialists.

(By Tom Quelch.)

BERLIN, Jan. 29.—To Socialists the present situation in Germany is intensely interesting.

The economic strata of that country presents some peculiar aspects.

On the top is a man claiming intimate relations with the divinity; impetuous and self-willed, his mind saturated with dreams of world-empire and conquest, possessing almost absolute power.

Below him and propping him up are the Junkers—the squires of Prussia and Mecklenburg. Side by side with them are the big capitalists, financiers, manufacturers—the bankers of Berlin, the Krupps and Thyssens.

LOWER CLASS CRUSHED.

Underneath them, and being rapidly crushed down into the ranks of those below, are the lower middle class—the shopkeepers, the petty manufacturers and traders.

And at the bottom is the agrarian and industrial working class.

Germinating first in the free towns, which were more highly developed industrially, the revolutionary movement has spread to every town in the empire.

SOCIALISM GROWING.

As industry grew, so grew Social-Democracy. As the rural elements were drawn into the towns, so they were absorbed by the Socialist party.

Having practically won the towns, it is now gradually converting the agrarian working class. Its method is so slow, yet so sure and determined that its onward progress reminds one of the overpowering progress and all-embracing force of a mighty glacier.

EXCITING ELECTION COMING.

Take the record of its vote for instance. In 1877 the German Social-Democratic party polled 493,000 votes; in 1887, 763,000 votes; in 1893, 1,876,000 votes; in 1897, 2,107,000 votes; in 1903, 3,025,000 votes, and in 1907, 3,259,000 votes.

And at this year's election its vote will be—what!

There has been many estimates, and 4,000,000 is given as the lowest.

The present strength in the Reichstag is 50. Professor Hans Delbrueck, a conservative, predicts that Social-Democracy will enter the Reichstag of 1913 with from 100 to 130 seats.

MEMBERSHIP INCREASES.

In 1907, 530,000 dues-paying members were included in its ranks; in 1908, 587,000; in 1909, 633,000; in 1910, 722,000.

Recently, by-election after by-election has been won with extraordinary success by the Social-Democrats.

Votes have been sent up by thousands and fresh victories are rapidly replacing the seats lost at the last general election against the conservative liberal coalition.

The Question Box.

Under the operation of industry as Socialists would it have, would there not be a surplus of product; and, if so, what would become of it?

R. D. S.

If people were disposed to make things in excess of their needs, and pile them up to no purpose, such might be the case; and if they would do so, I do not see that any harm could result from it.

It is true that under the capitalist system we have what is called overproduction. But the conditions are now entirely different to what they would be in a society where industry would be socialised, and furthermore the problem of overproduction, as it sometimes exists where the capitalist system of production prevails, is in reality not caused by overproduction, but by underconsumption. The world has never produced more than its people needed, though it has often produced more than its needy people could buy.

Would it not require more bosses to keep things straight in the industries of the Co-operative Commonwealth, or Socialism, than it does now?

A. T. D.,
Portsmouth, O.

It might require more bosses to keep things straight than it does now to keep things crooked. The business of a "boss" in an industry conducted under the capitalistic system is not to keep things straight, but to make profit for the owner out of the workmen.

The various "probes" of the different meat-packing plants, and other commodities controlled by the trusts, show that the bosses of those institutions kept things every way but straight. The boss owes his job to the owner. He is under no obligation to the workers or to the public that is to use what they make.

The bosses in democratically controlled industry, such as will be under Socialism, will derive their authority from an entirely different source. As Socialism demands the democratic control of industries collectively owned, the men who work in the shops will elect their bosses, and said bosses will be directly responsible to the men they boss, instead of to a profit-grabbing owner. Whether there will be more bosses than there are now will depend upon the needs and wishes of the men who elect them.

You can reasonably assume that other workers in the proposed industries would act much as you would. You will be an equal owner and an equal participant in the products of any industry to the extent that you perform an equal share of the necessary work. Would you favor an unnecessary number of bosses or foremen, thereby lessening the product and your share of it?

Everybody now working in a factory wishes to become a boss because the job affords more pay, less work and a degree of security impossible to the average workman; but when the industry is controlled from below instead of from above the relations of the workingmen to the boss will be reversed. The foreman now gets his job and his authority from the owner, either directly or indirectly through a superintendent; the foreman will then get his authority and position from the men whom he directs.

I can see no more reason for the working owners of the new system installing more bosses than are needed than for the present owners doing the same thing. It is more reasonable to suppose that there will not only be no more bosses than are necessary, but that there will be no more bossing done than will be needed to get reasonable results. And, inasmuch as the men working under a boss, foreman or superintendent, will largely or wholly be the judges of his conduct and qualifications, he will be compelled to treat his job as a public trust and not as a private snap.

It may be that a scientifically-organized industry can be more satisfactorily operated with more bosses or foremen than are used under the present adjustment of things. There are more officers in a well-drilled army than in a mob, and there are more directors in an organization than a partly organized or wholly disorganized mass; but results are what count in determining methods, and it is reasonable to suppose that those who both own and do the work in a factory will see that it is not burdened with more bosses than the work demands.

FELLOW-SERVANTS' ACT VS. EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY LAW.

After months of investigation the Ohio Employers' Liability Commission has agreed to present to the Legislature a majority and minority report of its conclusions. This action of the members agreeing to disagree conceives the spectacle of a woman with two artificial lower limbs trying to walk in an hobble skirt. The enactment of a law to supersede the Fellow-Servants' Act is a question of moving with the times in the days of Guilds and Crafts. The tenets of the common law were applicable to common interests. For instance, the masters were held responsible for the life and limb of their apprentices; for two reasons, the first being the necessity of keeping the labor market supplied with skilled artisans; second, the fear of foreign invasion and the necessity therefor of keeping the youth of the country ready for military service. These were days of common interests, and the dispensation of the Fellow-Servants' Act was possible on an equitable basis, because the industrial groups existed in small circles. The masters and the men mingled together at all times. The commoners were those engaged in industrial pursuits, and the courtiers those who live by the labor of others.

But these were the events of yesterday. Today the industrial circles are larger. Few know the directing base of our manufacturing centers. In many cases the modern European courtiers stroll down to their fashionable clubs, order wines and cigars, and then proceed to figure their future revenues by the reported rise and fall of stock exchange quotations. What do they care about protection of life or limb?

"Capitalism knows no flag or country," said Marx. Hence we demands protection from foreign greed. We also demand the enactment of legislation now that will take the place of the now obsolete Fellow-Servants' Act. Bulletin No. 74, issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor, at Washington, D. C., on page 19, gives some of the modern interpretations of said law. The principle of the maxim "Volenti non fit injuria" is of general application; the meaning of this phrase being "That to which a person assents is not esteemed in law an injury." Another jurist interpreted its meaning thus: "One who knows of a danger from the negligence of another, and understands and appreciates the risks therefrom, and voluntarily exposes himself to it, is precluded from recovering for an injury which results from the injury."

Yes, engineers have been discharged for reporting dangerous boilers; machinists have been "sent to the office" for refusing to work in front and underneath of dangerous machinery. The competition for jobs makes cowards of honest men.

Again, the present premium and other industrial SKIN GAMES pictures the victims running at high speed round the edge of a huge pot. As long as they can keep up with increasing gait they stay on top. But sooner or later their strength will give out and then they will fall to the bottom. Then comes the claim of "assumed risk." A few years back the steamer "Slocum" went down in Long Island Sound and one thousand souls went to their grave. Who was held responsible for this calamity—the owners of the boat? Oh, no! The captain is serving TEN YEARS IN SING SING PRISON for obeying the orders of his corporation masters. Delay in coming to some conclusion is becoming dangerous, Mr. Commissioner. If the nation can abolish state lines in war times, and if its constitution for the Federal government to provide for the wants of the victims of its wars, why is the same act not applicable in the case of the victims and veterans of the industrial battlefield. Nations, states, cities and towns are nought but huge families, and if the government can stand behind foreign investments why should it not also protect those who invest life and limb to produce the finished product? Is this government going to allow its citizenship to be crippled and deformed while producing riches for foreign investors? Who is going to keep the bones? There is only one equitable solution to the problem of an employers' liability: Let all contracts contain a casualty column. We admit this will add to the cost of production. "But life is more valuable than property," says the law.

Mr. Worker, when the co-operative commonwealth is established, human beings will be considered ahead of HOGS, LUMBER BUZZARDS and minerals. The world's workers pile the product of their labor in a big heap. Under the present system it represents this allegory: Around the workers' earnings stands bankrupt European nobility. They receive their dispensation to rob the workers through their marriage right. Lined up with them is the foreign investors. This class of human leaches, like fleas, don't care whether they ride on the back of a lion or a yellow dog. The magazine and academic capitalistic megaphones commence to belch forth a tirade of abuse against organized labor, ending with words of praise and glory in appreciation of the benevolent motives and future intentions of their all-powerful masters. Then a minister of the gospel steps forward and says, "Let us pray." All kneel down. One of the working class looks up, and observes that all but the workers have left. And so also, has the greater part of the wealth that YOU, the workers, produce. Praying and Preying have different meanings. Considering that labor produces all wealth, why should labor wait for the crumbs that fall from the capitalist table.

Wm. E. We formed our local here in Canal Dover the other evening, and we had with us Comrade Ferguson, the blind Socialist orator, of Findlay, who, after giving us a good talk on Socialism, passed your paper around. I took one of them along home and carefully looked over same. I felt much inspired by it. I like its clean look, the way you print same, and, better still, I like the editorials.

THE HEARING ON THE EIGHT-HOUR BILL.

Never was a more clear-cut illustration of the sharpness of the class struggle than that given in the State House Wednesday evening of last week, when the opponents of the eight-hour working day for women held forth to a crowded senate chamber. One after another—cigar manufacturers, large employers of shoe workers, and others interested in cheap labor—argued the dire necessity of keeping women slaves on their jobs for ten hours. One man said, with all sorts of oratorical effect, "The only grounds on which you can pass this bill is that it is deleterious to health, and we have positive proof that ten hours of labor does not injure the health of our hundreds of employes. The state is jealous of the health of its women citizens and properly so the mothers of our race," he said. How touching in a manufacturer or a hired corporation lawyer, who in the next breath pleads the scarcity of women labor on the market, and plainly shows that the state, entrenched as it is in capitalism, looks upon the labor of women as any other raw material or commodity used in manufacture, and not as the "mothers of citizens"—living, breathing, thinking, loving, human beings. One man, representing a well-known factory with an unenviable reputation among the workers, plead that the girls in his factory were "the best dressed ladies in town," and that they all urged him to present their petition against "the curtailing of their earning capacity," by shortening the hours of labor; and right here we had to witness an object lesson of the abject slavery of our working women—the manufacturer produced two women, who, with low voices and hands that trembled as they held the paper, read the statement that they represented a large body of happy, healthy and contented women factory workers, who protested against not being allowed to work ten hours a day; and one of them said she had worked in that factory for twenty years, and had never lost a half day through illness. The telling effect that the manufacturer intended to produce by this exhibition of willing slaves was somewhat marred when Miss Haas, the state factory inspector, told of having received a letter from some of these same factory workers saying that the Manufacturers' and the Business Men's Association were circulating petitions among the girls asking them to sign them, protesting against the eight-hour bill. "Under such pressure, what can we do?" one girl asked. Then, to add insult to injury, a certain senator, who has been nicknamed "Roaring Bill" Smith, in tones that would have waked the dead, urged his reasons for not giving women two more hours that it would give them two hours more to get into mischief and dissipation. He emphasized his contention by pointing out that, as already stated by one manufacturer, that most of the accidents occurred on Monday—the inference was clear. It was after their holiday of Sunday, and their dissipation had made their hands unsteady, etc., and therefore women should not be allowed those two hours. As one woman of the working class, I told Mr. Smith, later, that when the women of Ohio became a voting constituency they would avenge that insult to the womanhood of the state. And how many men were there of the working class who voted for "Roaring Bill," whose faces did not blush for the shame of it!

Finally, one man told of how his old mother of 92 years of age had bade him tell that gathering that ten hours of honest labor was a blessing, etc.; how she had worked as a young woman, and now how hale and hearty she was at 92.

When Miss Mary MacDowell, the head of the University Settlement of Chicago, began her plea for the eight-hour law she said: "It is a far cry from the dear old mother of 92, who sewed with one needle, in and out, one stitch at a time, to the girl who runs a machine with many needles; a far cry from the woman who did one family wash to the woman who runs a double-tread mangle, who must pump from one foot to the other and then on both feet; a far cry from the woman who cured the meat in the home to the woman in the trimmed meat department of the great packing houses of Chicago, who works in a room, five degrees below freezing, for ten hours a day."

The Socialists at the hearing were certainly proud of their comrade, E. L. Hichens, first vice president of the State Federation of Labor, who showed those present the real class war that was being illustrated before their eyes, showed by his own experience that, as men and women had more time to read and think, they became more intelligent as to the cause of their slavery and the remedy; and in eloquent terms he pointed out the era of "class rule" today when the laws are enacted for the benefit of the ruling class in society, which is, of course, the "owning" class.

The eight-hour law may or may not be passed, but the lesson of that "hearing" will be written in large letters upon the minds of every working man and woman who was there, and this is the lesson: When the working class becomes an organized political force they will no longer be insulted by the representatives of capitalism, and their parasites, in the State House belonging to all the people. No longer will they cringe and beg for palliative labor measures, but they will demand and enforce labor legislation that will life the working class out of its abject slavery; and then, and not until then, men and woman who stand erect will bring forth children who will know something more of love and life and liberty than the 2,000,000 little child-slaves who are now contributing their labor to the masters of capitalism today. The day is fast coming when the only political party of the working class—the Socialist party—will be so strong in Columbus that a "Roaring Bill" Smith would not dare to utter his insults to useful self-respecting working women, even in a club-room, much less in the State House of the people. The time is coming, and coming soon, when the senators and legislators of Ohio will be elected by the Socialist party, and the State House will really belong to the workers, and the legislation will be made "by the people, for the people, and of the people," instead of "by the trust, for the trust, and of the trust," as it is today.

THE JEFF CLUB SWAMPED.

The Citizen says:

"Socialists outnumbered Democrats more than two to one at the Washington celebration of the Franklin County Jefferson Club, Wednesday night, where Charles E. Magruder spoke on "Socialism" and Attorney General T. S. Hogan delivered a good government address.

"Following Magruder's address, in which he declared Socialism was 'impossible and undesirable,' a sweeping challenge for debate of the subject was issued by Dr. D. M. Kuhns. 'We are prepared to debate any Democrat or Republican in Columbus, in the state or the nation, in the largest hall in Columbus,' said Dr. Kuhns.

"President M. L. Boyd, of the Jefferson Club said the club had already acted on the question of a debate on Socialism by voting against it. Magruder offered to debate the Socialists on his own 'book.'"

The News gave a long synopsis of Magruder's speech, in which it said he "tore the doctrines of the Socialist party to shreds," and was applauded by the Socialists. The only answer to this is that both the News and Magruder lied.

OHIO NEWS NOTE.

The comrades at West Milton had a very interesting meeting February 15—the first Socialist meeting ever held in the place. The comrades at Ludlow Falls co-operated in the arrangements. Fred G. Strickland was the speaker, and the audience listened intently for nearly two hours.

The State Executive Committee has issued a call for a state convention of the Socialist party, to be held in Columbus April 21 and 22.

CARPENTERS AND JOINERS.

Local Union No. 494, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, is holding well attended meetings every Friday night, at 71½ East State street. They are initiating new members that were never affiliated with organized labor before, at every session.

Many old members, who have become delinquent for various causes, are being reinstated, and quite a number of clearance cards have lately been received. From reports from the business agent fully two-thirds of the members are employed at the present time, which is very good at this season of the year. The prospects are fair for a nice season's work when spring opens up.

BAKERS.

The last meeting of the Bakers' Union brought together the old guard. Several of the large shops are giving recruits to the union. Out-of-town news reports:

The Co-operative Baking Company, which is conducted under the auspices of the St. Paul Bakers' Union, is giving entire satisfaction to all who patronize it in the material and make-up of its products and the promptness and care of its service. All union men and families that do not now purchase their bakery goods of this company should begin doing so at once. They will get the best goods of the kind on the market at the most reasonable prices. They will also have every assurance that what they buy has been produced of the best material, with every requirement for the utmost cleanliness and by the highest skill of the baker's art.

FEDERATION MEETING.

Columbus Federation of Labor will convene February 27, at 7:45 p. m. Each section should arrange for selection of delegates to comprise the Legislative and Organization Committee. Will F. Hauck will have charge of the miscellaneous section.

The spirit of progress is in the wind.

ELECTRICAL WORKERS.

The Big Fight at Springfield, Ill., Has Been Won.

The big fight against the Interstate Telephone Company, at Springfield, Ill., has been won. The struggle at Seattle is still in progress.

It is untrue that Local No. 1, I. B. of E. W., was unseated by the Building Trades Council of St. Louis upon orders from the Washington bosses. When the orders were received the B. T. C. submitted the question to a referendum of the locals, and all but two voted against expulsion, and those two voted against the electrical workers because of local disputes. That's how much the rank and file of St. Louis care for the puffed-up bosses in Washington. And there won't be any secession and dual central body in St. Louis, either.—Cleveland Citizen.

CIGAR MAKERS.

Cigar Makers' Union Wins Important Case.

In July, 1909, a number of cigar manufacturers in Pennsylvania, and a few of their employes, organized the Universal Cigar Makers' and Packers' Union, with headquarters at Hanover. After receiving a charter, they started issuing a label, which G. W. Perkins, president of the Cigar Makers' International Union, immediately declared was an imitation of the Union Blue Label of the Cigarmakers' International Union, and Mr. Perkins says "consequently a fraud and an attempt to deceive dealers and consumers." Large numbers of cigars bearing these labels were shipped all over the country.

President Perkins took the matter in hand personally, and instructed I. B. Kuhn, of McSherrytown, to get the necessary evidence upon which to base cause for action against these people in the courts. Union No. 316, of McSherrytown, furnished considerable valuable evidence in the case. Jere S. Black, Esq., of this city, represented the Cigarmakers' International Union.

Judge Wanner, in granting a permanent injunction on Saturday restraining further use of this imitation label, ordered the engravings and labels turned over to the officers of the International Union.—York (Pa.) Gazette.

MACHINISTS.

Vice President Wilson Has Located in Cleveland.

Vice President Tom Wilson, who has had such splendid success in organizing work in New England, arrived in Cleveland last Wednesday, and will remain in this district indefinitely. Brother Wilson attended the Cleveland Federation meeting Wednesday evening, and met many of the active local workers, who gave him a cordial reception.

The dance last week was a social and financial success, and No. 55's officers are highly pleased as a consequence.

PRINTERS.

The Allied Printing Trades Label agreement proves that the allied crafts are moving with the times. No. 53 voted 502 for and none against the proposition. At the last session of the legislature the Union Label was protected against fraudulent use by law. Those wise men who made the unwarranted expenses of the Codification Commission changed the wording of the measure and made it useless. No. 3 intends to have a new bill presented to cure the evil.

WOMEN'S EIGHT-HOUR BILL PASSED IN CALIFORNIA.

The women's eight-hour bill passed by the legislature of California permits of only one exception, that is for women who work in canneries or places where perishable products are handled.

New York Central boilermakers have voted to go on strike on all lines between Buffalo and Chicago.

TO THE UNORGANIZED.

This office will be glad to secure the application of any worker who desires to join an existing union or to assist in organizing a new local.

THE RED INK BRIGADE.

"The "Little Bush" was mentioned in Hampton's Magazine, so was General Beans and Rice Stewart, and his most unholy carcass, Mr. Brady. Captain Booth resigned his position as workhouse guard. He expects to locate on the "field of skulls." This is the place where the "Little Bush" keeps his slaughter-house implements.

The governor wishes to establish a state constabulary similar to the Russian Cossacks, used by the coal barons of Pennsylvania. Some one must have heard their master voice.

Murderer Doty expects to see the sun soon. The Bible quotations tell us that "Murderers shall not enter the kingdom of heaven." Of course, this law has no bearing when it comes to R. and L. service. Kings and cowards rule by displays of guns and swords.

(To be continued in our next.)

PRISONS OF ILLINOIS RELICS OF BARBARISM

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—Jails of Illinois and the treatment accorded prisoners in them are severely condemned in a report issued by the state charities commission, following its first inspection of these institutions.

The commission finds by comparing its reports with the report issued in 1870 by the old state board of charities that no improvement has been made in the jails in forty years. Only ten in the state were placed in the first class as to sanitation.

The common jail is called a relic of the dark ages, a disseminator of foul diseases and tuberculosis, a place of crime, a violator of laws, a place of detention, where men are debased physically by unfit and insufficient food and morally by vicious environment.

What Socialism Stands For.

Human life depends upon food, clothing and shelter. Only when these are assured are freedom, culture and higher human development possible. To produce food, clothing and shelter, land and machinery are needed. Land by itself does not satisfy human needs. Human labor gets raw materials and food out of the soil by creating machinery and using it upon the land. Whoever has control of land and machinery has control of human labor, and with it of human life and liberty.

Today the machinery and the land used for industrial purposes are owned by a rapidly decreasing minority. So long as machinery is simple and easily handled by one man it does not make its owners so powerful that they can dominate the sources of life of others. But when machinery becomes more and more complex and expensive, and requires for its effective operation the organised effort of many workers, its influence reaches over wider circles of life. The owners of such machinery become the dominant class.

The Masses in Subjection.

In proportion as the number of such machine owners compared to all other classes decreases, their power in the nation and in the world increases. They bring ever larger masses of working people under their control, reducing them to the point where muscle and brain are their only productive property. Millions of formerly self-employing workers thus become the helpless wage slaves of the industrial masters.

The more the economic power of the ruling class grows, the less useful does it become in the life of the nation. The overwhelming bulk of the useful work of the nation falls upon the shoulders of the classes that either have no other productive property but their manual and mental labor power the wage workers — or that have but little land and little machinery outside of their labor power—the small traders and small farmers. The ruling minority is steadily becoming useless and parasitic.

A bitter struggle over the division of the products of labor is waged between the exploiting propertied class, on the one hand and the exploited, propertyless class on the other. In this struggle the wage working class cannot expect adequate relief from any reform of the present order from the dominant class of society.

The wage workers are therefore the most determined and irreconcilable antagonists of the ruling class. They are also the class which suffers most from the curse of class rule. The fact that a small number of capitalists is permitted to use all the country's resources and social tools for their individual profit, and to make the production of the necessaries of our lives the object of their competitive private enterprises and speculations, is at the bottom of all the social evils of our time.

Modern Industry Planless.

In spite of the organization of trusts, pools and combinations, the capitalists are powerless to regulate production for social ends. Industries are largely conducted in a planless manner. Through periods of feverish activity the strength and health of the workers are mercilessly undermined, and during periods of enforced idleness the workers are frequently reduced to starvation.

The climaxes of this chaotic system of production are the regularly recurring industrial depressions and crises which paralyze the nation every fifteen or twenty years.

In this mad and reckless race for profits the capitalist class is bound to exploit the workers to the very limit of their endurance and to sacrifice their physical, moral and mental welfare to its own insatiable greed. Capitalism keeps the masses of working men in poverty, destitution, physical exhaustion and ignorance. It drags their wives from their homes to the mill and factory. It snatches their children from the playgrounds and schools and grinds their slender bodies and unformed minds into cold dollars. It wantonly disfigures, maims and kills hundreds of thousands of workingmen annually in mines, on railroads and in factories. It drives millions of workers into the ranks of the unemployed and forces large numbers of them nto beggary, vagrancy and all forms of crime and vice.

Public Intelligence Corrupted.

To maintain their rule over their fellow men, the capitalists must keep in their pay all organs of the public powers, public mind and public conscience. They control the dominating parties and, through them, the elected public officials. They select our executive, bribe our legislatures and corrupt our courts of justice. They sway our educational institutions. They own the nation politically and intellectually just as they own it industrially.

The struggle between wage workers and capitalists grows ever fiercer, and has become the only vital issue before the American people. The wage working class, therefore, has the most vital and direct interest in abolishing the capitalist system. But in abolishing the present system, the workingmen will free not only their own class, but also all other classes of modern society. The small farmer, who is today exploited by large capital more indirectly but not less effectively than is the wage laborer; the small manufacturer and trader, who is engaged in a desperate and losing struggle for economic independence in the face of the all-conquering power of concentrated captital; and even the capitalist himself, who is the slave of his wealth rather than its master. The struggle of the working class against the capitalist class, while it is a class struggle, is thus at the same time a struggle for the abolition of all classes and class privileges.

Must Conquer the Political Power.

The private ownership of the land and means of production used for exploitation, is the rock upon which class rule is built; political government is its indispensable istrument. The wage workers cannot be freed from exploitation without conquering the political power and substituting collective and democratic administration for private ownership of the land and the means of production used for exploitation.

The basis for such transformation is rapidly developing within the very bosom of present captitalist society. The factory system, with its immense labor, is rapidly destroying all vestiges of individual production in manufacture. Modern production is already very largely a collective and social process, while the great trusts and monopolies which have sprung up in recent years have had the effect of organizing the work and management of some of our main industries on a national scale, and fitting them for national use and operation.

An End to Class Rule.

In the struggle for freedom the interests of the workers of all nations are identical. The struggle s not only national, but international. It embraces the world and will be carried to ultimate victory by the united workers of the world.

To unite the workers of the nation and their allies and sympathizers of other classes to this end, is the mission of the Socialist. In this battle for freedom the Socialist movement does not strive to substitute working class rule for capitalist rule, but by working class victory to free all humanity from class rule and to realize the international brotherhood of man.

NOTICE TO CO-OPERATORS.

It is proposed to form a co-operative home-buying company, along the lines laid down by the National Co-operative Homestead Company., viz.: The members of the company will buy; or rent, with the privilege of buying, a tract of land for the purpose of farming and gardening. This tract will be sold by the owners, in lots to suit, directly to the members of the company, each deed being made out to the purchaser upon his payment of the price, independently of whether others pay for their land.

The company will then lease the several tracts from the individual members (if they consent), and farm it as a whole, thus saving a large part of the expense.

It is hoped to build a village, in which everyone shall get, at actual cost, a home with modern conven-

THE CITIZENS OF THE FUTURE.

The most important laws on the statute books of any state are those for the protection of the children. If the children of a community are strong mentally physically and morally the future of that community is blessed. If the children are weak, neglected or ignored, then Heaven pity the race to come. In these days, when commercialism is the guiding star of the republic, the children are too often forgotten.

Not the least disgraceful element of the modern child question is the fearful ignorance as to its very existence. Most people are actually too indolent to discover that we have a child problem at all; many are too selfish to realise its importance when brought face to face with it.

In every large city there are hundreds of children living in surroundings too vile to describe, many are entirely homeless, others live in wretched hovels. Many have not food to nourish their little bodies, anything like regular school attendance is impossible on account of insufficient clothing. Vast numbers grow up with not the slightest moral or religious training. Hundreds are born with the frightful curse of disease and corruption in their blood, many acquire corruption marvelously soon by constant contact with the lowest and worse forms of vice and crime. Children, in large numbers, are constantly being brought before the judges of our courts. The story is almost always the same. The small offender has been born and reared in poverty, filth and immorality. A large per cent. of the youthful criminal class is diseased or is the result of hereditary alcoholism. The mothers are generally ignorant, weak and inefficient. The fathers are dead or physically and economically worthless.

What chance do the children have? We say all men are created equal. Perhaps. Of this I am positive, there is not equality of opportunity, and that is the important thing. What chance does the tenment-raised child of a family of ten have, when the father can earn not over two dollars a day and is sick a third of the time? What chance does the child of a widowed mother have, when education is impossible for him? What chance does the child who is raised on the street have, whose only home is a hovel of poverty and immorality? None, may God forgive us, none!

The weak, ignorant, criminal children of today are to be the parents of the race of the future. What sort of citizens will their children be? Free textbooks, juvenile courts, anti-cigarette laws, child labor laws—what shall we say of them? Makeshifts, all of them—insignificant, illogical and futile.

The trouble lies here. The theory of our government is wrong. All our petty enactments are powerless against the bigness of the trouble. Socialists believe in an arrangement of society in which there will be absolute equality of opportunity. Government ownership of the means of production and distribution would give all an equal chance to live. When the fight for existence became less, education would come as a matter of course. Better homes and surroundings would make better morals, yes and better bodies. Crime would decrease when one of the fundamental causes—poverty—was removed. Under the Socialist's ethical arrangement of society orphans would be the wards of the government and the helpless and weak would be protected and cared for.

We owe it to God, to ourselves, and to all people yet to come to give all children a fighting chance. When are we going to do it?

"MUSIC-MATH CHARM."

A German inventor named Lapel has invented some wonderful devices which will remove all difficulties which have hitherto stood in the way of the general utilization of wireless telegraphy. Instead of the Morse alphabet, musical notes are successfully employed. The fact that the wonderful powers of music are practically unknown as yet is made more evident every day. It has been found to have a most quieting effect upon the insane. And is it too great a venture to say that in the not far distant future our mills and factories will all be run by music? Would it not be a pleasant change for the workmen to hear the strain of "Il Trovatore" rather than the incessant, maddening grind of machinery? Truly it would "gentler on the spirit fall than tired eyelids upon tired eyes."

ATTENTION!

The Woman's National Committee calls your attention to the fact that the last Sunday in February has been set aside as Woman's Day, and that the National Executive Committee has requested the locals to observe this day by holding a special meeting for women. As far as possible women speakers should be secured.

WOULD WOMAN SUFFRAGE BENEFIT THE STATE?

A great many people believe that suffrage is a natural right, corresponding to the right of life and liberty. If suffrage were given to the individual for his benefit this might be true. While suffrage is a great benefit to those who are given the privilege of exercising it and enjoying the emoluments of office, yet it is for the benefit of the state that designated individuals are permitted to participate in the management and control of public affairs. The state has entire control of elections and decides who is to exercise the right of suffrage and hold office. Gradually suffrage has been extended to more classes of people. In the Colonies suffrage was limited to white males 21 years old, who had certain qualifications. A voter had to be a freeman, qualify as to morals and religion, and be the owner of a designated amount of property. In Virginia a voter had to be a freeholder, who had at least fifty acres of unfilled land or twenty-five acres with a plantation, including a house twelve feet square. To hold office there were greater financial requirements. As late as 1892 the Governor of Massachusetts had to own at least $5000 worth of property. History fails to record whether he was expected to spend that sum for campaign purposes or not.

Today a more liberal view of suffrage is taken. In all states the naturalised foreigner and the colored man vote. In twelve states aliens who declare their intention of becoming citizens are given the right of suffrage. Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho and Washington have given women full suffrage, and in a dozen more states women have school suffrage.

Since suffrage is not a natural right, but is given to certain persons for the special benefit of the state, would it not be best for the general public that all persons, including women who are mentally and morally qualified, be given the right to vote? The women have the same education as men have. The census of 1900 showed that there were four times as many girls as boy graduated from the high schools. Morally, women are qualified to vote. Take the women of any class of society and they are better mannered and more refined and cultured than the men of that class. As women own property and are taxed they are interested in the expenditure of money raised by taxes. As women are bound by the laws that are made, they are interested in securing the best laws for themselves and others. It is woman's nature to purify and clean everything with which she has anything to do. If she were given the ballot she would bring into politics that virtue which is next to godliness. For the benefit of the state all males 21 years old, except unpardoned criminals, idiots who have guardians and those adjudged insane, are given the ballot. One by one the qualifications as to property, religion and morals have been eliminated. In Ohio the ignorant naturalised foreigner and the ignorant colored man, the inmates of infirmaries, pardoned criminals and idiots who have no property vote. If the state is benfited by the vote of these citizens, it could not help being benefited by the vote of the refined, cultured and educated women.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN NEW SOUTH WALES.

Since woman suffrage was granted in New South Wales there has been a marked improvement in the treatment of women prisoners. The government has built at Long Bay a new penitentiary for women, that is in many ways a model.

Beautiful hot and cold water baths are supplied, and every woman has a daily bath. They also receive a daily drill, especially adapted for women.

A committee of Sydney ladies meet every week in a room in the prison, and go about and talk to the women, and arrange for those who are coming out. The women are returned to their friends, or sent to situations, which must be a hundred miles from Sydney.

The women grow their own vegetables. The governor says this is a great pleasure to them, and is a new idea to many. They are taught to cut out and make plain clothing, as well as to cook and wash.

The cells are well lighted, plastered, and colored light green; this color is found to soothe the nerves. They have electric light every evening till nine o'clock, and have suitable books to read. Darkness and gloom are held to be very unhygenic by the medical authority.

The women are known only by numbers; their names are never disclosed, so that no prison taint may cling to them.—Woman's Journal.

AGAINST THE WOMEN.

The election of Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of the Chicago schools, as president of the National Teachers' Association, seems to be gall and vinegar to the clique of men who have been running affairs for years. They seem to think that the elevation of a woman to the honor is rather discreditable to the organization, but the fact is that the election of Mrs. Young at the Boston meeting last summer has done a great deal to raise the N. E. A. in the popular esteem far more than the election of Nicholas Murray Butler, or any of his clique of groaners, could do. It would be curious if an association in which the women predominate shouldn't elect one of their number, especially as they are able to present one who is the peer of any man in the organization. There are indications, if the men whine much longer, the women will secede and have their own N. E. A., and then the masculine crowd will be apt to shrink up and blow away.—Exchange.

AN OBJECT LESSON.

In Minnesota the suffragists and the women's clubs are up in arms against a bill to allow husbands or wives to sell their real estate without the other's signature. The legislator who has introduced the bill claims that it is not unfair, since it applies to both alike. But many more husbands than wives own real estate, because when a woman marries she invests her life in an occupation quite as useful to society as any business in which her husband may be engaged—the occupation of rearing a family and making a home—and this handicaps her for earning money. Therefore, it is only right that she should be provided for when she is old. Her right in her husband's real estate is often her only provision. The proposed change is making many converts to suffrage, for women see that they ought to have a vote on a question which so closely concerns them.—Exchange.

MAYOR OF MILWAUKEE TELLS WOMEN TO ENTER POLITICS.

Milwaukee, Wis.—A new suffragette movement, having the unqualified support of the Socialist city fathers of Milwaukee, was recently organized following the speech of Mayor Seidel before the Woman's Civic Club, in which he said: "Women should enter politics. If a woman hangs out her washing only to havp it covered with soot from a nearby chimney; if the housewife cannot open her window without having soot and smoke and dirt blow in, spoiling her cleanly efforts, she should interest her neighbors and get together for a better smoke ordinance. Get into the political field. Use the city school buildings for your meetings and discuss the needs of yourselves and your children. Demand your rights; you will get them."—Chicago Daily Socialist.

THE DAUGHTER OF KARL MARX.

Nice, France.—The past two weeks have been very precious, for I have been able to spend much time with Paul LaFargue and Laura Marx LaFargue, the gifted daughter of Karl Marx.

Laura Marx, as most every one calls her, is a poet and writer. She is one of the most charming and versatile persons I have ever known. She seems to have been made to order. She is remarkably beautiful, and a scholar such as one would expect Karl Marx's daughter to be. It is said she resembles him in character. She is kind and true, very agreeable and unassuming. Though considerate and appreciative, she says frankly what she thinks. She is her father's own daughter.—Luella Twining.

HE WOULD BETTER STAY IN HIS OWN SPHERE.

In its recent attack on woman's right to a recognition of her citizenship, The Ladies' Home Journal has stirred up a hornet's nest of criticism. The editor of this ladies' authority on correct styles should do as he advises women to do, and stay in his own sphere, which it would seem is that of the pin-cushion and Rorer receipt.—Clean Politics.

WOMEN HELP TO RECALL MAYOR.

Seattle, Wash.—Mayor Hiram C. Gill, who was elected last March, by a plurality of 3500 votes, was recalled for alleged misconduct in office by a plurality estimated at 4000. The votes of the women, who were recently enfranchised in this state, were largely responsible for this result. Gill was accused of conducting the city government in the interest of a vice syndicate. The women marched to the polls, all jubilant over the first opportunity to exercise the right of franchise.—Exchange.

LILLIAN NORDICA TO SUPPORT A SUFFRAGE SINGING SCHOOL.

It is announced that Lillian Nordica is to support a suffrage singing school as a contribution to the cause. The school is to be held at the Fourteenth Assembly Club of Mrs. Belmont's Political Equality Association, New York City. Instruction will be free.—Exchange.

IN THE NEW SOCIETY.

"In the new society," says Bebel, "women will be entirely independent, both socially and economically. She will not be subjected to even a trace of domination or exploitation, but will be free and man's equal, and mistress of her own lot.

ALL FOR SUFFRAGE.

In the Kansas House of Representatives the legislative committee has reported unanimously in favor of the constitutional amendment granting full suffrage to women. The women of Kansas have had municipal suffrage since 1887.—Woman's Journal.

I can sympathize with Fred Warren and his family, for my father was a victim of the government all his life. —Laura Marx.

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS WARD.

The Gates Ajar are open wide,
And she who once had passed inside
On daring wings of reverence
Has entered, and will there abide.

What joys already she has seen?
What happy valleys robed in green,
What lifted mountains, fine and far,
And lakes aglow with morning sheen?

How light she walks, and every place
Wears a familiar loving face—
Fond scenes the traveller once knew,
And longed her journey to retrace.

What homely voices endless dear
Her hungry soul has leaped to hear?
What heartsome bits of every day
Have fallen on her eager ear?

And now, I think, amid the lights
Of blessed home, she sits and writes
What we, perhaps, shall read some day
Beyond the shadows and the nights.

THE FACTORY STOVE.

The factory stood in a crowded space,
In a city's most degraded place;
'Twas here the wage-slaves worked and sweat,
To earn the living they did not get.

At half-past six the whistle blew,
The wage-slaves sure the day did rue;
The time they were a minute late
It brought down all the foreman's hate.

The boss came in about half-past nine,
He caught one slave a killin' time;
"Get busy there! How dare you shirk!
When I am paying you to work."

The man jumped up like he was shot,
And dug right in, though the day was hot;
The sweat stood out on his dust-grimed face—
The poor devil seemed to know his place.

If these men only owned their jobs
They wouldn't be keeping a bunch of snobs;
But they work all day, from early morn,
And act like they are glad they're born.

This tired and worn-out class of men,
Whose average wage is a dollar ten,
With brains by their Creator given,
Yet they can't even make a livin'.

A glass of beer, a hunk of cheese,
A piece of bologna, if you please;
Oh, praise to God, ambition's stilled,
Because their belly now is filled.

They really think this country free,
They can't beyond their nose quite see;
They holler for their country grand,
They do not own an inch of land.

Some day the scales from their eyes will fall,
And Capitalists no longer will get it all;
For Socialism then will bless the earth,
And all will be free from the day of birth.

TWO WAYS OF HAVING A GOOD TIME.

(By Frances E. Willard.)

A little bird came and perched on the top of my penholder. It had a little voice somewhat like the jingle of those silver bells worn by fairies. It went off all of a sudden like an alarm-clock, and in five minutes had twittered me two songs in pigeon English. They are here written in prose, as I have forgotten how you write in verse. This is what the bird said in

SONG FIRST:

I flew over land and sea, and in Paris I saw three bright little children—Henri, Mathilde and Sophie. They were three little flutterbudgets, never still a quarter of a minute, but always saying, "Dear Mamma, what will you do next that we may be amused? And their mamma would answer, "You shall go with your nurse to the puppet theater, in the garden of the Luxembourg, and she shall buy you some bread to feed the goldfish in the large fountain." So they would sit on a shady bank, and the man would make the little puppets (dolls dressed up like big folks) shake hands and talk and be pleasant, or fight and kill one another, just as he thought fit, and the man would stay out of sight behind the little stage, and change his voice, and pretend it was the dolls that talked. So it was a regular little theater, and the three children would laugh and clap their hands if they liked the play, and, if they didn't, they would hiss like so many geese. Then they would say, "Now we will go on the boulevard and see the pictures and jewels and all the handsome things in the windows." So they did, and the next day they came to their mother again: "Dear Mamma, we want to be amused." Then she went with them to the palace of the Louvre, where there are more curious things than you could look at in a whole year, and the little necks would be strained, and the little eyes would go staring this way and that, trying to take in all they could at one glance. Then they would hunt up another doll's theater, and hear the Emperor's band play in the palace garden. The next day they would come again, and with just the same cry: "Oh, dear! Mamma, it is so dull; what can we see that is new, so we may be amused?"

For this was the thing of which they were never tired; and as the good lady went with them to the Garden of Plants, the largest menagerie in the world, with such a noise of big birds cawing and lions roaring and monkeys chattering you could never hear yourself think; only nobody wished to think, but just to be amused. And the three children said: "You are a lovely mamma, but we are tired of this show; it is good for country children, perhaps, but we have so many nicer things in Paris that we do not like to spend our time here." So she took them to the real opera that night, and they saw the Emperor, in his box, all covered with gold, and all the people clapping their hands, and it was a splendid place to be in, full of such grand folks and glittering uniforms. When Sunday came, they went to the cathedral, and the priests had on their bright clothes, and the music was grand, so they had almost as good a time as at the opera, except that in the cathedral one has only a little cane-chair and in the opera a velvet sofa, which is a great deal pleasanter. In the evening they stayed at home, so that, on the whole, they found the day comparatively dull. Well, they went on this way year after year, and they studied somewhat and were ambitious to excel, but they had to be wonderfully amused all the way along; so by the time they were grown up they had seen so much that nothing could make them by surprise, and they could never wonder about anything great. A pity it was, indeed; and because the people in that country are brought up in this way they get to think this world is wearisome, and for variety they go to war, or have a revolution at home, or kill their king, so as to have a new one, or change their flags and the names of their streets, and build new palaces—anything so as not to have a dull time in Paris. One of their rulers, the great Napoleon, when he received a letter saying they were displeased with him, replied: "Gild the dome of the Hotel des Invalides; they will look at that, and it will be a new thing, and they will forget that they are displeased with me."

THE BABY ELEPHANT.

Congo, a little elephant purchased a year or two ago by the New York Zoo was a most unpromising youngster when he arrived, for both hind legs were so badly sprung that he walked upon his ankles. The cure was simple. Doctor Blair fitted him with a pair of leather braces, and in six months his legs were straight and strong. During his convalescence, however, he had been so petted by his keeper and visitors that he developed a very amusing trick. The public has been forbidden to feed the animals, but Congo's appealing trunk thrust through the bars of his stall was not to be resisted, and he began to receive pennies and even nickels in the place of peanuts. A cash register was finally arranged for him, by means of which he was taught to ring up his gifts, which now pay for his daily allowance of hay and his six quarts of peanuts on Sunday, as well as for other little treats which his less talented neighbors do not get.—Collier's Weekly.

FUNNY STORIES FROM THE NATIONAL MONTHLY.

HOW HE FOUND THE SAMPLE.

What the little girl, with the ten cents in pennies, wanted was some red ribbon of a particular shade for her mother. She knew the shade, but she couldn't explain it, and all she could say was, "It wasn't that, no, nor that, nor that, it was deeper than that, and not so deep as that," and so on.

The mission was looking hopeless, when suddenly she darted from the shop, and seized a passing gentleman by the hand. "Will you please come into this shop with me?" she asked, innocently.

"Certainly, my chickabiddy," replied the gentleman, "if I can be of any use! What is it?"

The little girl replied not, but led the wondering stranger to the counter. "There, miss!" she said, triumphantly, "mother wants some ribbon the color of this gentleman's nose!"

A BOY'S REASONING.

A Hoosier schoolmaster, some years ago, when teaching his first school in one of the districts of Indiana, was questioning his class of beginners as to their knowledge of the A, B, C's. He said to a small boy: "Walter, how far do you know your A, B, C's?"

Small boy (measuring off about four inches on his new lead pencil), "About that far."

A GOOD REASON.

An old man, upon seeing a small barefooted lad playing in the street of a Western town, approached him and said: "Young man, why are you not attending school today; some day, when you grow up, you will regret all this wasted time?"

"Well, I'll tell yer, mister," said the chap, with a long drawn sigh: "Me mudder's sick, me brother Jimmy broke his arm yesterday, and baby's cutting teeth, and my oldest sister's getting married, and besides, there ain't any school terday, it's teachers' convention day, and dat's the reason I ain't at school terday."

THE HOUSEWIFE.

Of old the housewife stood in the door of her home, looking out on the world wistfully,
For the way out was barred and the way in was blocked,
Chosen arbitrarily for a given labor, not by talent and fitness, but by sex.
She was bound by vows she did not make and could not forswear;
She was anointed a priestess of ignorance,
A chief servant of one who was only her equal,
And, with rich, latent spirituality,
Doomed to satisfy at all costs the claims of the body.
Her home was a prison into which she had been thrust,
And if she escaped, great was her fall.

Today again the housewife stands in the door of her home, looking out into the world, but her eyes are glad.
For she is free to go out after what she deems highest,
And to bring in with her all the essentials of progress.
Her duty has become her privilege, her service has become her strength.
She is a proud priestess of knowledge and efficiency,
A beloved yoke-fellow of the man who is her equal.
Her vows no longer the vows of coercion;
She is not bound by four walls and the whim of a master.
In her hand is power of her spirit in wisdom,
And she bows her head only before her God.

She will make of her home a refuge and a glory, a school of life and a house of healing,
And out of it shall come a spirit of sanity to cleanse and sweeten the world.

room and hung the judge's things therein. He closed the door. Bartelmy stepped to the closet, opened the door and peered sharply into its four corners, even fumbling behind his long coat, to make sure that no witness was lurking there to spy on him.

"Oh, that's the way you feel?" commented Brand. "I'll show you over the place. But you shouldn't worry."

Bartelmy coughed nervously.

"One can never be too careful about matters of this kind, Brand. I should think that you would have learned that much by this time."

"This is my first experience of this kind," said Brand.

"Of course it is," answered Bartelmy, with a tinge of sarcasm in his voice. "It always is 'the first time.' But you are assuredly very lucky indeed, Brand, to do so very well at your first try at—at"—

"Come, look over the place, and let's get through with it," put in the editor.

He crossed and locked the door through which the judge had entered. Then he led his visitor over to the door on the opposite side of the room opening into a hallway which extended to various rooms. He pointed to the room directly across the hall. "It's quite dark, you see," he said. "This is where a couple of editorial writers sit. They go home nights, lucky dogs, not being newspaper men." Bartelmy was quick enough to catch the ironical comment of the busy managing editor on the scholarly men who wrote the opinions of the paper. Brand drew the judge back into his office and locked the door behind him.

"Now we are alone, absolutely alone," commented Brand significantly. He led the way to his desk and pointed out to the judge the chair at the right hand side. Brand dropped into his own chair. "Have a seat, judge," he said.

Judge Bartelmy drew the chair indicated even closer to the managing editor's desk and seated himself in it. He leaned forward toward Brand and rested his elbow on the desk. His face was within ten or twelve inches of the telephone.

CHAPTER XI.

BARTELMY, now that he had taken the final and extremely distasteful plunge and had come to the office of the Advance, waited for Brand to make the opening remarks about the particular object of his visit.

Brand was waiting for the judge to do the same. It was the newspaper man who spoke first, after the two had seated themselves. He was anxious to get the matter over with as quickly as possible, for he well knew that, in spite of all his precautions, affairs in a newspaper office are so uncertain that an interruption of an unexpected nature might occur to ruin the entire plan.

"Mr. Dupuy was here a short time ago," he ventured.

Judge Bartelmy proceeded to explain the appearance of the lawyer lobbyist in the affair. While it was plain to Brand that the judge had sent Dupuy as a go-between so that it would be impossible to connect Bartelmy with the payment of any money as a bribe, the jurist did not propose to acknowledge that such had been his laudable purpose. He gave an entirely different version.

"Yes, I know," he said. "He found me at the opera with my daughter. I hoped, Mr. Brand, that by allowing me to act through him you would spare me this last humiliation."

"Would it not be safer for you if no third party knew of your transaction with me?" suggested Brand.

The judge pitied the colossal ignorance of this amateur in trickery. Did not he know that in the superior spheres of crooked practices it became necessary to employ third persons on many occasions to put through matters of this sort? And he was a newspaper man of years of experience too. No, this peculiar young man would never finish supplying the judge with surprises; of that Bartelmy was positive. Perhaps it might be in order to observe at this point that, while Brand of course could not know that these thoughts were passing through his visitor's mind, he at the same time would have been ready to confess that he was going to provide several more surprises for the jurist. But there are different varieties of surprises.

"Dupuy is in my confidence," the judge pronounced with an air of finality.

"He's not in mine," responded the managing ...

"You're mistaken in him. I know him intimately."

"Oh, the pity of it," exclaimed Brand, "that you should be intimately acquainted with such a man as Dupuy!"

Bartelmy could not restrain a sarcastic smile at the editor's sneer at Dupuy.

"Mr. Brand," he said quickly, "your moral reflections at this juncture impart a certain quaint humor to the situation."

"I am afraid that is the trouble with me. My humor is nearly always unintentional." Brand sighed as though sorry for himself.

The judge began to show signs of nervousness.

"Well, shall we get on with it?" the editor asked him.

"Yes. I must rejoin my daughter. She's waiting for me at the opera. She was very anxious that I should not come here tonight. It was curious—her persistency in the matter."

Brand drew his chair closer to the desk—closer to the telephone.

"Let us get to business," he said.

The judge went on talking about his daughter.

"She displays an unusual, I should say an extraordinary, curiosity as to my mission here," he said. "My daughter would have made a great cross examiner if she had been a man."

"We're wasting time, judge." Now it was Brand who was becoming impatient.

"Am I to understand that the payment of this sum"— Bartelmy began.

Brand raised his voice to a high pitch.

"Ten thousand dollars!" he said.

"Yes," agreed Bartelmy cautiously. "Am I to understand that it—ah—wipes out of your recollection not only the incident of which you were speaking, but also as to"— He paused.

Brand helped the would be briber to complete his sentence.

"You mean your secret interview last night with Dupuy and the attorney for the Lansing"—

The visitor raised his hand warningly at Brand's loud tones, as though to counsel caution.

"Yes, yes."

"Lansing Iron corporation?" continued Brand, bending close to the telephone.

"Yes. Will this sum, paid in hand, induce you to forget—ah—not only that incident, but also various other matters to which the Advance seems to have taken exception in the past?"

"Dupuy is in my confidence."

Brand sank back in his chair.

"You mean you want us to let up on you all around?"

"Precisely."

"Then that's understood."

"You will make a memorandum for me in writing to that effect—a receipt, so to speak?"

He pushed a pad toward the managing editor.

"All right—certainly," agreed Brand, taking up a pen.

The judge began to congratulate himself on the ease with which he was handling the young man.

"This is—ah—more businesslike," he said.

But Brand gave him another shock when he said:

"Yes; I'll draw it up in duplicate. Each of us will keep a copy—signed."

"Ah—ha—ha!" The jurist leaned back and laughed. "You're a clever lad, Brand. Well, well; youth will be served." He pushed the pad away.

Brand glanced at the clock fixed to the wall opposite him.

"It's getting late, judge," he warned.

Bartelmy reached into the inside pocket of his evening dress coat and extracted an oblong package. Slipping off a rubber band that encircled it, he unwrapped the yellow paper and laid before him on the managing editor's desk a neat stack of crisp new bank bills, all of the $500 denomination.

Bartelmy started to count the money, but he desisted and pushed the bills over toward Brand.

"Count it," he said.

"You count it."

The judge leaned forward and began the task. His head was within four or five inches of the mouthpiece of the telephone. He picked up the bills, one at a time, and as he counted them he laid them in another pile.

"Five hundred," he said—"one thousand, fifteen—two thousand, twenty-five—three thousand, thirty-five—four thousand, forty-five—five thousand. There is half of it," he remarked.

"Yes; that's $5,000," assented Brand.

"Six thousand," said the judge, continuing with his task—"seven thousand, seventy-five—eight thousand."

"Eight thousand dollars," agreed Brand.

"Nine thousand," counted the judge.

"Nine thousand dollars," said Brand.

"Ten thousand dollars," the judge continued.

"Is that correct?" he queried of the editor.

"Ten thousand dollars, correct," was the reply. "That will wipe the slate clean between us."

Brand held out his hand to take the money.

The judge picked up the pile of bills, compressed them with his hands and extended the money across the desk.

"Take it, Brand," he said.

As the false judge said these words and stood with the money in his hands and held it out to the editor a loud explosion thrilled every nerve fiber in his body. A blinding glare of light filled the room, and the air was filled with the choking gaseous fumes of the smoke of the powder used by photographers in making flashlights.

A pang of terror shot through the craven heart of the would be briber. He started back in his alarm, his eyes almost blinded by the unexpected flood of light that had subsided as quickly as it had come.

"My God! What is that?" he cried, rubbing the back of one of his hands across his eyes.

Wheeler Brand, who had risen in his place at his desk when the judge had finished counting the money, set his face into hard, unyielding lines as the judge besought him to speak, to explain. He had won. He had completely at his mercy this cold, crafty betrayer of the public trust he had sworn to hold sacred. And it was with unmistakable triumph in his voice that he gave the reply that was to be imprinted on the brain of the false judge as long as he was to live—a reply that would haunt him while awake and awake him when he slept:

"It is a picture of you in stripes, Judge Bartelmy," he announced.

The judge, realizing that he had been tricked—that he had been photographed in the very act of handing bribe money to the managing editor of the Advance—displayed rare presence of mind for a man whose complete social and professional ruin had become suddenly imminent. He rushed across the room at the point where the flash occurred, hoping to obtain hold of the camera and destroy the plate. Owing to the pall of smoke he had been unable to see just in what manner the camera had been arranged. But when he reached the side of the room there was no camera to be seen, only a round hole extending through the partition into the next room and from which the camera had been removed. He stood and gazed in dismay. He knew now that he was at the mercy of Brand and the Advance to a degree that he hardly dared to realize.

He turned around and walked back to the desk. Brand was still standing in his place, looking fixedly at the judge.

Bartelmy was not beaten yet. He knew that he would not be beaten until the Advance appeared in the streets spreading forth to all the world the story of his shame.

Shaking from head to foot in his rage, he pounded the desk and cried out:

"You have gone to all your trouble for nothing. I am going direct to Mr. Nolan's house, and in less than an hour you will receive orders to kill that story—that dastardly pack of lies you want to print!"

Brand smiled calmly. He gathered the $10,000 in bills, which lay scattered on the desk where Bartelmy had thrown them when he dashed for the telephone.

"I'll keep these as evidence," he said. "When they have served their purpose we will return them to you, or maybe we will send them to the minority stockholders in the Lansing Iron company. That's who the money probably belongs to."

Bartelmy accepted the situation with stoical composure for the time. He saw that he would have no chance in a hand to hand struggle with the young athletic editor for possession of the money. Besides, he must see Nolan—must see him at once. That was the most important matter to which he should now attend.

He walked deliberately to the closet and secured his hat and coat. He turned the key and went out of the door leading to the outer hall.

As the judge disappeared Wheeler Brand sank heavily into his chair. He spread his arms on his desk and bowed his head between them until his cheek rested on the cool polished surface.

"You count the money, judge."

"Judith, Judith!" he sobbed, and his body shook uncontrollably as he wept for the girl he loved.

CHAPTER XII.

MIDNIGHT in the rooms of a leading daily paper in a big city is not a time when peaceful slumber is in order for those who are concerned in the business of producing the paper. It is the time when trained brains and trained hands are exerted to the extreme limit of their capacity to get the very latest news into shape, into type, into the press, into the mail wagons and "on the street."

And it is in the composing room where the brunt of the battle is borne in the final hours in which is completed the record of a world's doings and undoings for a day. Masses of "copy" swirl upward in the tubes or are carried in by boys from the city editorial room. The typesetting machines click, click, click, in unceasing monotony, and the proofreaders scan columns of "green proofs" with a rapidity, when under pressure, that would amaze the uninitiated observer. The "makeup" men cluster around the cumbersome tables or "stones" on which the forms are made up, lifting in the metal lines of type here, making corrections or shifting cuts there and locking the forms to be shunted into the stereotype room, where the paper matrices will be made. When the matrix is placed in the casting box the molten stereotype metal is poured in, and within a very few minutes the cylindrical plates, hardened quickly in the casting box by the pouring of cold water into the jacket, are locked on the cylinders of the gigantic duodecuple press and ready to whirl off over 100 copies of a paper per second, all printed, pasted, folded and counted.

Midnight in the offices of the Advance on the night that Judge Bartelmy's photograph was taken with $10,000 of bribe money in his hands found the staff of the paper in all departments working as probably they had never worked before, except on election night. The story required considerable time for preparation. The notes of Howard and Jeff, the two reporters who recorded the conversation of Brand and Bartelmy, had to be translated from shorthand into English. Then an introduction and a head had to be written, and the art department had to break all previous records in turning out a cut made from the photograph resulting from the flashlight.

In the composing room men were working like galley slaves to get the great Bartelmy exposure story into type and into the forms. The composing room in the Advance building was a "double decker"—i. e., a second story had been built in the rear part of the room to accommodate the proofreaders. This second story was really but a half story, extending out over a portion of the composing room, and the walls were partitions, the lower half of wood and the upper half of glass windows.

On the lower floor the linotype machines were set in rows. A steam table loomed on one side. On another table, an ironbound one, rested the galleys containing matter for the night's edition of the paper. At the extreme left of the room a wooden partition shut off the small office that the managing editor used at night when he superintended the makeup proceedings. A door opened into this small room from the outer hall, close to a door opening from the hall into the composing room itself. At the opposite end of the compartment a door opened into the composing room. In his small inclosure Brand, the managing editor, had a desk and a telephone. Adjoining the partition, which shut him off from the composing room and on the outside of it, was a desk used by the copy cutters, who cut the pages of manuscript—after they had been pasted together—into "takes." A take is one of the sections into which a story is cut, so that several compositors can work on different parts of the same story simultaneously, resulting in the saving of considerable time in setting it up.

SIXTH WARD RALLY.

A meeting under the auspices of the Sixth Ward Branch, at Federation Hall last Monday evening, drew a good-sized audience. Addresses were given by Comrades C. E. Belcher and E. B. Lewis. The Socialist Glee Club Forward and a colored quartette furnished several musical numbers.

NINTH WARD BRANCH.

At the meeting of the Ninth Ward Branch, held last Thursday evening, the entertainment committee was instructed to arrange for a dance in the near future. Comrade Mrs. Ella Reeve Bloor, national organizer, was present and gave an instructive address. The discussion of the proposed new constitution for Ohio was postponed for one week. The propaganda committee recommended the purchase of 5000 copies of the Milwaukee edition of The Appeal to Reason.

TENTH WARD MEETING.

The Tenth Ward Branch invites the public to its next meeting, Sunday afternoon, February 26, at 2:30 o'clock, at Hunt's Hall, 854½ North High street. Comrade Lewis, of The Columbus Socialist, will give an address.

ELEVENTH WARD BRANCH NEWS.

The "propaganda committee" is now preparing the second number of leaflets, the distribution of which occurs bi-monthly. The first one, which was entitled "Gas?" made quite a hit in the ward, every house having been supplied with a copy by the organized force of precinct workers. These comrades are taking hold of this and other work, which Organizer Freeman has outlined for them, in the true Socialist spirit, which always produces good results.

SOCIALIST PIONEER DIES.

Another pioneer Socialist has passed away. Comrade Martin Van Buren Dils died last Friday, February 17, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. C. S. Holly, 922 Atchison street, in his seventy-first year. He was born at Parkersburg, W. Va., May 14, 1840. For years he was an employe of the Panhandle railroad. He had been a member of Parkersburg Lodge No. 7, I. O. O. F. The funeral was under the auspices of Robert Curtis Lodge 762, I. O. O. F., and burial took place at Union cemetery. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Lena Dils, and three daughters, Mrs. C. S. Holley, Mrs. C. McGlade, 906 Arsenal avenue, and Mrs. C. P. Sands, of Linden Heights. The deceased was a true and tried Socialist of the best type.

CITY ORGANIZERS WANT SPEAKERS.

The City Organization Committee desires the names of all comrades who are willing to enter training as speakers. It is desired to develop the "home talent" of Local Columbus. There are many comrades who only need practice to become good speakers. Volunteers will please send their names to The Socialist office. Branches can also file applications for meetings at the same place.

NEWS FROM WORKHOUSE.

Captain Booth resigned February 1, to take effect February 15, and quit on that day. Superintendent Owen is now acting in the double capacity of superintendent and captain of the guard. It is not known whether Mr. Owen will draw the salary paid the captain or not. It will be recalled that Superintendent Owen delayed taking his place in hopes that the salary would be increased from $100 to $150 per month.

Director McCune and Parole Officer Sexton visited the workhouse last week, and declared that more prisoners would have to be paroled owing to the overcrowded cells. The real cause seems to be the unsanitary conditions. The itch is now reported epidemic at the workhouse.

Nearly four weeks ago a colored prisoner named Hoston, who was in the hospital, made an attempt to escape, but was caught. He had sawed two bars at the window clear through. These bars were left in that shape, and on Monday night of last week an inmate named Jones bent the bars back, crawled through, and is still at large.

CHEAPER APPLES AS LIQUOR SUBSTITUTE

City Treasurer of Milwaukee Talks on City Planning.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Feb. 11.—"Apples at $1.00 a barrel will do more to overcome the abnormal appetite for liquor than the prohibition party ever did;" said C. H. Whitnall, city treasurer of Milwaukee, speaking on the subject "City Planning," under the auspices of the Institute of Municipal and Social Service.

In his preamble Mr. Whitnall included the following succinct sketch of the use and purpose of planning cities for the people: "We have arrived at a stage of our social strife called civilization, where certain unnatural conditions, called diseases, are recognised as dangerous, and the influential citizens, through personal fear, have drawn on public sympathy enough to establish a few hospitals, asylums or institutions for social defense.

"Why do we not remove the influences which lower the victims' vitality to the degree of decay, called tuberculosis or typhoid? A healthy person within natural environment is immune. Without natural environment no amount of hospital service can protect us. A comparatively few people can manage a hospital and save more or less victims from death, but by none less than the power and authority of the city as a whole can the cause of these diseases be removed.

"This is the fundamental object of city planning. We must also insist that the livelihood of labor should not be hewn down below the level of efficient citizenship. We must determine how much of poverty is the result of social neglect. We must decipher the relation of economic wrong to destitution.

"The solution consists in making the city a humanized entity."

Continuing, Mr. Whitnall cites the fact that every human being is to a great extent the product of his environment. Like the father who whipped his daughter for disobedience, and afterward found that she was deaf, the city is punishing its citizens for being what it compels them to be by the environment in which it compels them to live. The city is, therefore, as unreasonable as the father who did not know that his child was deaf.

"Poverty in Milwaukee means helplessness." It also pays the highest rates for its miserable existence in food and shelter. The slum dwelling is connected with the palatial residence by the tariff which the citizens who dwell in the latter impose on the vice of the slum. What is known as vice in the slums becomes, by a touch of hypocrisy, art in the select regions.

"Last year we officially picked the pockets of our criminal court victims of $38,000, and we call it a fine system. The real criminal class in Milwaukee today is composed of those who have been the domihating power. Those we call criminals are the inevitable results of conditions which we tolerate.

"Every child born inherits the right to a requisite amount of the three God-given forces, which, if withheld, or diverted from universal use, cause pestilence. They are clean water, sunlight and a normal atmosphere. A city that does not administer its trust, insuring to each and every person this inheritance, is guilty. Milwaukee has been indicted by nature years ago.

"Looking to the future of Milwaukee, actuated by a desire to make it a better Milwaukee, the following projects are being carefully considered, and preliminary steps have already been taken for their execution."

Mr. Whitnall here outlined the connection between the animal and the vegetable kingdom and showed how the proper relation between the two can be maintained by a system of parking that will provide for the requisite amount of vegetation throughout the city. He showed how people who have been accustomed to sufficient open and tree-covered areas are not satisfied to live in the vitiated atmosphere of the cities, where the air is nearly always supersaturated on account of the lack of vegetation to absorb moisture and bad drainage.

"The only reason why we do not all live in parks is because our minds do not meet. Every economic and physical factor requires such a move. We will require about ten thousand acres of land, of which about four thousand will be devoted to apples. Our entire park and street cleaning department, including maintenance of the canalization, will be easily maintained by the income from the political sanitation or park department.

Before these plans can be carried out trunk-line travel ways must be established. Broad streets or radial highways, the cities' arteries can not be disassociated from the problem of housing. These will facilitate the daily ebb and flow of traffic and increase the area available for home building.

"Facility of communication is the very basis for the existence of a city. And its success is more dependent on its means of circulation than any other physical factor under its control."

It is calculated to build these parked ways 150 feet wide, and these will constitute the trunk lines for travel and connect the various neighborhood centers of the city. These centers, it is expected, will provide space for kindergartens, gymnasiums, auditoriums for local gatherings, postoffice and offices for all public service. Thus they become business, recreation and social centers. Storage tracks for cars may also be provided here, so that all brick, coal and other heavy traffic may be moved at night, after being loaded during the daytime.

The new system should be taken into account in the laying out of new additions to the city.

Mr. Whitnall also outlined plans for placing model homes within the reach of the people, providing for payments in such a manner that all may be able to benefit by them.

One thousand five hundred cities in Germany and Switzerland, built upon similar lines, are free from taxes and self-supporting. Milwaukee can be.

In conclusion Mr. Whitnall said: "It is really nothing more or less than a matter of economy. The real objection is that planning lessens the opportunity of individuals getting something for nothing. Just at present there is a contest on between the certainties of nature's economics and the gamble or chance for individual avarice."

"THE TRUST PROBLEM."

Ralph Korngold, who is to take the third number on the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course, is a Hollander by birth. He is a man who has traveled much, and who knows how to give others the benefits of his experiences.

He has achieved prominence as an educator and as a newspaper man. For years he has been a regular contributor to children's magazines and newspapers in this country and in Holland, among them being the Daily Telegraph and the Twentieth Century Magazine, and his work is in especial demand by all the Socialist publications.

As a national organizer he has toured all the Western States, and he has taken an active part in two of the winning Milwaukee campaigns.

The Daily Herald, of Quincy, Ill., a Republican paper, says of him: "Those who want to hear a man speak as if he were connected with a galvanic battery, a man who emits showers of sparks and bursts of blue flame when he talks, ought to hear him. He is a live wire, and carries his own dynamo."

Ralph Korngold will lecture next Tuesday evening at the Board of Trade Auditorium. Single admissions, 10 cents.

TOO MUCH HURRY UP.

"Well, I'll be blessed," said the manufacturer of wooden boxes in a tired tone; "but we can't keep help in the factory any more. A man wants to loaf all the time and he expects to acquire a handsome fortune at that occupation in the course of a few months. If he don't get that fortune he grumbles about under pay and unfair division of the profits of industry. It's awfully exasperating." It was indeed, particularly as the box manufacturer's wife had paid $35 for a bracelet in the early part of the month, and the bill had just come in.

"What's the matter with your men?" asked the Pessimist.

"Oh," replied the manufacturer, "they're lazy. You see, in our mill the boards go into a machine to be shaped and fitted, and from there they are carried over to another machine to be put together. We pay nine dollars for that carrying work, and the fellow on the machine gets a couple of dollars extra, and orders to push things so that the men who carry will get good sized loads. Well, sir, those fellows don't want to carry much of anything, and they want to loaf at that. Just to show you. Last week we took on a Polak. He was a good husky fellow, and went to carrying. Today he walks up and says:

"'Gif me my money. Me ne more work for you.'

"'What's the matter, Stan?' said I.

"'Me no like so work. Too much hurry up for nine dollars.' Now, what do you think of that?"

"I think," replied the Pessimist, "that Stan is doing some thoughtful thinking."

From official returns we learn that Ohio has passed from fourth into first place in the Socialist column. In 1908 New York, Illinois and Pennsylvania in their order led the Buckeye State, but this year Ohio passes the Empire State with a 10 per cent. lead and Illinois by about the same. Pennsylvania shows a fine increase, but little over one-third that scored by Ohio. The principal states stand as follows: Ohio, 66,637; Pennsylvania, 53,145; Illinois, 49,428; New York, 44,659. California made a splendid gain and counts 40,995 votes for Socialism, while Wisconsin totals 39,284.

Now Get Busy!

The Socialist Wants 10,000 More Subscribers in Columbus Right Away.

The Workers in "The Storm Center Of Socialism" Have A Chance To Make Good.

All That Is Needed Is "A Long Pull, A Strong Pull, and A Pull Altogether."

The Socialist Makes Fair Proposition To Secure The Co-Operation Of All For The Next Campaign.

READ EVERY WORD OF OUR OFFER.

The Socialist wishes to co-operate with the City Central Committee, the Ward Branches and the precinct workers of the Socialist party of Columbus in educating the voters and organizing our forces so that we may reap the full benefit of our educational work.

We believe that one of the most effective means of educating the workers and of propagating Socialism is through the columns of a good Socialist paper. The paper goes each week into the home and carries some message, some truth, to each of its readers. While we make no apology for our paper, we are determined that each issue shall be an improvement over the previous one.

The subscription list is the life of any paper. Without it, it dies. We want at least 10,000 subscribers on our books before the campaign opens. We must have them if The Socialist is to be the power for good that it should be in the fight of 1911 in Columbus, "the Storm Center of Socialism."

OUR PLAN.

Here is our plan to put money into the treasuries of the City Central Committee and of the Ward Branches for use in organization and propaganda work, as they may determine:

1. We will pay to each Ward Branch 12½ per cent. of all money for subscriptions collected and turned in by its members to The Socialist.

2. We will pay over to the treasury of the City Central Committee of Local Columbus 12½ per cent. of all money collected and paid in by the Ward Branches for subscriptions to The Socialist.

LIST OF PRIZES.

As Prizes or special rewards for the workers we offer the following:

1. To the Branch turning in the largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, in proportion to membership of the Branch in good standing, we will give $75 in books, to be selected by the Branch, or in money.

2. To the Branch turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, under the foregoing conditions, we will gice $50 in books or money.

3. To the Branch turning in the third largest amount of money on subscriptions as stated we will give $25 in books or money.

INDIVIDUAL REWARDS.

1. To the individual turning in the largest amount of money on subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $25 in gold.

2. To the individual turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $15 in gold.

3. To the individual who turns in the third largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $10 in gold.

CONDITIONS.

The only conditions we impose in this contest are that the members of Branches will get all their sub. cards from the literature or special agent of their respective Branches and that this agent will at all times have on hand a supply of sub. cards and make returns to The Socialist of all subscriptions received not later than Wednesday of each week. Sub. cards will be supplied by this office at any time. This contest will be limited to Branches and Locals in Franklin County.

This Contest Began On Saturday, Feb. 11, and Will Close Tuesday, November 7, 1911

Information as to details of this contest will be cheerfully furnished by this office.

THE RAILWAY RATE DECISION.

The Interstate Commerce Commissioners have rejected for good and sufficient reasons the increased freight rates proposed by the railroads.

The Commissioners point out:

First, that the revenues of the railroads and the disbursements to their stockholders have been steadily increasing. In the year ending June 30, 1901, the average net operating revenue of all the railroads in the country was $2,951 per mile; in the year ending June 30, 1910, it had risen to $3,913 per mile, an increase of about 33 per cent. Again, in 1880, the year after the act to regulate commerce took effect, only 38.56 per cent. of railroad stock was paying dividends, which averaged 5.38 per cent.; but in 1910 the percentage of stock paying dividends rose to 67.20 per cent., and the average rate paid on this stock was 7.47 per cent. And this notwithstanding the continual watering of stocks. Manifestly a business that is continually increasing its revenues and distributions of profit stands in no fear of imminent bankruptcy, as the railroad presidents and attorneys have been pretending.

Second, that the increases in wages granted in the spring of 1910 to the various labor organizations do not justify an increase in railroad freight rates. These wage increases averaged from 5 to 8 per cent., and according to the officials of forty-one railroads they, aggregate $35,000,000 a year. But the earnings of these forty-one railroads during the year ending June 30, 1910, aggregated an increase of $51,000,000, so that their aggregate net earnings would have increased by $16,000,000 even if the wage increases had been granted for that entire year.

Third, that the cost of railway supplies and materials, with the exception of fuel and ties, is less now, on the average, than in any of the past ten years. In other words, the "cost of living" for the railroads has not gone up, and this notwithstanding the fact that the same financial interests which control the railroads are also in control of the steel, car, equipment and coal companies from which the railroads purchase their supplies, and that the cost of the latter is no longer determined by competition.

Now the railroads threaten to do all sorts of dire things. They threaten to curtail expenditures on improvements and extensions. In fact, some reports of such curtailment have already been published. We do not believe there is any truth in these reports. Every big railroad company operating over thousands of miles of territory is all the time stopping work in one place and starting or resuming it in another place. It is therefore in the power of the railroad managements and their various organs in the press to announce contraction or extension of activity, according to whatever impression they desire to produce on the public mind. But just now the general tendency of industry and commerce is distinctly toward improvement. The Steel Trust is reporting extension of operations. The Harriman railroads have announced that their entire system will be double-tracked within five years; this will involve an outlay of $75,000,000. Bond and note issues, aggregating hundreds of millions of dollars, have been successfully floated, and the financial magnates have even undertaken the rehabilitation of the long-neglected Gould railroads. These things denote confidence in the immediate future, and the railroads, which, according to the Interstate Commerce Commission, are making more money than ever, will not find this an opportune time for giving an "object lesson" to the government or to the people. They must extend their facilities if they are to keep up with the industrial and agricultural growth of the country.

But the railroads also threaten to cut down wages. In fact, one dispatch from Chicago tells of the withdrawal by the St. Paul on Saturday of a 6 per cent. wage increase that had been granted on Thursday before the announcement of the decision. Whether the railroads will succeed in carrying this threat into effect depends entirely, first, upon the strength of the labor organizations involved, and secondly, upon general business conditions. If business should generally improve, a struggle with the railway brotherhoods would prove an extremely costly proceudre. These brotherhoods, it will be remembered, supported the railroad magnates in their demand for increased rates, and now they are to be rewarded for their dog-like fidelity to their masters with reductions, or threats of reductions in pay! They will only reap what they have sown. A labor organization that looks upon the interests of its members as identical with those of their exploiters is sure to be turned down by the latter at the first favorable opportunity, while it has forfeited the sympathy and the support of the more enlightened elements of the working class.

The news comes that the Ohio National Guard officers will meet next year in Toledo, instead of Columbus. The people of Columbus are not sorry. We had enough of the swaggering "tin soldiers" here last summer. Still Toledo hardly deserves such a calamity.

THE SOCIALIST PARTY.

Yes, Brother Worker, the wealth-producers are under the pleasant necessity of building a political party of their own. If we want to accomplish anything by political action we must have a party which belongs entirely to ourselves and those in sympathy with us. (The workers must always be the main body of such a party.)

You see, Fellow Worker, it is the political party which is dominant in governmental affairs. Therefore, it is idle to vote for "good men" who run on the old-party tickets. Every candidate is merely the official representative of the party that gave him his nomination. Men who are "independent" of their (?) party will fall victims to the party ax at last. This is a government of, by and for the political party or parties that win out on election day.

We must build our own party, and we must pay its expense. Unless we pay for it, somebody else will own and control it. The old parties are conducted "for revenue only." The man that pays the revenue owns the party. So we pay for our party, and own it. Hence the dues system and membership cards in our Socialist party. We all pay alike, and have the same voice and vote alike within its councils.

The old parties claim to conduct matters of state for you for nothing. But the fact is, they cost you dearly. You are robbed of two-thirds of your entire product. The two old parties hold you while Big Business picks your pockets. When you realize this, there will be something doing in the realm of politics.

Frederick Guy Strickland.

GAS COMPANIES OFFER COMPROMISE.

The first "compromise" offering from the gas company in the fight over the new gas rate, effective July 1, when the present rate expires, developed Monday night in an ordinance presented to council "by request."

It provides for a rate of 30 cents a thousand feet net, the present rate, for the next five years, and the same rate for the next five years also, provided conditions in supply and cost of production do not change and force for the last five years a higher rate. Whether such a change in the supply and cost has taken place or not is to be decided by an arbitration board, made up of one member chosen by council, another member chosen by the company, and a third selected by these two.

This is the second ordinance offered on "behalf of the gas company." The first one provided for a 30-cent rate for the first five years, and a 35-cent rate for the last five years.

Councilman Lewis introduced the arbitration ordinance "by request." When the gas companies offer anything that looks like a compromise you can be sure that there is a trick in it somewhere. Any agreement made which will cost the companies anything will have to be enforced through the courts, and the city generally loses there.

THE HOUSING CODE HELD UP.

The housing code ordinance was side-tracked at the session of the city council last Monday night. With deep emotion, Councilman Chris Ross pleaded that those who were opposed to the code should be heard, and the council voted to refer the code to a meeting of the "committee of the whole," Friday night of this week. Mr. Ross said in his speech:

"Last Thursday night, when this place was packed solid with people backing up the code there was plenty of property owners in the crowd who wanted to say something to us against the measure, but with that crowd here for the code they did not have the nerve.

"These are the property owners who are affected by this code, and naturally they don't like to get up before a crowd like that and give their reasons," continued Ross. "Now it is only fair that their desires and wishes be taken into consideration by us. I'll invite them here to a meeting of the committee of the whole Thursday night, to tell us what they want. If they don't wish to come here in the open, I will see them privately, find out what they want us to do and communicate this to council. As far as I'm concerned I've made up my mind and I'm going to vote for MOST of the sections of that code."

Councilman Mahanna took the same view. "Why," he insisted, "that meeting last Thursday night was packed with friends of the measure; no wonder no one got up and spoke against it. It was not a fair thing to council, or to those not wishing the measure, to pack the meeting that way. I've had lots of property owners come to me privately and complain against the provisions of that measure. I think before this council even considers acting on it, printed copies ought to be spread broadcast, so that every property owner who is affected would have a chance to put up a fight against it."

The council chamber certainly was crowded Thursday night of last week, and not a voice was lifted against the code. Business men, contractors, labor unionists and professional men united in condemning present conditions. The most striking was the following from Dr. J. W. Clemmer, health officer: "I AM NOT HERE TO DEFEND THE HEALTH DEPARTMENT, BUT TO ASK THAT IT BE UNDERSTOOD. OUR AUTHORITY IS LIMITED. ONE OF OUR MEN ASKED A WOMAN TO PROVIDE A CAN FOR HER GARBAGE. 'WE HAVE NO GARBAGE,' SHE SAID, 'WE EAT GARBAGE.'"

Watch out for the landlords who oppose every progressive measure.

"THE TONGUES OF TOIL."

Comrade William Francis Barnard has sent forth a volume of poetry, which is poetry. It is entitled "The Tongues of Toil, and Other Poems." The title poem is, without doubt, the greatest hymn of the revolution that has been written in this century. It has the stirring swing of a battle-song. It is the American "Marsellaise."

Few great poets have sought their themes in the commonplace interests of labor. Burns, with a diversity and purity of intent has [illegible] people, and our [illegible] poets, but many more pretentious poets have sought in art of ideality the framework of their poetic structures; in short, in things popularly regarded as being more dignified than labor.

Laborers have little time for poetry. What they read should be the best. "The Tongues of Toil" will, therefore, be welcomed as a valuable addition to our limited supply of literature of this kind. It is a book of poems entirely about labor. It sings of the drudgery, the work, the sorrows, the joys and the aspirations of the laborer. No distinction is made between men and women as workers. Both are given the credit long since due them for the important part they have played in our civilization, and it is done in gentle, simple, rhythmical style, with a semi-melancholy undertone that speaks the sincere recognition of the tragedy of injustice and rights denied.

The author of this charming verse has set forth in a most appealing way the aspirations and the spirit of the cause of labor.

The persecutions of our time are done into poetical protest under titles such as "Francisco Ferrer," "The Masters," "A Warning," "To the Enemies of Free Speech," "The Modern Tyrant" and "The Newer Hemlock."

"The Death of a Toiler," "Hymn of Labor" and "The Agitator" are three very impressive poems that the reader will remember, and he will seek the book often for the purpose of re-reading them.

The book is one that every Socialist should have. It is beautifully bound, and sells for one dollar per copy. It can be ordered from the author, at 31050 Calumet avenue, Chicago, Ill.

MARSHALL'S LATEST MOVE.

Mayor George Marshall is going to stop Socialism. He outlined his plan at the Indianola Presbyterian Church, last Monday evening. The mayor said:

"You haven't any control in the matter under existing laws. Several organizations over the city have adopted resolutions urging council to fix a rate of 25 cents for gas," he continued, "but suppose the gas company refuses to accept this and disconnects its line into Columbus. You'd give 50 cents a thousand to get it back, wouldn't you?" the mayor asked. "And you would want to hang me if I was the cause of having your gas taken from you."

The mayor said that a public utilities bill offered some remedy, but pointed out that the corporations would still have the right of appeal to the courts, which would mean long delay in progress. Municipal ownership, he said, was the only adequate remedy, "and it's the thing that will prevent the growth of Socialism," said the mayor.

The mayor is too late. He has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. He has no influence with the present council, and the people have no confidence in either the chief executive or the local law-makers. Only a mayor backed by a strong organized sentiment can do anything.

You can not stop Socialism, Mr. Marshall. You can not even check it.

RED FLAG SIGN OF BROTHERHOOD

Mayor Gaynor, of New York, Orders Police Not to Interfere With Socialists.

In a message to the board of aldermen, Mayor Gaynor, of New York, delivered himself of some thought regarding police interference with Socialist propaganda, and the arrest of strikers. Said Gaynor, in part:

"I have particularly made the police authorities understand that those who entertain views of government, or of an economic or social order, different from ours, are not to be interfered with, or denied the right of freedom of speech and of assembly on that account.

"A propaganda by intellectual persuasion and peaceable means for changes in form of government or in the economic or social order is lawful and not to be meddled with, much less oppressed, by the police. The Socialists do not believe in individualism, but in collectivism. In place of having the present condition of individual ownership of property, they would mass all land and chief products and the principal means, tools, and machinery of production, under the control and operation of the state, in order, as they claim, to bring about distributive justice, namely, a just division of the total product of industry among all those who contribute to produce it by their physical or mental work, after first providing for the non-productive aged and infirm. That it clearly appears to the rest of us that this scheme would be doing away with incentives to individual exertion, greatly reduce production, and thereby increase poverty and distress, is no reason for denying to those who advocate it rights secured to every one by our system of government. And that their flag is red instead of blue or yellow or green does not annoy or alarm intelligent people.

"They chose the color red for their emblem, not to signify that they favor violence or the shedding of blood, as the unintelligent suppose, and as actions of those in official authority often lead people to believe, but for the purpose of typifying the common brotherhood of all men, of all nations, through the same red blood which flows through the veins of all, and to the end that all war and violence shall cease. Let the fundamental rights of all on which free government rests be denied to no one. Those who want to work changes peaceably through the ballot-box have the right to do so. They may let light in on them. As John Stuart Mill says, that which seems the height of absurdity to one generation often becomes the height of wisdom to the next."

BUSINESS MAN SAYS SOCIALISM MUST WIN.

It is next to impossible for an avowed Socialist to convince an avowed capitalist that the people of America are about through with business for profit. Perhaps some of them will listen while a professional business man tells them the same thing.

Rodger W. Babson is a commercial and financial forecaster. From his home in Detroit he has addressed a "special letter" to business men, telling them that Socialism is inevitable. Says he:

"Although I am conservative in both training and environment and am vehemently opposed to much of the present day Socialistic doctrines, yet I feel obliged to emphasize to bankers, merchants and investors the importance of recognizing these Socialistic tendencies, and preparing for a social change which seems almost inevitable. The so-called 'radicalism' of ex-President Roosevelt and others is common knowledge, as well as certain social experiments now being tried in Germany, France and England. I do feel, however, that the average merchant and investor looks upon such movements as the temporary flights of irresponsible labor leaders who have accidentally acquired political power.

WHAT THEY ALL SAY.

"That this progressive movement is of vastly wider scope was most firmly impressed upon me at the recent annual meeting of the American Economic Association. Here were gathered not a body of labor leaders nor hot-headed Socialists, but rather the finest intellectual products of our greatest universities, including such men as Professors Taussig and Carver, of Harvard University; Professors Fisher, Farnum and Day, of Yale University; Professors Dewey, Seligman, Doten, Haney and others of well known reputation.

"When it is considered that these men not only represent our oldest and greatest universities of learning, but also were brought up under the most conservative family and traditional influences, their words should not be carelessly ignored. For instance, when Woodrow Wilson, late president of Princeton, says that two per cent. of the inhabitants of our cities control 60 per cent. of the wealth, and asks 'Why this will be permitted?' he is listened to. When Professor Ely, of the University of Wisconsin, the advance in So-cialism and suggested the increased proportion of taxes which must be placed upon wealth, irrespective of our Constitution, business men should take notice. Another said, 'Wall Street now fears Roosevelt, but they will see the time when Roosevelt and his doctrines will seem ultra conservative, and Wall Street will beseech him to lead their interests.'

CONCERNING HIGHWAYMEN.

"When one of the leading professors of a great Massachusetts institution stated that 'no man can honestly with his brain make more than $100,000 per year,' he was asked about a certain great merchant of national reputation, who has organized and is operating a mammoth business. The professor, however, replied: 'But there is also a difference in highwaymen. Some have the ability to hold up only one person in a night, while others can hold up an entire train!' Of course, if these were the remarks of ordinary men, they might not be worth repeating; but considering from whence they came and that almost the entire body of the convention was in accord with this same spirit, I believe these remarks are of great significance.

"Although government ownership of almost everything was advocated by many, yet the majority seemed to favor the Roosevelt policies of government regulation, instead of government ownership or operation, although carried to a much farther point than our ex-President ever suggested. These men, who are teaching our boys, apparently believe that the business of all of our 'trusts' should be under as close government scrutiny as our national banks, and that the prices of many commodities should be under federal control.

SOME STOP HERE.

"On the other hand, they emphasize the point that the American people may be depended upon to be fair; and even in this present rate discussion, if the people felt that the railroads really needed an increase, it would cheerfully be granted. The troubles, they say, came from the fact that the people think the railroads are 'bluffing.'

"Apart from government regulation, increased taxation was most strongly urged. Huge inheritance taxes of 50 per cent. or more, and very much heavier corporation taxes than any of us have ever dreamed of heretofore, were recommended. Upon suggesting to one able man that this would place a check upon legitimate railroad and industrial development, he replied: 'No, we can let your financiers plan and build, fight and steal as heretofore; but they must pay for the privilege. In other words, they must pay the price of admission to the ring. If a man wishes to operate a board for gambling in stocks, he must pay a license of $100,000 or more a year, and increase his commissions to correspond, or if a Harriman wishes the fun of stealing a railroad, he must be willing to divide the spoils at once with the government, and at his death give up the remaining half.'

THE TERRIBLE SUFFERING.

"Of course, these statements by themselves may not seem reasonable, but when one hears of the terrible sufferings and wretched social conditions in almost every section of the world he must realize that present methods have not accomplished much up to the present time, and, although conditions are continually improving, yet this improvement is very slow.

"As to what the political future is to bring forth, no one knows, but assuming that these men are partly mistaken, it nevertheless is apparent that our nation is in a transition period such as has not been witnessed since the discussion of the slavery question. Moreover, although the full dreams of these men may never be realized, yet their influence upon the coming generation can not be overlooked, and it behooves all bankers and investors to study these question and watch the progress and development of progressive economic and social thought, remembering that it is useless to try to block any movement which is fundamentally sound.

"In fact, I believe it would be greatly to the advantage of all such business men to join the American Economic Association. It is the leading association of its kind in America, operated, it is true, by university men, but containing among its members many of the nation's most far-sighted and liberal-minded business men. Not only do I believe it very advisable to keep in close touch with the views of these intellectual leaders, but I believe it will do them good to associate more with practical business men. In view of this, I have consented to serve on the membership committee of said association, and I have asked Professor T. N. Carver, of Harvard University, who is secretary of the association, for some membership blanks. The total expense is only $3 per year, and this includes subscription to the quarterly publications, which should be in the library of every man having financial and business interests."

GOMPERS IN CHICAGO.

Chicago.—Addressing the Chicago Federation of Labor, Margaret Haley, of the Teachers' Federation, told how the Chicago branch of the Civic Federation had imported F. V. Holman, a corporation lawyer, and tool of the "interests," also being an officer of six public utility corporations in Portland, Ore., to lead the fight against the direct legislation amendment now before the state legislature of Illinois.

Raymond Robbins, prominent in labor movements in the Middle West, startled his hearers when he declared, turning towards President Gompers, that it was hard to distinguish the difference between the Civic Federation and the rotten stench of the stock yards. Gompers was astounded. So were the delegates. Robbins went after the speakers at the Civic Federation banquet, recently held at the La Salle hotel.

THE WET BLANKET.

You've seen him.

The man who can't.

The man who says YOU can't.

The man to whom all things are impossible.

The man who imagines his timidity is foresight and flatters himself that his laziness is good judgment.

We have him in the Socialist party even—always ready to throw the wet blanket over any enterprise that is fostered by those who want to go ahead and do things.

When a new recruit comes into the party, filled with the high ideals of Socialism, and a determination to change the world, that is an inspiration to the rest of the comrades—when a flame of enthusiasm begins to creep through the local and threatens to break into a conflagration, the "man who can't" throws his wet blanket over it and tries to smother it before it gets to a stage where it will make it so hot for him that he will have to move.

The "man who can't" never does anything except to try to show the others what THEY can't do. It is a religious duty with him to keep these thoughtless young people from allowing their enthusiasm to lead them into all sorts of mistakes. His motto is, "Better do nothing than make a mistake."

If you try to get up an ice cream social he will tell you it is no use, that all the drug stores are selling it, that the town is full of ice cream parlors, and the parlors are full of people. It's no use to tell him that the time to sell ice cream is when everybody is eating it.

If you speak about a card party out comes the blanket again—it will not pay. You tell him that we gave three last year and they all paid, and he will tell you that he knows that, but times are different now.

Start something in the line of a dance and immediately the blanket man gets busy. "Why, every lodge and every union in town has given a dance this winter." "Were they not all a success?" "Yes, but the thing has been overdone."

Try to get up a picnic in the summer time and we are told that the roads are dusty and the sun is hot and the flies are bad and it is most sure to rain and spoil all our fun.

But it is when you try to get a speaker to town that the wet blanket is used most vigorously. "Extravagance, money wasted, you can't get people out to hear him." As for the blanket man, there is no need for him to hear a speaker—he has nothing to learn. He will tell you that the same money put into literature will do more good, and then when you make a motion to buy literature he will tell you that you can't get the people to read, and that it is useless to cast your pearls before swine. No matter what you attempt to do he will prophesy failure and then he will withhold his support, if he does not actually knock it, so that he can say, "I told you so," and show how wise he is. One often wonders why he stays in the party, but he hangs on, as weak natures are always inclined to cling, like a dead weight, to strong ones. And his deadening influence is great, for he has all the inertia and indifference of the sleepers to help him out, while the enthusiast has this to overcome. It is so much more comfortable to sleep on than it is to be rudely awakened. You know how it is when the alarm clock goes off and you start to get up and then you happen to think that it is Sunday morning and you don't have to go to work, and you roll over and go to sleep again. And so when the wet blanket is thrown over some enterprise it relieves us of the trouble and expense of putting it through, and we sometimes allow our enthusiasm to be killed.

Look out for the man with the wet blanket; he's a dam in the stream.

Let your enthusiasm rise and wash him away.

Don't be afraid of making mistakes.

Don't court failure.

Keep trying.

Do things.

MASTER AND MAN SYSTEM.

"What did you tell that man just now?"

"I told him to hurry."

"What right have you to tell him to hurry?"

"I pay him to hurry."

"What do you pay him?"

"A dollar a day."

"Where do you get the money to pay him with?"

"I sell bricks."

"Who makes the bricks?"

"He does."

"How many bricks does he make?"

"Twenty-four men can make 24,000 bricks in a day."

"Then, instead of you paying him, he pays you six dollars a day for standing around and telling him to hurry."

"Well, but I own the machines."

"How did you get the machines?"

"Sold brick and bought them."

"Who make the brick?"

"Shut up! The fools may wake up."—Nashville Advocate. — (Taken from Horseshoers' Journal.)

IS IT IRRELIGIOUS?

Allen Cook, of Canton, Ohio, author of "Socialism and Its Message to the Church," has been indulging in a controversy with one Rev. Arthur W. Higby. We quote the following from Comrade Cook:

"Is it irreligious for the people to own their own bridges and operate them without tolls? Is it irreligious for a city to own its own lighting plants, its water system, its public schools, its libraries, its heating systems and other public utilities and operate them without rents, dividends or profits? Would it be irreligious for the people to own the street railways, the railroads, the coal mines, the ice plants, the packing houses and the other great industries and operate them for the use and benefit of the people without paying rents, dividends or profits to some wealthy money lords? This is exactly what Socialism is, and intends to be. If it is immoral or irreligious, let the Rev. Higby point it out."

SOCIALISTS IN ACTION.

News From The World Wide Movement Of The Workers.

NEWS FROM THE NATIONAL SOCIALIST HEADQUARTERS

Comrade Lanfersiek, State Secretary of Kentucky, reports fine progress in his state. The dues for January of this year more than doubled those of the same month last year. Three new locals were chartered during January. He also reports that Locals Louisville and Covington have been growing so rapidly that they have been compelled to seek larger quarters.

State Secretary Mary R. Sanford, of Vermont, reports a 30 per cent. increase in membership in that state since December 1.

The comrades of South Bend, Ind., have taken over the former headquarters of the Republican party and converted it into a Socialist headquarters. The Republicans could no longer meet the expense, and the comrades very kindly relieved them. The headquarters is now known as Hanford Hall, and is located at 114-118 Colfax avenue, South Bend. It will seat about three hundred people in the assembly room, and in addition they have a well-equipped reading room and are fitting up a rest room. Since moving into their new home the local is increasing rapidly in membership. Entertainments and lectures are given every Saturday and Sunday evening.

Acceptances and declinations of nominations for members of the Woman's National Committee closed February 24. Since last report the following comrades have accepted and declined:

Accepted—Agnes H. Downing, Los Angeles, Cal.; Mary E. Garbutt, Los Angeles, Cal.; Esther Laukki, Smithville, Minn.; Mary O'Reilly, Chicago; Minnie C. Steinfest, Sayre, Pa.

Declined—Anita C. Block, New York City; Josephine Conger-Kaneko, Girard, Kan.; Mila Tupper Maynard, Denver, Colo.; Lida Parce, Chicago; Mrs. Emil Seidel, Milwaukee, Wis.; Elizabeth H. Thomas, Milwaukee, Wis.

Individual membership ballots will be forwarded to all divisions of the party on or about February 28.

PROPOSED NATIONAL PARTY REFERENDUM.

Local Colbert, Bradley, Okla.,
Feb. 23, 1911.

National Headquarters,
Socialist Party.

Inasmuch as the Federal judiciary is exercising authority above and superior to that of any other branch of the government, and in effect thereby making each and all other branches of the government dependent upon and subject to its judgment and will, not only in the interpretation of the constitutionality of law and in judgment of cases arising under the law, but also in creating and executing law in its own name and power, such as injunctions, etc.;

Inasmuch as the Federal judiciary has always and is continuing to exercise said authority at the behest of and in the interests of the dominant capitalist class, as against the interests of and despite the protests of the laboring class;

Inasmuch as the Federal judiciary is not responsible nor subject to the franchise of the people, and there is no appeal from its judgments and commands, it possesses and continues to increasingly exercise an unresponsible and unrestricted tyrannical power which is deadly to the happiness, welfare and liberty of the people. Such unresponsible and unrestricted power is opposed to the principle of government of, by and for the people, and has proved fatal to the welfare and liberty of the laboring class. The remedy lies in making the Federal judiciary subject to the people instead of the people being subject to the Federal judiciary.

To accomplish this the first necessity is a Constitutional Amendment which will limit the term of office of all members of the Federal judiciary, and cause all such officers to be elected by a direct vote of the people.

We, the Socialists of Local Colbert, of Bradley, Okla., do present this motion:

That the Socialist party membership of the United States shall circulate for signatures, and, through the National Office, present to the Congress of the United States, through Comrade Victor L. Berger, a demand for a submission of the desired Constitutional Amendment herein called for.

National Secretary.

OHIO SOCIALIST NEWS.

Haviland, Paulding county, was temporarily organized, and has applied for a charter. Comrade Elmer E. Uhrich has been instrumental in bringing them together.

The State Executive Committee had set the time for holding the next state convention, to be held in Columbus for April 28 and 30, but a referendum is being proposed by Local Cincinnati to increase the time by making it April 27, 28, 29 and 30. This last proposition has as yet received no support. It is hoped that if some action is to be taken upon this matter that it be done immediately, as the time to effect arrangements necessary for such occasions is growing short.

Comrade J. Mahlon Barnes, in reply to a letter concerning request for dates from this office for Comrade Ella Reeve Bloor, stated that we might have her for twenty or thirty dates, beginning March 11, on her return East from the National Office. Comrade Spargo could only be given to Ohio for one date, and it was suggested that this point be Toledo, by the National Secretary, as a matter of convenience in making up his route.

G. A. STORCK,
State Secretary.

Secretary Storck received, last Monday, applications for three new locals, as follows: Lodi, with 9 members, F. L. Milburn, secretary; Flushing, 19 members, H. A. Schultz, secretary; Halloway, 20 members, G. G. Teil, secretary.

Local Lima will have William D. Haywood for a lecture, April 25. Lima comrades are awake.

The national office has informed Secretary Storck that Comrade Ella Reeve Bloor will be available for meetings in Ohio from March 11 to 26. Comrade Bloor is a speaker of unusual ability and locals will do well to engage her.

The following comrades have accepted nominations for members of the National Committee from Ohio: Julius Zorn, Cincinnati; R. J. Murray, Toronto; W. J. Millard; Wm. Kensinger, Barberton; Wm. Patterson, Toledo; F. O. Werner, Crooksville; Allen Cook, Canton; Isaac Cowen, Cleveland; F. Holub, Bellaire; Chas. Ronsal, Salem; George Kunkle, L. Litt, Cincinnati; J. L. Bachman, Columbus; H. B. Pearce, Byesville; George H. Hartle, Martins Ferry; A. P. Bailey, Elyria; F. E. Vernie, East Liverpool; C. O. Beum, Mt. Vernon; F. L. Schwerckert, Cincinnati; F. W. Goll, Lorain; A. Nick, Columbus; A. B. Shinn, E. E. Powell, Canton; G. E. Rukhenberg, Cleveland; J. A. Smith, Crooksville; J. G. Willert, Cleveland; Harry Spears, Findlay; E. E. Adel, Columbus; Tom Clifford, Cleveland; Thomas Williams, Youngstown; Lotta Burke, Cincinnati; A. B. Wadsworth, Wellington; A. B. Hollenbaugh, Fostoria; W. Bessemer, Cleveland; George McCloskey, Canton; C. A. Wells, Canton; R. H. Smith, Crooksville; E. J. Beery, Crestline; W. F. Reis, Toledo; A. E. Spental, Canton; R. E. Moore, Cincinnati; Robert Moore, New Waterford. There are three to be elected.

GENERAL SOCIALIST NEWS.

Well, what do you know about this! Eugene W. Chafin, the last Presidential candidate on the Prohibition ticket, was the chief speaker at a Warren protest meeting in Phoenix, Ariz., last week.

The daily Socialist and trade union papers that J. Keir Hardie proposes to start in London will begin operations about May 1. The laboring people are coming to the support of the venture with financial backing quite readily.

James H. Maurer, the Socialist member of the Pennsylvania legislature, is paying one-half of his salary to the Berks County Anti-Tuberculosis League, as he said he would do before election. And the grafting political bosses are not stopping him with an injunction, either, as they threatened to do.

John Bowman, leader of the labor party in the Queensland legislature, is on his way to Europe, where he will meet Jaures, Bebel, Vandervelde, and other prominent Socialists. When he returns to Australia next summer it will be via United States and Canada, and will probably make a few addresses en route.

The Los Angeles Times seems to be running a race with itself to become the official organ of lunatic asylums. The Times classifies all Mexican insurgents as being Socialists. This is a typical headline: "Socialist General Grabs Bottle of Whisky and Two-bits, Then Flees From Avenging Federals," etc. Otis is doing great work. —Cleveland Citizen.

In the Mexican border states where the citizens are best acquainted with the facts of the conflict between troops of the Mexican government and the revolutionaries, monster meetings are being held by Socialists, trade unionists and citizens and protesting against United States troops being sent to the border, also demanding belligerency rights for the Mexican revolutionists.

Socialists and unionists in Turkey held a national conference in Salonica. Eight Socialistic organizations and nine trade unions besides several publishing associations were represented. It was decided to merge all organizations into a big national movement and to hold another conference soon to which the Armenian workers would be invited to send delegates. Militarism and despotism were denounced.

It has cropped out that James Maurer, the Socialist member of the Pennsylvania legislature, has been honored with more committee appointments than any man in that body (he received eight assignments, whereas the ablest men usually are restricted to five or six) for the purpose of keeping him busy working out details and thus bar him from the floor. But Maurer is not fooled. He will have his say, just the same.

Sumner W. Rose, recently elected to the city council in Biloxi, Miss., has been arrested and imprisoned because he defied an obnoxious taxation law. Editor Turk, of the Oakland (Cal.) World, has been railroaded to prison for 90 days because he printed a cartoon that was objected to by the chief of police. Both cases will be fought to a finish. They are attracting a great deal of attention in their several localities, and the upshot will be that Socialism will be boosted forward some more.

GREETINGS TO COLUMBUS COMRADES.

My Dear Comrades—This morning, when I left Columbus, I was a homesick little comrade—homesick for Columbus. It seemed somehow as if I'd lived there five years, instead of five days. It is such a stirring, growing movement, where you can all see your work amounting to something before your eyes. I am just like a seed-sower, throwing seed broadcast, but not even stopping long enough in one field to see whether the seed has fallen into good soil; but you are training the live plants, that will soon be ready to blossom and bring forth fruit. Do you realize what a beautiful privilege this is. Last night, as I talked to that large Ward Branch and saw the eager, determined look in their faces, when I said, "The suffragists wear a button, 'Ohio the Sixth,' the Socialists should wear one, 'Columbus the Second'" (Milwaukee the first Socialist city, Columbus the second), as I looked my memory gave me a picture of a night in my life when, all night, as I sat alone on a cell bench in a jail yard for an animal, I pledged myself, with all the strength of my vital soul, to use my life to overthrow a system that made such injustice to human beings possible. As I sat there I thought of the women utterly without hope of love or liberty—the numbers of women whom society had driven there in hopeless despair—and there I dreamed a dream, and had my vision, which I shall try, as long as my strength lasts, to make other men and women see. And, comrades, do you know what some poor soul had written on that cell wall, "Thou, God, seest me;" deserted by man, she had longed for God. Socialism means just God to hundreds of souls, to whom we are to keep on carrying the message. Be thankful, my brothers, for your great opportunity. You are rich in that! It's a beautiful thing to live right there, and see and help the coming of the kingdom. Am I sentimental? No! Simply happy to think of your joy. And, if I am worthy, I want to do all in my power to help Columbus to be the "second." My heart is full of inspiration and courage, and I shall carry the message to Indiana with the strongest purpose.

Your Comrade,
ELLA REEVE BLOOR.

The Question Box.

Under the new industrial system would it be possible for the management to grant special privileges to favorites? Could there be an "inner circle"? J. E. H.
Springfield, O.

The ability of the management to grant favors must depend, under any system, upon the source from which such management derives its power and authority. If the manager of any given industry derives his power and authority from a private owner of the industry, as is now the case, such a manager can confer or withhold any favors he may choose that do not interfere with the profits required from him or from the business he directs.

But under the regime of Socialism the managers, bosses and foremen will not be selected by a private owner, since private ownership will have been abolished.

There will then be a new controlling force in industry, made possible and necessary by the collective ownership and democratic control of shops and factories.

The men in the shops will then select from among themselves the superintendents that are to direct their labors. And, as all will have a common interest in making their labor the most productive possible for the amount of energy expended they will all be interested in selecting such bosses and foremen as are most competent and will be absolutely fair in their direction of their fellow-workers. Under such an arrangement it would be possible for an overseer to hold his position only so long as his acts are satisfactory to the men working with him, and who have given him what authority he exercises.

Whatever privileges are granted must, therefore, be conferred by the workers and not by the managers. Any effort of a superintendent, foreman, boss or director to favor an individual to the detriment of the majority would be resented by the majority and result in such offender being reduced to the ranks and being shorn of the power to carry out his schemes.

By democratic control of industry we mean the control of industrial affairs by the men who actually perform labor in the shops; an arrangement by which the majority would at all times be in supreme control.

Under these radically changed conditions one can not conceive of an "inner circle," or minority, taking any advantage of the ruling majority. It is more likely that only those who are specially fitted by superior skill and executive ability, in harmony with democratic institutions, will be placed in such positions; and the honor of serving in such a capacity will be an incentive to honest effort and, impartial rulings, such as are impossible at the present time, when a superintendent's fitness is gauged wholly by the amount of profit he can squeeze out of his department for the benefit of the private owner.

PRISON BRUTALITY AS SEEN BY CONVICT

PROTEST COMES FROM OHIO'S GREAT PENAL INSTITUTION.

We notice with satisfaction that the newspapers are getting at the truth in regard to the penitentiary, but there is much more that can be told, things that will probably sound untrue to an outsider, but which nevertheless are gospel truth.

Favoritism and petty graft run hand and hand; and while this administration may have the name of being lenient with the men, it is a fact that they hang them up by the wrists in the cellar day and night, for four and five days at a time; then, if that does not make the man cry enough, five or six guards will get at him with their clubs, and then give it out that he is a bad man. Why do they do it? Because some guard has cursed a man's soul to hell and the man has answered back, for we have guards here who are not only illiterate, but curse the men at every opportunity. Of course, we are convicts, but still human beings, and some of these brave men, with clubs and revolvers, seem to delight in yelling at us if they feel bad some day, "I'll knock your head off and put you in the hospital."

Is it any wonder that human beings rebel some time? Of course, there must be discipline, but a kind word will go a great deal farther in here than blows; that has been exemplified in the case of the "prison demon," when they ill-treated him. He kept them busy; the moment that kindness began he was a changed man. The contract system is the direct cause of most all of the trouble. The contractors won't have a guard unless he is brutal to his men, and it is a pretty well known fact in here that some of the guards have their hands behind their back on pay days.

The best thing that could happen is to get the contracts out of here and place the guard system under civil service. We might be able to get men that way who would have some judgment, for the majority here now have never learned the rule of obedience and it is hard for them to control any set of men intelligently.

We have wondered at several things that came under our notice: Why one man who drove a coal wagon, who was caught bringing in whiskey, was let off, and another (he was a Republican) was sent to the workhouse, probably because the first man electioneered for the deputy when he ran for sheriff.

Then the food! Of course, we do not expect pie and ice cream in a place of this kind, but it might be clean and good. Nine out of ten meals are cold when we get them. They are hot at times, which goes to show that they could be that way all the time if there were any system; but what is everybody's business is nobody's concern.

This is a two-man institution, run by two men, who would rather knock a man down than eat a meal. Most all of the guards follow their lead; not all, for we have some men among the guards who believe in giving a man a square deal.

ONLY A CONVICT.

THE SOCIALIST LYCEUM COURSE.

There still remain three numbers of the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course and the purchase of a ticket at One Dollar, is a good bargain. The next lecture will be Tuesday evening, March 7, at the Board of Trade Auditorium. The entire list as follows:

John W. Slayton, "Unionism and Socialism," March 7.

Fred and May Strickland, "The Socialist Party," March 14.

Socialist Quartette Concert Co., "An Evening of Music," March 21.

Season tickets have been placed with the Ward Branches for sale or may be obtained at City Headquarters, 134½ South High Street. Each purchaser of a ticket will receive the Chicago Daily Socialist for four months, in addition to the enjoyment to be derived from the three evenings of entertainment and instructions.

DEATH FUMES AND DIVIDEND TUNES.

We have received the following from the South Bend (Ind.) Tribune, of February 10:

"Eating the heads of eighteen matches, Horace Greene Warner, 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Warner, died Thursday of phosphorus poisoning.

"The child was sleeping during the morning, and Mrs. Warner had occasion to go into the basement. She was in the basement but a few minutes, and when she returned upstairs found the child in the bathroom, with the contents of a box of matches strewn on the floor.

"Examination revealed eighteen matches with the heads either partly or wholly chewed off. The services of three physicians and two nurses were employed in an effort to save the child's life, but the amount of the poison eaten was too great."

CONGRESS CAN PROHIBIT POISONOUS PHOSPHORUS MATCHES.

The American Association for Labor Legislation appeals to all public-spirited citizens to support and work for the Esch Phosphorus Bill, that is now before Congress. We appeal to all who have the welfare and prosperity of our country at heart, and to all who sympathize with suffering and pain, to urge upon their representatives in Congress the necessity of immediately passing the Esch Bill, by this means relieving our country of a grave menace to public health and safety, and freeing the reproach of progressive nations the world over.

CAPITALISTIC "CHARITY."

Capitalism does everything in an awkward, blundering way. Even its so-called "charity" is a wasteful, botched job. We have before us an example of it in the report of the Associated Charities of Columbus, issued by the Committee of Charities and Corrections of the Chamber of Commerce, in April, 1910. The pamphlet is an extensive affair, printed in some non-union shop. Here are the figures of receipts and expenditures; There was received in the year previous the sum of $8,039.07 from various sources. The expenditures were as follows:

Administration expenses (salaries)	$2,818 59
Service to the poor	2,254 21
Educational and financial account	1,269 83
Rent	400 00
Special and emergency fund	267 61
Office furnishings	165 58
Car fare	90 18
Housing investigation	85 00
Telegraph and telephone	64 80
Office supplies	62 55
Delegate to national and state conference	50 55
Printing and stationery	50 54
Gas and fuel	48 00
Publications	38 25
Miscellaneous	18 20
Drinking water	7 25
Total	$7,831 27

Please note that the total expended was $7,831.27, and that of this amount but $2,254.21 appears as being directly applied for "service to the poor, while $2,818.59 was paid for "administration expenses (salaries), besides all the other expenses. For every dollar "given" to the poor over $3.50 was paid to get that dollar to those who stood in the direst need of it. This is about the usual proportion in "organized" charity as doled out by capitalistic agencies. It should be remembered that such charity only reaches a small portion of the sufferers, because so many will endure almost any agony before revealing themselves as paupers. Natural pride rebels against the humiliation. It is not "charity" that the workers want—it is simple justice—nothing less, nothing more. ORGANIZED CHARITY IS A FAKE.

A movement has been started in the Ninth Ward to ask the board of education to allow the use of at least one school building in each ward for public purposes. This, of course, means that such use will be at times when school is not in session, generally in the evenings. There seems to be no good reason why these buildings, erected by the people, should not be used by the people for public meetings of various kinds for the advancement of the common good. Except for a few hours a day during a part of the year the commodious structures stand tenantless. A petition is being circulated requesting that the board open this public property to use of the people. It remains to be seen what action the board of education will take.

The city of Lancaster has secured extensive public improvements, not on 15-cent gas, but on gas sold at $1 per fire Private concern thought their gas was exhausted, and unloaded their plants upon the city. To their surprise and chagrin, more gas was found, and the municipality filled its treasury at the flat rate of $1 for each stove or fire. Later the price was fixed at 15 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

Comrade Ella Reeve Bloor, national organizer, has evolved a new slogan: "Columbus the Second." Milwaukee was the first large city to be captured by the Socialists, Columbus will be the next. Comrades, the eyes of the nation are upon us; will we make good? Sure we will! Columbus is the storm center of Socialism.

The management of the Deisel-Wemmer stemmery threatened to move the establishment from our city in case the striking employes did not return to work at the old rate of wages; or, in case they were compelled to accede to their demands by allowing an increase and better conditions. Our business men were "scared," too.—Van Wert Buzz-Saw.

The Deisel-Wemmer concern was represented before the senate hearing on the women's eight-hour law by a slick-tongued lawyer from Lima, who said that the employes were all satisfied with ten hours. Guess he lied.

THE NATIONAL BREAD LINE.

Winter is Here, But the Kind Hearted Old Lady Takes Care of The "Worthy" Unemployed.

THE LATEST LEGISLATIVE POST-MORTEM.

The Miners' Coal Screen Bill is dead. The members of the Ohio Senate who participated in the assassination should be crowned with glory by the Master Class, for they heard a voice, and, like cowardly traitors, whispered back, "Thy will be done."

Listen! Coal miners work under the earth. The product of their arduous, health-wrecking toil is drawn to the top of the earth and emptied over screens. The continual wear and tear on these screens makes the holes larger and the miners' pay-envelope smaller, because the miner is only paid for the coal that passes over the screens, and he receive nothing for the coal that passes through the screen. Yet his corporate master haul away this stolen material and use it in the operation of their railroads, etc.

The corporations sustain a lobby at the Ohio Legislature to perpetuate the right of the Master Class to steal and plunder. These lobbies are constituted of political orphans. Both the Democratic and Republican orphanages are drawn from. Some call them "lame ducks." It is said that the State House squirrels will not let them see where they hide their winter food, for fear that their dependent spirit might lead them to rob—even a squirrel.

You of the Servant Class! Is this farce to go on forever? Are you going to allow your fellow-workers to be robbed in broad daylight? Are you going to allow men who claim to represent the working class be used to perpetuate this tyrannical system of industrial despotism? Or, do you believe it is time we became class-conscious and refused to have labor hoodwinked by advertised, so-called "recognition of labor?" If you do—prepare for action. The Master Class has hurled the challenge into your teeth when they purge the defeat of

ALL LABOR BILLS.

Senator William Green, looking over the Senate chamber after his bill had been defeated, said: "Well, I'll be a game loser."

Arise in your strength, workers! Let us organize to win. The Ohio Legislature is in the hands of the Master Class, and their interests are to fulfill the wishes of their own desires.

Vote for Socialism, and serve the interests of all citizens.

JIM HENDERSON.

A REPUBLICAN OUTRAGE.

The city council, at a special meeting Wednesday night, received the Republican redistricting ordinance, presented by Councilman Baldridge, and the measure passed its second reading and it was sent to the judiciary committee, of which Baldridge is chairman. Sixty days are left under the law in which the council must consider and vote upon the ordinance. The Republican members are said to all have been consulted and are satisfied with it, while the Democrats are fiercely against it.

Their strongest fight will be against the proposed boundaries for the Second, Fifth and Tenth Wards. Dierker, now of the Seventh, and Heins, both Democrats, are placed in the Second, a Democratic ward; Mahanna, Democrat, now of the Second, is put in the Fifth, a Republican ward, as is also Baldridge, Republican, now of the Third; O'Rourke, Democrat, of the Eighth, and Ross, Republican, of the Ninth, are put in the new Tenth.

The map published by the Journal, showing the new arrangement of wards is a crazy-quilt affair. The evident intention is to curb and crush the growing, rushing tide of Socialism in this city. The plan is an outrage, with no other purpose than the one we have named. The Republican gang no doubt can put it through, but all fair-minded people will protest against it.

TRADES UNIONS.

All wage workers should be union men. Their progress is limited only by those who hold aloof. Get together.

AGITATE, EDUCATE, ORGANIZE!

Don't wait until tomorrow. Tomorrow never comes.

Don't wait for someone to start. Begin yourself.

Don't harken to the indifferent. Wake them up.

Don't think it impossible. Three million organized workers in the American Federation of Labor prove different.

Don't Weaken. Persistence wins results.

STREET CAR SITUATION.

The fact that the leaven of discontent is working among the present employes of the Rail-Light is becoming apparent all the while. There is no doubt but that there are scores of union men working on the cars and in the barns and power-houses "under cover," and the smoldering flame of revolt is liable to break out at any time. The Rail-Light, by its arrogant attitude toward its employes and the public, deserves most any reverse that can come to it.

Socialism means a government under which the means of production, transportation and communication belong to the people as our public schools, highways and postal service now belong to the people. It means that the millions and billions of dollars now and heretofore being looted from the public treasuries, taken over by the great monopolies on watered stock and bonds would be left in the hands of farmers and laboring people. It means that women would be liberated from factories and offices and be permitted to care for the home and the children. It means that the children who are now being ground into profits for plutocracy would be liberated and put into schools and made happy. It means that wars shall be no more, that slaughter of mankind to increase commercial profits must stop, and that the millions of dollars now being wasted for destructive purposes shall be retained by those who earn them.

OUR BOOSTERS.

Comrade C. L. Ferguson, the blind Socialist lecturer, sends in some subs. He has been ill for the past week, and wrote from his home at Findlay.

Local St. Marys is the first to accept the offer made by The Socialist Lecture Bureau for a date for Comrade Fred G. Strickland. Lancaster will also be in line.

The Eleventh, Twelfth, Tenth and Fourth Ward Branches are very active in The Socialist subscription contest, according to the cards that reach this office. Send in cards promptly, so that subscribers may get papers as soon as possible.

Comrade Eber F. Heston, now in Cleveland, boosts The Socialist with some subs from that city. Several Columbus boys are working in the Forest City, but send word that they still claim this town as their home and will be back to vote for Socialism.

Comrade C. E. Leonard writes from St. Francis' hospital that he expects to be out in two weeks and will enter the contest for subscriptions for The Socialist. He says he has been a newsboy for twenty-three years. Some of the comrades had better be stirring when Leonard gets started.

The Socialist's offer of Comrade Strickland for Ohio dates has been accepted by the following locals:

Salem, Chas. Bonsal, secretary; Findlay, M. J. Kelley; Lisbon, A. A. Hannecy; Steubenville, W. M. Lethridge; Mansfield (two dates), J. W. Frilliby; Derwent, Peter Allen; Massillon, Nick Weltich; Wellington, Perry Disbrow.

THE WOLVES ARE ENTERING YOUR HOMES.

The following is a reproduction of a circular sent out by the Allied Employers' Association of Ohio, with headquarters in the First National Bank Building, Cincinnati, Ohio:

TO THE EMPLOYERS OF FEMALE LABOR OF OHIO.

Gentlemen—We beg to advise you that Senate Bill No. 11 (same as H. B. No. 8), providing for an Eight Hour Day for Women, has been recommended for passage by the Senate Committee on Labor, and same will probably be voted on about Thursday, March 3, hence it is of the greatest importance that you at once write or telegraph your Senator or Senators, urging them to vote against the Bill as recommended, and against any amendments limiting the right of women to sell their labor for such hours as they choose. The bill deserves nothing but defeat.

No amendments can remedy the inherent injustice of this measure nor offer any justification for this unwarranted attack upon the business interests of Ohio. Your opposition should be clearly defined to your Senators.

Act at once.

Faithfully yours,
CHAS. F. WALTZ,
Secretary.

P. S.—Are you a member of this Association? If not, join NOW!

Your presence at legislative hearings will offset the teaching of these hirelings of the Master Class. Join the Ohio Federation of Labor and help fight these Herods.

WARNING.

Detroit, Mich.

The Detroit Federation of Labor again desires to warn all tradesmen who might be considering the possibility of picking up some of the good things to be had in Detroit, according to the wholesale advertising being conducted by the Detroit Board of Commerce. We have men out of work here by the thousands, and still they want more. The fact is, there is nothing here for those who come, only to join those who are already walking the streets. The alluring ads sent out from Detroit are misleading and are simply an effort to glut the labor market and thereby force wages down to the lowest possible point, and things are bad enough here without an influx of strangers. Please announce this in your official publication, and oblige.

Fraternally yours,
DETROIT FEDERATION OF LABOR,
ALFRED J. EXTON, Sec'y.

COLUMBUS PRESS ASSISTANTS, NO. 25, BANQUET.

The first annual banquet given by the C. P. A., No. 25, was held at Red Lion Hall, Saturday, February 25. The affair from every standpoint was a success, and all who were present feel certain that the results will be good. Brother Fred Hurlburt, the toastmaster, reviewed the progress of No. 25 from a small number of so-called irresponsibles, as they were called by their enemies—the employers—a year or so ago, to one of the foremost in the ranks of the Allied Printing Trades Council. Brother Hurlburt spoke at some length on "Harmony," and the necessity of it if we wish to reach the goal of trades unionism. His remarks were well received and no doubt left a good impression on the banqueters. A toast was then proposed to the Columbus Typographical Union, No. 5, one of the strongest organizations in Columbus. Brother John Hayden represented No. 5, and in a short speech he urged the necessity of boosting the label, and also hoped that these functions would continue from year to year in an effort to solidify the ranks of labor.

A toast was proposed to No. 15, the Web Pressmen's organization, represented by Mr. George W. Cunningham, who in a short speech praised the efforts of No. 25 in showing the spirit of harmony by inviting the representatives of the different crafts to be in attendance. Brother Cunningham said, in part, that he had graduated from No. 25 and whatever fighting blood was in him it was inculcated by that organization. He wished them success. The next speaker was Brother Edum Gorden. Brother Gorden represented No. 62, Columbus Printing Pressmen's Union. He spoke from his heart, and his advice to those present struck deep into the hearts of all, and surely after hearing Brother Gorden they went away stronger in their faith in trades unionism. Brother Gorden deserves much credit for his timely remarks. No. 62 was ably represented.

The next was the only speaker on a subject. A toast was proposed to the "Closed Shop," after which Brother D. J. Farrell spoke on the "Open Shop." Brother Farrell started by telling the banqueters that the history of the world had been a history of class struggles. He reviewed the history of the open shop, and said the United Typothes of America was dead—but they did not know it. He said the open shop meant the open door to let the union man out and the non-union man in. Brother Farrell urged the necessity of solidarity and harmony to combat the encroachments of capital. His remarks were well received.

The Press Assistants are unanimous that the banquet shall be a yearly feature.

Brant Whitlock, the real mayor of Toledo, refused to allow the police of Toledo to be used to protect the strikebreakers brought in to break the Pope-Toledo, because, said the mayor, "We are not in the strikebreaking business." Recently the law firm that the mayor is connected with took a case to prosecute a labor union. "Withdraw from the case, or withdraw my name from the firm," said Whitlock. The mayor won. Toledo is one of the best policed cities in the state. It classes strikebreakers as vagrants, and puts them where they belong—behind bars.

GEN. NUISANCE OTIS EULOGIZED.

Here's what a candidate for governor of California said of Harrison Gray Otis, proprietor of the famous "rat" Los Angeles Times, in an address at a public meeting in Los Angeles during the late primary campaign: "The one blot on the fame of Southern California, and her bar sinister on the escutcheon of Los Angeles, is Harrison Gray Otis, a creature who is vile, infamous, degraded and putrescent. Here he sits in senile dementia, with gangrened heart and rotten brain, grimacing at every reform and chattering in impotent rage against decency and morality, while he is going down to his grave in snarling infamy."

FOUNDER OF TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION NO. 5 DIES.

Joseph T. Hayes, founder of Columbus Typographical Union No. 5, oldest printer in Columbus and for eleven years foreman of The State Journal composing room, died Friday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. F. J. Brooks, 168 East Northwood avenue, from dropsy, aged 75. Two other daughters survive, Mrs. A. R. Hahn and Mrs. F. J. Meba, and one son, J. M. K. Hayes. There are besides these a brother and a sister living in England.

Hayes retired from active work in 1901, at which time he had served The State Journal, in one capacity and another, for forty years. For the eleven years preceding his retirement he had been at the head of the composing room. In 1859 he organized the local union, for which he donated the use of his own rooms for the early meetings. He was the last charter member in Columbus to survive.

He enlisted for two short periods during the civil war, first in the Second O. V. I. and later in the Thirty-third O. V. I. All the rest of his life was devoted to following his calling.

The funeral was Monday afternoon, from the residence of the daughter at whose home he died.

UNIONISM AND SOCIALISM.

(By John W. Slayton.)

The fourth lecture of the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course, at the Board of Trade Auditorium, Tuesday evening, March 7. Admission, 10 cents.

JOHN W. SLAYTON.

Slayton was unable to read until 12 years of age, and has never had more than fifteen months of schooling all told in a little log school house in old Virginia. He got his learning through spare-time study and through his keen faculties of observation, the way Abe Lincoln got his.

He is a carpenter by trade, and his whole lifetime has been active in building up the organization of the workers. He has many times been a delegate to the national convention of the U. B. of C. and J. and the A. F. of L. Just this last year he directed the strike of the workers at McKees Rocks, for the first five weeks of its duration, and established the commissary department without which that strike must have failed.

His whole training has been such that he is eminently fitted to speak on the subject of "Unionism," and his ability as a speaker is vouched for by all the hundreds of organizations that have already heard him.

THE RED INK BRIGADE.

The building now occupied by the Fourth Regiment used to be known as the Parkview Sanatorium. Their business was to house crazy people. The building may have changed "hands," but we leave others to decide the "head" question.

Ex-State President William Green, of the Ohio miners, who is now a state senator, applied to the adjutant general for two troops of State Cossacks to help out some shine at the Coshocton Centennial. Get your miner brethren to go out in strike, senator, and the State Cossacks will leave for the scene of the strike on the first train.

Butler, Pa.—Barracks costing $50,000 have just been erected near here for the Pennsylvania Cossacks, who are wanted to "protect" the plant of the Standard Steel Car Company against strikes and attempts to organize the workers. This company is part of the Pressed Steel Car Company, of McKees Rocks, and a branch of the steel trust.

LEGALIZED MURDERERS.

Denver, Col.—His convict-soldiers refusing to fight, and not daring to call for volunteers among his own people for fear that those enlisting would turn against him, President Diaz has hired a number of noted Colorado gun-men, who, with the aid of others that are to enlist under them, will take service against the insurrectos in Mexico.

Among the first to sign a contract with the Mexican government was Robert Boykin, a noted gun-fighter and former policeman here, who has been in charge of the guards at the mines of the Northern Coal Company, where the union men are on strike.

His record for shooting affairs is one of the longest in the West. He is said to be in command of a company of 125 fighters from Colorado and New Mexico. They are to join the federal forces at Juarez.

IF ONLY ALL WOULD.

Labor Would Gain Great Profits and Make Startling Progress.

If every carpenter would use union-made tobacco, every tobacco worker build his house with union labor, every printer wear union label clothes, every tailor have the union label on his printing and every cigar-maker get shaved in a union shop, every barber smoke union cigars, and so on down the line, something would drop, eh!—Western Laborer.

WOMAN'S STRUGGLE FOR ECONOMIC AND POLITICAL FREEDOM.

In stating the actual condition affecting women in industry one can hardly exaggerate the deplorable fact that sex handicaps their economic progress, and is a factor to reckon with. In an intelligent discussion of the evolution of women, however, the fact that increasing armies of women are self-supporting is really a stirring note of progress. The working with men in shops, stores and offices—sharing their economic environment, getting a new viewpoint as to the work of the world—in a way fits women more and more to become real mates and companions to men. And in pleading for better conditions for women in industry it is important to emphasize this point, that we, who believe in equality of opportunity, are not bewailing the fact that women are taking their place in industrial life, but the peculiarly hard conditions they must face in their progress toward economic independence, because of their sex.

After such exposures as those made by the recent congressional report on the importation of immigrant women for immoral purposes, showing the appalling extent of the white slave traffic; in the light of the stories of true experiences, told by hundreds of working girls everywhere, of insults offered them by men in department stores when higher wages are demanded by the girls; the unequal pay for equal work; all the glaring illustrations of the disabilities of sex in our industrial system, proves that the awakened and enlightened portion of the working class ought to take a definite stand for equal political rights for men and women.

The working men of America who belong to the Socialist party have come to the conclusion that the strongest power they possess—in their desire to change this system of society, where so much injustice exists, to a system where collective ownership of the means of production, and the means of life, shall prevail—is the VOTE. With this political power back of them the workers of Germany, Belgium, France, Italy, Australia and England are bringing about the great change by orderly, effective, evolutionary methods; women have no such power, and yet their work is directly governed by laws made by men, whom they have no power to elect. Should women stand outside the body politic, and yet be expected to take an intelligent part in the reconstruction of that body? Women learn by doing, and those who fear that women may not vote intelligently would do well to remember the many instances which indicate that working women will not take as many years as the men have needed to vote for their own interests.

That's one reason, as a Socialist, that I shall work hard for woman suffrage.

Men print words of praise for women and utter eloquent tributes to their influence, but even Socialist men will feel a heartier co-operation, a deeper respect for their efforts, when they stand really equal with men, politically, when they can cast their ballots together, for economic independence. The misunderstanding and distrust between the sexes will be obliterated, and a whole humanity developed. Society needs both influences—the complete humanism to redeem it.

A cause so great as human liberty demands concentration of intelligence and ability on constructive plans for its upbuilding—demands the man's courage, the woman's tenderness, the muscles of the handworkers, and the brain-muscles of men and women who are now in intellectual servitude.

In the very glow of this great social movement this stirring in all forces of society, how can any woman stop by the wayside and wonder whether she ought to make an effort to possess the same bright up-to-date weapon the man comrade marching alongside of her so proudly cherishes?

There seems no room for question. The battle for universal brotherhood is on—the weapon to win the battle is loaded with ballots. As a large part of the army we, as women, must have these ballots.

ELLA REEVE BLOOR.

WOMAN'S SPHERE.

Mrs. Joseph Benson Foraker recently stated her views as to woman's sphere. She declares that men and women have two distinct missions in life. Men alone should get into the political game. Women should give their entire attention to the home, and from that vantage point build up the social and moral standards of our people.

With all due respect to Mrs. Foraker's views, which no doubt are her sincere convictions on the subject, we wonder if she has really given the matter much serious thought and study. If she has, and if, after having faced the preponderance of evidence that must have confronted her in favor of woman's full right to citizenship, she still persists in maintaining such beliefs, then her views regarding the sphere of her own sex are exceedingly narrow and provincial, and belong rather to the thought of a generation ago than to that of the present day, filled with the spirit of progressive advancement, against which no enlightened, intelligent woman should strive, or seek to retard.

It is true that Mrs. Foraker is not alone in her beliefs. There is the anti-suffrage society, which came into existence in 1894. Its members are mostly from the wealthier class, prominent among which are Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Mrs. Grover Cleveland, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish and others who would shirk all civic responsibility themselves and would deny it to other women who are, in the majority, "made of sterner stuff" than themselves. They boast that their leaders are seldom seen in public, that the methods of their workers are neither sensational or picturesque; though how their society, which would shut the door of progress in the face of all womankind, finds any logical excuse for existing has yet to be determined.

A woman's true place is in the home. Relatively speaking this is true. But that she should remain there, continually shut in with her mending, her cooking and her washing of dishes, shut out from all contact with the larger affairs of life, or even the dream that larger affairs exist, is unfair to her. Only a portion of her time need be given over to her household duties; the remainder should be devoted to the work of building up the social and moral standards of our people by the only way possible toaccomplish such ends—franchise. The society that would secure the advancement of humanity must stand for the social equality of all of its members. Let the home influence of a woman be all that it possibly can be as housekeeper and mother, this influence alone will never in the world bring about any change in the laws of our land. The story is told of one good mother who labored faithfully to teach her boy the principles of human equality. The belief in these principles was brushed aside as though they had been so much spider-web during his first six months at a university. Perhaps if that mother, and other mothers of like mind, had been permitted the privilege of some say as to his course of study in school the influence would have been more lasting.

Woman's day has dawned. The movement has brought into a larger, fuller life thousands of women who previously did not dream of writing and reading original papers, taking charge of meetings, expressing their views in public, or assisting in reforms to strengthen and help society. It has been conducive of much good. Women have become broader minded and far more companionable to men since the never ceasing drudgery of household routine has been relaxed.

Women by entering creditably all the various fields of employment heretofore conducted by men, have proven beyond doubt their ability and their right to a voice in the laws that govern them. Woman's place is side by side with man. Too long she has been relegated to the narrow sphere of the four walls of her home. What has been the result? The scientist would name it reversion to type. He would illustrate by the story of the colony of birds adorned with every brilliant variety of color and marking which was taken to an uninhabited island and allowed to fly wild into the woods. After a lapse of years, these birds, or their descendants, would present a remarkable change. All the beautiful coloring, all the old graces would have disappeared. One color would now meet the eye, a dark, slaty blue. Today, who of us are not familiar with the "dark, slaty blue" woman, who, left from morning till night alone with the petty interests of a household, has become warped and narrowed. Would not the mingling with her kind in political fields help to bring back to her some of the lost brilliancy which too much "home life" has faded? And would it not make her a more suitable companion for the man who has made her his wife? How noticeable it is that there is something of interest about even the crudest of men which charm is often altogether lacking in their women. The reason is obvious. The men are continually in touch, more or less, with the vital questions of the day. Each may express his sentiments regarding them through the ballot. Such an environment is broadening and must leave its mark upon the individual. Why may not all breathe this helpful, exhilarative atmosphere?

Then there is the class of women workers to be dealt with as to the question of suffrage. Today there are nine million wage-earning women under the stars and stripes. Conditions of labor are far from being perfect. The woman worker craves justice and freedom and liberty. These she can hope to attain by the ballot alone. She asks for franchise for the protection of herself and her class. Women workers suffer far greater injustice than do men. Many of them, far behind the body of workingmen, have not an idea that social questions exist. They should be given an incentive to take an intelligent part in the co-operative commonwealth.

The measure of the advance of civilization lies alone in the equality of this privilege.

And as woman has taken her place in helping create the wealth of the race, so shall she one day help in shaping its destiny. She is fighting her battle for existence along with man, and is entitled to share with him in political affairs. Her hope for the realization of her dream of franchise lies in the Socialist party. It is the only political organization which champions her cause.

Women do not seek to outrival man in any way. They do not want to take their places. There should be an abundance of room in the industrial fields for both sexes. Their slogan is an equal opportunity in every right. When this has been given them, then they will be the better equipped to help in the building up of the moral and social standards of our people.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN ENGLAND.

LEGAL DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN.

(Ella June Purcell.)

If the women of Ohio were allowed a voice in making the laws, what do you suppose would happen? Would all social, economic and political evils be immediately removed, and every situation revolutionized and perfected? Not even the most radical and ardent suffragists make any such claim. However, I believe, that the influence of an enfranchised womanhood would promptly change the following conditions:

In the first place a co-guardianship measure would be enacted. At present, in Ohio, the father is the sole and absolute guardian of the children. Such a status of affairs is barbarous—no other word will do. By will, a father may take away the guardianship of an unborn child from the mother. If a father dies intestate, leaving a widow, and minor children who are old enough to make a choice of a guardian, they must consent in writing to her appointment. The document is frequently required to be witnessed also. This to avoid "undue influence" by the mother, no doubt. What a humiliation to the intelligent motherhood of this state!

The first legislature that met in Colorado, after the enfranchisement of women, passed a co-guardianship measure. In Massachusetts, by womanly influence exerted through a period of fifty-five years, such a law was also passed. Do the women of Ohio want the ballot? Do they need it?

Another law would be changed very quickly if women had a voice in saying what laws we shall have. In this state the age of consent for girls is sixteen; in all equal suffrage states it is at least eighteen. Formerly the age was twelve, which meant that a girl of that age was legally competent to consent to her own ruination. At present a boy is disqualified from making a binding contract until he reaches the age of twenty-one. This limitation is placed upon a youth's power of contract so that he may be protected from unscrupulous persons who might take advantage of inexperience. It would seem that men are frankly confessing that boys of twenty-one are less wise than girls of twelve. But, no; this is merely an example of sex discrimination, which arises in a man-ruled world. Do women need the ballot?

There is another law which is most unjust to women. A woman can not be a notary in this state. A woman with a college education, with a legal education in fact, is not the equal of any man, however ignorant, who has $2.00 and a bond. Education and ability are not the deciding factors—sex is. Do women need the ballot?

In yet another place we see the results of man's political supremacy. The Girls' Industrial Home, at Delaware, is a disgrace to any state claiming to be civilized. The Ohio Reformatory, at Mansfield, is famous all over the country for its efficiency and success. The Lancaster Home for Boys is also an institution which does effective work. For years the women of the state have been pleading and praying for a decent home for delinquent girls. Tears and prayers do not count. What the women ned is votes.

But most women do not realize their handicap. Let them be compelled to make their own living, and then they will realize that there is not equal pay for equal work. Let them be left widows and feel the humiliation of being appointed guardians of their own children. Let them live in one of the many places in the state where women property owners outnumber the men and be forced to pay taxes assessed, collected and spent by men, and have no voice in levying the assessment or spending the receipts.

Women who have good homes and husbands do not feel the need of the ballot. Hundreds of thousands have neither, and do feel the need of it. No woman can tell when she will need it. Many men vote but seldom, only when they are especially and personally interested in the outcome of an election. Yet these men would not wish to give up their right of suffrage simply because they exercise it infrequently.

The women of Ohio should demand a vote for those women who are in constant need of it, and should demand it for themselves that they may have it ready for use at an election which may be material to them.

SOME OF SUSAN B. ANTHONY'S WORDS.

We preach revolution, the politicians reform.

Even the smallest human right, denied, is large.

Read the New Testament, and see if Christ was not an agitator.

I am not fit to deal with anybody who is not terribly in earnest.

Woman must take to her soul a strong purpose, and then make circumstances conform to this purpose.

Whoever consents to live by the sweat of the brow of another human being inevitably humiliates and degrades herself.

There is no true freedom for women without the possession of equal rights. Women must have a purse of her own.

I would exhort all women to be discontented with their present condition and to assert their individuality of thought, word and action, by the energetic doing of noble deeds.

When society is rightly organized the wife and mother will have time, wish and will to grow intellectually, and will know that the limits of her sphere, the extent of her duties, are prescribed only by the measure of her ability.

Women, and mothers in particular, should feel it their right and duty to extend their influence beyond the circumference of the home circle, and to say what circumstances shall surround children when they go forth from under the watchful guardianship of the mother.

If men would only think of the question without paying attention to prejudice or precedent, simply as one of political economy, they would soon begin to regard woman, and woman's rights, just as they regard themselves and their own rights.

If you come to the conclusion that the end we wish to attain is right, but are not satisfied with the plan adopted, then I ask you to devise means by which this great good may be more speedily accomplished, and you shall find us ready with heart and hand to co-operate with you.

BALLOT FOR BILLS.

Women's Suffrage Gets First Place Among Private Measures.

Liberal members in favor of women's suffrage met at the house of commons yesterday and elected Mr. Cameron Corbett chairman, in succession to Sir C. McLaren. It was agreed to ask that the government should not take the day on which the Conciliation Bill was down for second reading, and that facilities should be given for further stages.

The title of the bill has been altered and the text now runs:

Clause 1.—Every woman possessed of a household qualification within the meaning of the Representation of the People Act (1884) shall be entitled to be registered as a voter, and when registered to vote for county or borough in which the qualification premises are situate.

Clause 2.—For the purposes of this Act a woman shall not be disqualified by marriage from being registered as a voter, provided that the husband and wife shall not both be registered in the same parliamentary borough or county division.

A CORONATION THREAT.

Mrs. Pankhurst, speaking at Newport, Mon., last night, said that the suffragettes were determined to have the vote this year. It would not be nice for the king to be crowned with a thousand women in prison.

Every Socialist housewife and cook should use "Quality" Baking Powder, manufactured by Comrade J. G. Maris, of West Town street. Ask your dealer for it.

COMRADE MAY STRICKLAND TO MAKE WOMAN'S PLEA.

The Socialist party has a Woman's Department in its national office. The Woman's National Committee has inaugurated a campaign among the women throughout the country, and May Strickland will deliver a special message to women, that they may be brought to an understanding of woman's relation to the Socialist movement.

TWO WAYS OF HAVING A GOOD TIME.

(By Frances E. Willard.)

SONG SECOND.

The little bird opened his mouth very wide, smoothed his feathers, and went on more quietly:

I flew over land and sea, and came upon three other children, living in a grove on the edge of a wide prairie, away in the West; they had nobody to amuse them, they lived miles away from other people, and had never seen a city; they had no company but their mother, except a big dog, a little kitten, and a gopher they had tamed. Their mother had much work to do, and, though she was fond of them, she could not send them anywhere to be amused. But she had excellent sense, and she told them to look in the books their father had in his room, and see what people did out in the world; "for," she said, "it's all a sort of playing, anyway, this that grown folks are so busy about; and you can just picture it all out in your minds, and set up for yourselves and do the same things, if you like." And then she told them there couldn't be better company than the big, pleasant prairie, and woods full of oaks and hickories, and the wide river with osiers on its banks and shells upon its shores. So the little people began to think and read and imagine, and they made up their minds they would (as they said in the "plan" they wrote about it all) "combine the advantages of country life and city life," having hiding places in trees, setting traps in the woods, going out nutting, fishing, hunting, boating, and besides all this fitting up their home as a city to which they could return, and where they could sell their nuts and fish and shells. They named all the paths in the garden after famous streets they read about, painted these names on shingles and fastened them to the trees. They took the dining room for a hotel, the sitting room for the city hall, the parlor for the church, and so on. Besides these, they had the barn for a warehouse, hiding places in trees for sentinels, an old bee-hive for a postoffice, and pieces of leather curiously stamped for money. They had a full code of laws written out, with penalties attached; a set of city officers never yet accused of cheating the public; a church where they attended every Sunday; a newspaper—illustrated at that—all written out by hand, with editorials, poetry, stories, and a fine juvenile department.

They opened an "art gallery" up in the garret, and had a banquet with little dishes they had molded from clay, and set out on a bench covered with a sheet, with pumpkin-blossoms for a center-piece. On this occasion speeches were made and spring-water toasts drunk out of acorn cups; and, later, water-color drawings of gophers, of blue jays and red-headed woodpeckers were shown; also sketches of nature, and studies of all the family in clay, not very striking likenesses, but then they were all plainly labeled! It would fill a book to tell of all the good times those children had! The people who live in this Western world are taught that it is better to amuse themselves than to be amused; to "think things out," and give new ideas time to soak in; and so they take life more as it comes; they would rather eat strawberries when the sun ripens them in June than to have them from hot-houses in February.

So, said the little bird, as I flew to and fro, I learned that it is better to make a little go a great way than a great deal go a little way, in the amusement of the frisky lambs you call "our young folks."

And he spread his little wings and flew through the open window.

A FOREST OF STONE IN AUSTRALIA.

In Albany, Australia, is to be seen a stone forest—in other words, petrified trees. The trees are of gray stone. It is suggested as an explanation of the strange phenomenon that in the depths of past ages the forest was in full vegetation, and then through some upheaval of the earth it was buried in sand. Little by little water acting on the sand penetrated the branches and solidified. The wood gradually disappeared under the layer of stone, and in time took its form. Then in succeeding years the winds again carried away the sand, and the forest appeared anew, but of stone.

A DOG THAT GRINDS SCISSORS.

A dog named Rover, owned by George Ross, of Carpinteria, Cal., has been taught to turn the wheel that furnishes the power for his master's scissors-grinding machine. The Circle tells how Rover gets on the wheel of his own accord, and merrily treads, treads, while his master sharpens scissors and knives. The good dog seems to think that it is a game devised for his special amusement, and when business is slack he will run to his wheel and bark reproachfully at his master until Mr. Ross feels obliged to attach the rope which turns the stone and gets to work. Rover never seems so happy as when business is brisk, and he can send his big wheel around and around for a whole morning. He will then sleep for a half hour after he has had his dinner, and then be ready for work again with his master in the afternoon.

THE BUSY BEAVERS.

Because its operations are chiefly nocturnal, so that it is seldom or never seen, and because of its skill in controlling water and in house building, something of mystery has grown up about the beaver, says a writer in Forest and Stream. It is said that it fells trees for the purpose of building its dams and can lay a tree where it wishes to with the accuracy of the most skilled axman. It is said also that it uses its tail as a trowel, plastering the mud on its houses and dams with this appendage as a mason spreads his mortar.

Myths like these will probably have a long life. The latter belief is no doubt encouraged by the beaver's frequent habit of slapping the water or earth with its tail as an alarm signal whenever it is startled. There are many unexplained things about the beaver's life.

Long before the white man came to America the beaver was hard at work building his dams all over the country and in narrow and sometimes in wide stream valleys, arresting the water and so collecting in its ponds the detritus swept down from the hills and from the upper reaches of the stream.

As this sediment gradually filled up the shallow ponds the beaver moved to other places, and when in time the dam broke down and the water drained off, a wide level meadow was left—the bottom of the old pond.

All over the continent in suitable localities, from Mexico north to the tree limit and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, this was going on century after century, and in this way no doubt were made vast areas of level meadow, whose origin is now unsuspected by the people who occupy them.—Forest and Stream.

BABY ANIMALS IN THE CIRCUS.

The circus babies are always in great danger of being spoiled. They are the pets not only of circus performers and menagerie keepers, but also of the thousands of sightseers who visit the animal cages before the main performances begin. Few people realize, says Leslie's Weekly, how rare these baby animals are. It is almost impossible to rear them after they are born. This accounts for the few that are seen in the circus menagerie. The keepers are forced to keep a sharp lookout for kind-hearted circusgoers, who have an insatiable passion for feeding the circus babies anything from pink lemonade to peanuts and popcorn. The circus pets are given as much care as the ordinary child in his nursery. The preparation of their food is a science known only to the animal keepers. The circus doctors watch the moods of the little circus dwellers much as the family physician watches the children in the nursery. As long as they remain playful and mischievous, the doctors say it is safe to presume that the baby animals are in good health. It is only when they show signs of sluggishness that the doctors begin to suspect that some one has slipped in the popcorn and peanuts undetected. In the circus nursery it is well to remember that the sign, "Do not feed the animals," is of the utmost importance, and any one who has any love for the tiny creatures will keep the peanuts and candy for the big grandfather elephants.

HOW A SQUIRREL ROBBED THE MAIL.

The robbing of the United States mail by a squirrel was a most unusual incident. One of the mail carriers in the city was on his regular rounds, and had among his mail to be delivered an advertising card to which was attached a large walnut, inside of which was the matter advertised. A little squirrel seeing the nut, jumped upon the mail carrier's shoulder, and, running down his arm with lightning speed, took the nut and card from his hand, and then climbed a nearby tree, where it investigated the contents of the nut. Fortunately, upon discovering that the nut was not the kind it wanted, the squirrel dropped it and the card without damaging either, and they later were delivered to the proper address.

The typesetting machines clicked off rapidly the words, sentences and paragraphs of the Bartelmy "beat" and the other stories which had to be crowded into the "mail edition." Brand was in his little room at the right, reading the proof of the introduction of the account of the accusation of the United States judge, which introduction he had chosen to write himself. McHenry, the deposed managing editor and now Brand's assistant, was at the forms with the makeup man.

A boy rushed in with a cut for McHenry. The busy editor squinted at it and waved the boy to one side.

"Why do they send us this baled hay when we've got a live one?" he said disgustedly.

Downs came in from the city room.

"That Clinton street fire is getting better every minute," he said to McHenry. "We ought to have at least four columns on it."

McHenry glared at the speaker.

"Are you crazy, man?" he exclaimed. "Do you think we use rubber type? You'll have to keep it in three."

Downs was dissatisfied.

"All right. This shop is going to the d—l," he answered, shaking his head negatively. He went out of the composing room.

McHenry went over to one of the makeup stones.

"Where are the cuts for the Chicago and Bryan jump heads? I can't find them anywhere," he asked.

"Here they are," answered one of the makeup men.

"All right. They go there." He pointed to a space in one of the forms as a boy handed him another cut. McHenry held it up to the light and hurried into Brand's office with it. He laid it proudly on the managing editor's desk.

"That's a wonder, Mac!" pronounced Brand.

McHenry agreed.

"Yes; you can almost count the money in old Bartelmy's hand!" he exclaimed, and he peered closely once more at the metal slab.

Brand meditated a moment.

"I'm going to change the makeup on that page," he decided. "Put this cut at the top of the page, so that when the papers are folded on the newsstands every one that passes by will see Bartelmy offering a bribe of $10,000 to suppress the truth about himself. Is your story all up yet?"

"Yes. It's in the form."

"Then go finish it off and send it down to the stereotyping room."

McHenry turned away.

"Won't this make the Patriot sick?" he said as he left. "They'd give the shirts off their backs to beat us on a story like this or to keep us from doing it to them."

As McHenry went out of the door into the composing room Sylvester Nolan dashed into Brand's room from the hall through the other door. The lad was plainly excited, his face showing an amount of animation that, for him, was a decided novelty. His eyes flashed and his breath came in short gasps, indicating that he had been hurrying.

"Where's my father, Mr. Brand? Where is he?" he gasped.

Brand suspected something of the Nolan son's errand.

"I'm afraid you'll have to find him," was the only information he chose to impart.

Young Nolan drew close to the desk at which the managing editor was working.

"Judge Bartelmy wants him," he exclaimed. "The judge, the judge! Don't you understand?"

"Does he?" asked Brand with utmost unconcern.

Sylvester grew impatient at his father's employee who dared assume indifference toward his father's only son.

"I want to know where he is," he demanded.

"Well, I can't tell you." Brand rose and stepped away, with Sylvester following him.

"I understand that you are going to publish something about the judge that's beyond the limit," said the son.

"Possibly."

"Well, this thing's gone far enough," snapped Sylvester. "In the absence of my father I forbid it. Do you hear?"

Brand took up a bundle of proofs and moved to the door.

"I'm afraid I can't take orders from you," he said, and he stepped calmly out into the composing room.

Sylvester, nonplused, looked about uncertainly for a moment. Then, with a sudden thought, he went to the telephone.

He placed the receiver at his ear.

"Hello! Hello! I'm Mr. Sylvester Nolan. Get me the house on the wire, please." An office boy entered. "What do you mean by trying to prevent me from coming up here?" asked young Nolan.

"That cut is a wonder, Mac!"

"My orders."

"You're discharged." The boy grinned amusedly and hurried out.

"Hello! Hello!" continued Sylvester at the telephone. "Is this you, mother? I want to speak to father. I'm at the Advance office. Hell's breaking loose here, and I want him to come down quick. Isn't he there? Where is he? Expecting him any minute? Oh! Jump in a taxi and come down, will you? All right. Good!"

"Jump in a taxi and come down."

He hung up the receiver and walked swiftly into the hall to leave the building.

Downs and Brand entered the little room.

"There is a big fire in Clinton street," the former said. "McHenry won't give me room, but I've got to have it."

"That's it. The good stuff always comes in bunches," said Brand, showing his disgust. "What else you got?"

"Your cub, Powell, just came in with a prose poem on a dance hall suicide."

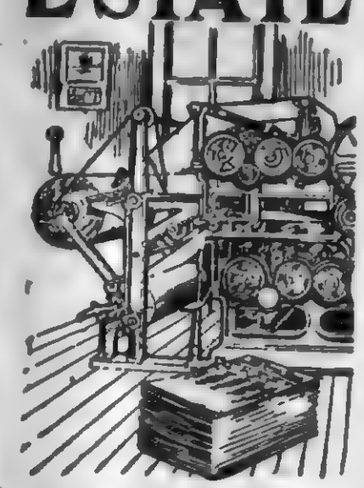
"Let's see it." The managing editor looked at the story, smiling broadly as he did so. "Send him in."

The voice of Edward Dupuy was heard outside.

"Is Mr. Brand in there?"

"Here; you can't go in there," a voice was heard in warning, and Brand looked up.

"Oh, yes, I can," was the cool response, and Dupuy walked in. "Brand,



"Get out or I'll throw you out!"

you print that picture of Judge Bartelmy and your paper's as good as dead," he threatened.

Brand smiled.

"Oh, we'll try to struggle on."

"The whole thing was a dirty piece of trickery, and we can prove it."

"Go ahead and prove it."

"We'll prove it was a faked picture," snarled the lawyer.

"What are you going to do?"

"Never mind what we'll do."

Dupuy now delivered the prize threat that he had saved for use in the last extremity, should it arise, and he was justified in assuming that it had arisen.

"A temporary injunction would certainly issue in a case like this," he said sternly. "I'll get one and close your shop."

"Sure! That's the thing! Get Bartelmy to issue one," suggested the managing editor sarcastically.

"I will and put a stop to your game! This muck raking mania is sweeping the country like a disease, breeding madmen everywhere. Brand, this is your finish!" He shook his fist violently.

Brand jumped up in anger and strode toward the lawyer lobbyist.

"Now, you get out of here or I'll throw you out!" he announced hotly.

"You will, will you? You just wait!" Dupuy backed slowly out of the doorway.

Brand hastened out into the composing room.

"Mac, they're beginning to squirm already!" he cried.

"We'll make them squirm more in the morning," responded the night editor significantly.

CHAPTER XIII.

BRAND, busily engaged in writing the caption for the cut that was to reveal Bartelmy in his true light, was interrupted once more—this time by the entrance of the greenish hued face of the poet reporter, Powell.

"You sent for me, sir?" asked the new scribe.

"So you've covered a suicide?" said Brand.

"Powow's" eyes rolled wildly. He clasped his hands and his knees shook in his horror at what he had learned.

"Oh, yessir—a terrible sight! I shall dre-e-e-a-m of it, sir! It would take a Dante to write of it. Oh, I"—

"What was this girl's name?" asked Brand in matter of fact tones.

"Madeline."

"Madeline what?"

"Her last name," the poet asked dazedly. "I guess I don't remember. Oh, yes, it was Jenks—Madeline Jenks!" He spoke feverishly.

Brand picked up the poet's first newspaper story and began to read it. In spite of the high pressure of events that night in the Advance office, in spite of his ever present fear that Bartelmy and Dupuy might in some way persuade Nolan to order the sensational bribery story killed, this many sided young man found the time to bother with the fantastic young poet reporter and his fantastic first article.

"Madeline Jenks, eh?" commented Brand, turning over the pages. "Well, the first place you mention her name is on page 8."

He plucked off the first two pages and threw them on the floor. Powell winced painfully at the massacre of his first reportorial offspring. "Begin there," said Brand. Powell lunged downward to rescue his first two pages, but Brand kicked them away from him. "Where'd she live?" he next asked.

Powell clasped his hands and gazed plaintively at the ceiling.

"Over a chop suey cafe, sir."

"Number and street?"

"Two forty-three and a half West Pearl street."

Brand threw away two more pages, Powell watching him anxiously the while.

"Put that next. Here. Madeline Jenks," Brand began to write, "an inmate of 243½ West Pearl street. What did she do?"

"She destroyed herself utterly!" the new reporter wailed.

Brand went on writing.

"Is she dead?"

"Yes, sir."

"Shot and killed herself—when?"

"Tonight at 9 o'clock."

Brand wrote on.

"Last night at 9 o'clock. Why?"

Powell answered very intensely:

"Oh, she could no longer face the ghastliness of her existence. She knew she"—

"She was weary of life in the streets."

"I don't blame her," Brand commented to himself. He turned to Powell. "There's your story. Thirty words—you had 3,000. And remember the story of the creation was told in 600 words."

Powell picked up the pages of his story which Brand had discarded and walked dejectedly away.

"Mac," Brand ordered, "here's a dance hall suicide. Put it with local brevities, will you?"

Had Brand at this moment been able to see through the wall that separated the composing room from the hall he would have witnessed a sight that would have deprived him of some of the self possession that marked his present demeanor. A figure clad in an elaborate evening gown crept softly up the stairway, stood irresolutely at the landing and then turned into the managing editor's office. Judith Bartelmy probably never looked more beautiful in her life than she did that night. A flush of excitement enhanced the soft allurement of her exquisite features, and the low cut neck of her sleeveless gown completed a picture of feminine loveliness that, innocently enough on her part, was admirably adapted to the purpose Judge Bartelmy had in his unprincipled mind when he sent her to the Advance office. "You are my only hope," he had told her after Dupuy had at first failed to locate Nolan. "You must go and plead with Wheeler Brand or else I am ruined. Your father will be ruined absolutely." At the sight of her father's emotion and yielding to the fervent pleadings of her only living parent she had willingly consented to undertake the mission. Unpleasant though she knew it would be, she believed it her duty to stand by in his hour of dire need the father whom she loved, the father whom she did not know.

As she entered the office and paused in conjecture as to just how she would proceed she heard footsteps hurriedly ascending the stairs, and, withdrawing into a shadow in a corner, she saw Michael Nolan and Mrs. Nolan cross the hall and disappear into the composing room.

"Thank heaven!" she murmured fervently. "They will stop this story, which father says is a horrible lie."

Wheeler Brand will never forget—he

"Remember the story of the creation was told in 600 words."

has since said so from the depths of his soul—the shock that went through him when he saw Nolan, accompanied by his wife, making their way toward him on that memorable night.

McHenry was speaking when they entered.

"There is your first page, Brand," he was saying, "and it sends Bartelmy to state prison."

The managing editor gazed approvingly at the appearance of the page of type and the cut in the form as it lay exposed on one of the stones under a shaded electric light. He looked up to congratulate McHenry on the manner in which he had completed the makeup of the page when his jaw suddenly fell. His eyes took on an amazed stare. He was looking straight over the night editor's shoulder. McHenry

SECOND WARD BRANCH.

The Second Ward Branch had a rally at Gutknecht's Hall, corner Parsons and Lexington avenues, Friday evening of last week. Comrade J. H. Henderson spoke. The meeting was a great success. A collection of $6 was taken. Comrade D. J. Farrell gave a fine select reading.

FOURTH WARD BRANCH.

The meeting of the Fourth Ward, Sunday night, was fairly well attended. Some surprises were in store. Master Thomas Gates, 11 years old, demonstrated how Socialism is taking hold of the youth. He made a beautiful and scientific talk on Socialism; indeed, he did so well that the writer would recommend him as a speaker for other Branches. He can be had, and signified his willingness to speak at Branch meetings. He is a student, and deserves great credit.

Comrade Schumm gave an interesting talk on the "Half-Baked Pancakes in Society." The political as well as the industrial pirates were roasted to a standstill, as only Comrade Schumm can do it. Things are moving along nicely in the Fourth and we will be able to give a good account of our stewardship next November.

SEVENTH WARD.

The organization of the Seventh Ward was perfected Thursday evening, and the cause in that section will take on new life.

Comrade Joseph Peters was elected temporary organizer and Comrade Clarence Margraf temporary secretary. The next meeting will be Thursday evening, March 9, at 184½ South High street. There will be speeches by Comrade Lewis and others.

Patronize business men who advertise in The Socialist.

NINTH WARD BRANCH.

The Ninth Ward Branch, at its meeting Thursday evening, February 23, took up the New Mexico Constitution proposed, as a model for Ohio, and approved the same after changing the age at which children should be allowed to work in factories from 16 to 18 years. Comrade John Gayton read an excellent paper. A committee of three was elected to get estimates on a hall, to be built for the use of the Branch. A proposition was made to raise part of the funds by each member giving one day's wages.

TENTH WARD BRANCH.

The Tenth Ward Branch had a propaganda meeting at Hunt's Hall, last Sunday afternoon. Speeches were made by Comrades Lewis, Gayton and Radebaugh. Four applications for membership were received. The Tenth Ward is doing good work.

ELEVENTH WARD.

The entertainment given by the Eleventh Ward Branch, Thursday evening of last week, was a success in every way. The hall was crowded, the program as published was carried out, and the comrades of the Eleventh Ward again covered themselves with glory.

LOCAL LINDEN HEIGHTS.

Comrade Lewis Spoke at Simons' Hall, in Linden Heights, Friday evening, February 24, to a good audience. The comrades there are workers, and after carrying the village last November propose to take it again this year.

GERMAN BRANCH.

The German Branch had an enthusiastic propaganda meeting last night, at their headquarters, Kull's Hall, corner Third and Mound streets. Comrade George Wendell spoke to a large audience. The German comrades are always in the forefront of the battle.

NEW MEMBERS.

The City Central Committee approved the applications of 44 new party members this week. This is more than the entire attendance of Democrats at the Washington Birthday celebration of the Jeffersonian Club.

SOCIALISM.

Let no man fear the name of "Socialism." The movement of the working class for justice by any other name would be as terrible.—Father William Barry.

The Catholic priest who gave utterance to the above sentiments is worthy of wearing the garb of the church.

The man who feels his heart beat for oppressed and crushed humanity is a true and loyal disciple of the Crucified Man, who nineteen hundred years ago preached against the injustice of a privileged few who grew arrogant on the slavery of labor.

Father Barry is permeated with a true Christian spirit, but his sentiments will not be rewarded by donations from the coffers of exploiters.—Miners' Magazine.

THE TRUST PROBLEM.

Plain and Concise Treatment of Subject by Ralph Korngold.

Ralph Korngold gave the third lecture of the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum course, at the Board of Trade last Tuesday evening, on "The Trust Problem." He gave an excellent refutation of the Democratic party's plan to bust the trust and showed that the Republican policy of control was equally futile. The only practical way is ownership, as advocated by Socialists, as it is impossible to control what is not owned. The audience was the largest that has attended thus far in the series.

HOT FROM THE WIRE.

The Brewery Workers' Union has broken the Manufacturers' Association ranks in Los Angeles. Three of the largest breweries have conceded to the union's demands.

The Brotherhood of Railway Mail Clerks are talking of affiliation with the American Federation of Labor. Twelve new charters were issued last month.

It has been charged that the names of all the applications for the position of United States railroad boiler inspectors have been laid on the desk of Mr. Deens, chief motive power superintendent of the New York Central lines. Of course, they want "safe" men for these positions.

Machinists, under the leadership of William H. Johnston, have won in their efforts to make the contractors on all government work not exceed eight hours per day. Johnston is mentioned as a possible candidate for the office of president of the machinist's Union. Johnson is a Socialist.

Clothes and food are being rushed into the Irwin coal fields. Surrender or starve, is the cry of the coal barons.

Some of the banquet section of the A. F. of L. are sending forth a wail of agony because John Mitchell will not be able to attend Andrew Carnegie's peace bugaboos.

Those of our citizenship who berate the Socialists and laud the standpatters should visit our city dungeon and view the submerged tenth (travelling unemployed), resting for the night on the hard brick floor. Conservative minds live in conservative atmospheres.

President Gompers, speaking at Indianapolis, advocated the launching of a Labor party, independent of the Republican and Democratic parties.

Ameringer and Millhard are taking part in the Chicago City campaign.

To evade the contract labor law, a judge has decided that Chinese sailors are not laborers.

Union bank clerks in New York went out on strike. This action followed a notice served by the Hebrew Bank Employes' Union—the boss bankers—for wage and shorter workday conditions.

The workers of the British colonies are talking of forming a Colonial Federation. This would combine the workers of South Africa, New Zealand and Australia under one head.

The labor unions of Boston are pushing the woman's suffrage movement.

It is reported that Secretary Nagel has authorized the admission of Chinese immigrants of the merchant, traveler and student class, on a bond of $200. Heretofore the lowest bond accepted has been for $500. A small amount like $200, says the San Francisco Clarion, would result in an influx of "merchants, travelers and students" that would swamp the white man. There isn't a Chinese who couldn't—and wouldn't—pass for a merchant, or a traveler, or a student. They are all merchants, even unto shoe-strings and peanuts. As for traveling, why that qualification is complied with by crossing the ocean.

When you need anything in the Furniture Line, either New or Old, be sure and see us. We sell either for Cash or on Payments. Terms to suit every person's income. Everything for the house. MAGRUDER ABSENT.

The Jefferson Democratic Club entertained Senator-elect Pomerene, Wednesday noon, at a dinner at the Neil House. The unspeakable Magruder was not present. The Jeffs evidently have some self-respect.

PROPAGANDA MEETING.

A propaganda meeting will be held next Thursday evening, at Wm. Deibel's place, corner Schiller and Yeager streets. Comrade Lewis, of The Columbus Socialist, will speak.

FAIRFIELD COUNTY NOTES.

Comrade S. F. Sheets, Local Sugar Grove, was in Lancaster Saturday, assisting to organize the county committee. Comrade Sheets thinks Socialism the best antidote for capitalistic system poisoning in existence. Fairfield is badly in need of this if it is a physic, as this is one of the rottenest political raw-deal sheets in the state. It is our intention to push actively the propaganda of the party in this boss-ridden, greed-soaked bailiwick.

Let every Socialist in Fairfield county get in touch with the county organization by sending his or her name and address to W. J. Haus, No. 841 East Main street, Lancaster, O., in order that we may enlist them in propaganda work, etc. We need your help. The cause needs you. Come around where we can see you.

To start our active campaign we will have with us, Sunday, March 5, Comrade J. L. Bachman, of Columbus, who made such a sensational race for congress in his district last fall, and the same Comrade who had the plutes of Franklin county and Ohio scared to death. This will be the first blow struck in the campaign to put the Columbus Socialist in the home of every worker in the county.

Comrade Crampton, Lancaster Local was hunting plutes around Sugar Grove, last week, but we heard they took to the hills when they heard him coming.

Comrade J. A. Bradley, Lancaster, was at Bremen the 19th, looking for Comrade Myers, but returned without his quarry.

We are trying to locate a good hall, so that we may hang out our sign soon.

This is a good field for the work of education. The correspondent ventures the opinion that there are more parasites living in and around Lancaster than in any other town of its size in the state. Labor conditions here are extremely poor. Nearly all trades are unorganized, with the exception of glass workers, printers and bricklayers. Shoe workers here can make from 50 cents to $2 per day, under conditions which would make a dog sick. Railway shop workers do fairly well, but get only about an eighth of what they produce. Two machine shops here pay an average of about $1.25 per day of 10 hours, and are rabid non-unionists. This nets us a few members and voters.

We have here a monument, which should be dedicated to the capitalistic system, in the shape of a monster glass factory, the original cost of which must have been enormous. It is and has been idle and empty for several years owing to over-production and a consequent glut in the market. Oh, you poor suckers! Just keep on voting the plute tickets, and they will attend to closing the rest of them.

Three interested visitors at the local meeting Sunday means three more votes in Fairfield county this fall.

Meeting this week will be held in the Auditorium, just before the Bachman lecture. Would be pleased to have any visiting comrades meet with us.

A report from Cincinnati has it that Nicholas Klein has brought suit for $10,000 damages against Frank L. Rist for alleged slander. Klein is attorney for the United Garment Workers of Cincinnati, and he charges that while addressing a local union Rist made remarks about him calculated to injure his reputation. Rist is editor of the Cincinnati Chronicle and also an A. F. of L. organizer, and the garment workers, Central Labor Council and other bodies are said to have sent protests to Washington against Rist's behavior. We doubt that Klein can recover a penny from Rist for slander. Almost any court will hold that Rist can't slander any one.

Now Get Busy!

The Socialist Wants 10,000 More Subscribers in Columbus Right Away.

The Workers in "The Storm Center Of Socialism" Have A Chance To Make Good.

All That Is Needed Is "A Long Pull, A Strong Pull, and A Pull Altogether."

The Socialist Makes Fair Proposition To Secure The Co-Operation Of All For The Next Campaign.

READ EVERY WORD OF OUR OFFER.

The Socialist wishes to co-operate with the City Central Committee, the Ward Branches and the precinct workers of the Socialist party of Columbus in educating the voters and organizing our forces so that we may reap the full benefit of our educational work.

We believe that one of the most effective means of educating the workers and of propagating Socialism is through the columns of a good Socialist paper. The paper goes each week into the home and carries some message, some truth, to each of its readers. While we make no apology for our paper, we are determined that each issue shall be an improvement over the previous one.

The subscription list is the life of any paper. Without it, it dies. We want at least 10,000 subscribers on our books before the campaign opens. We must have them if The Socialist is to be the power for good that it should be in the fight of 1911 in Columbus, "the Storm Center of Socialism."

OUR PLAN.

Here is our plan to put money into the treasuries of the City Central Committee and of the Ward Branches for use in organization and propaganda work, as they may determine:

1. We will pay to each Ward Branch 12½ per cent. of all money for subscriptions collected and turned in by its members to The Socialist.

2. We will pay over to the treasury of the City Central Committee of Local Columbus 12½ per cent. of all money collected and paid in by the Ward Branches for subscriptions to The Socialist.

LIST OF PRIZES.

As Prizes or special rewards for the workers we offer the following:

1. To the Branch turning in the largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, in proportion to membership of the Branch in good standing, we will give $75 in books, to be selected by the Branch, or in money.

2. To the Branch turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist, under the foregoing conditions, we will give $50 in books or money.

3. To the Branch turning in the third largest amount of money on subscriptions as stated we will give $25 in books or money.

INDIVIDUAL REWARDS.

1. To the individual turning in the largest amount of money on subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $25 in gold.

2. To the individual turning in the second largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $15 in gold.

3. To the individual who turns in the third largest amount of money for subscriptions to The Socialist we will pay $10 in gold.

CONDITIONS.

The only conditions we impose in this contest are that the members of Branches will get all their sub. cards from the literature or special agent of their respective Branches and that this agent will at all times have on hand a supply of sub. cards and make returns to The Socialist of all subscriptions received not later than Wednesday of each week. Sub. cards will be supplied by this office at any time. This contest will be limited to Branches and Locals in Franklin County.

This Contest Began On Saturday, Feb. 11, and Will Close Tuesday, November 7, 1911

Information as to details of this contest will be cheerfully furnished by this office.

MYRON T'S THREE P'S.

Ex-Governor Myron T. Herrick, in his address before the legislative banking committee, in speaking on the Deposit Guarantee Bill, said that it was an ill-advised statement, made by its supporters, that such a law would prevent panics. This, he said, was not true.

The State Journal quotes Mr. Herrick as saying that "panics are psychological phenomena." Of course, Mr. Herrick said that for publication. That phase of speech is what we call "wool." It is used to pull over the eyes of the people, to blind their mental vision to the real cause of panics.

Mr. Herrick would not talk that way to a council of bankers, if he knew it would not reach the ears of the public. Why? Because they know better, and he would be hissed out of the audience. It would be an insult to their intelligence. But the committee has allowed itself to be made a catspaw to assist the ex-governor in pulling the wool over the people's eyes.

The Journal, posing as an exponent of intelligent thought, ought to take a good cathartic for sanctioning such tommyrot. See editorial in March 4 edition. "Panics are psychological phenomena." Ha! ha! I wonder if they have aches and pains like their victims—subjects of poverty and crime! I am of the impression that this "phenomena" causes much of sorrow and death, much of crime and poverty!

Have you seen Mr. Panic walking around with his trousers in his boot-tops? Yes, and you feel like jerking him out of his boots, too, don't you? Why don't you? Because he is psychological phenomena! Is that why you do not dutch his heart-strings? Have you met any of his family of late? Did you see anxiety lurking in that bread-winner's face yesterday? Well, that was one of his children! That haggard expression you saw on the owner of that cosy little home around the corner, mortgaged yesterday, is the fruitage of this so-called phenomena! The [illegible] gentlemen is knocking at your door and [illegible] to send to aid of the brothers over in China to appease the hunger of her starving millions!

Ah! Why did not Mr. Herrick tell the truth and say: Panics are the effect of a cause. The cause is Capitalism, fathered by the accursed profit system under which we live, and of which he is one of the standpat sponsors. What is the profit system? Producing things for profit instead of things for use. Why accursed? Because the system engenders poverty and crime in its most malignant forms; its deadly virus has inoculated the whole human family; the poison of its fangs has been diffused in every artery of our social system; it has plunged the daggers of graft and greed deep into the vitals of our civic life; it has cursed us unto hell!

Mr. Herrick wreaths his definition of panics with the smilax of Wall Street stock markets, by saying: "As long as men in industrial and financial operations have alternative periods of optimism and pessimism, panics will occur." (This is another bit of wool to hide his deceit.) Yes, so will strikes and lockouts, crime, poverty and degradation of the worst forms occur.

In other words, so long as men in the industrial—the wage-earning class—and the financial—the capitalistic class—operate under the present system of producing goods for profit instead of for use, optimism will possess the capitalist so long as he can find profitable sale for his goods; but so soon as he has produced more than the wage class can buy back, and his product begins to accumulate in his warehouses, to the extent that his profits cease to exist, then it is when his optimism changes to pessimism and he closes his factories, he discharges his wage-slaves, thus augmenting an already overflowing tide of pessimism—then is your panic in full blast. Your psychological phenomena exposes its hideous form—and lo! it is capitalism stripping for a bath to don a new suit of hypocricy, all wool and a yard wide.

Oh, Herrick! Thou apostle of Capitalism! Why dost thou spin thy speech into wool to cover up the eyes of thy people that thy deceit may be hidden?

E. A. PALMER.

HOUSING CODE IS ENACTED.

The housing code was passed by the city council last Monday night, by a vote of 13 to 2, the negative votes being cast by Dierker and Mahanna. Mr. Eitel voted for the measure, but did it with bad grace. He declared:

"The methods used to pass this code are the most damnable and disreputable ever employed. I lose my self-respect in voting for it, but I am going to vote for it. So I vote Y-E-S."

Councilman Welsh, beside himself with the same sentiment, yelled: "This is the first ordinance I have not had the nerve to vote against, although I would like to do so. I'm heartily ashamed of myself for voting for it. But I do vote for it."

Chris Ross charged "rottenness somewhere" in stirring up "the mess" that was "making every one vote for the measure," but before he sat down he began smiling and explained to the councilmen they shouldn't get so excited over the matter, because he felt sure results would not be so bad as they feared.

Dr. Heintz approved the ordinance, but urged delay. He also bewailed the newspaper attitude on the ordinance.

In arguing against the ordinance Welsh also said: "I'd like to know what the people backing this code would do in my place. Ten landlords in my ward own tenements." The question arises as to whether Mr. Welsh considers the ten landlords of more importance than the thousands of other citizens of the ward. Are councilmen elected to serve the interests of the landlords or of the people? It was really pitiful to see the agony of the men who were compelled by public sentiment to vote for a law that did not please the owners of the rookeries that disgrace this city. Dodging, twisting, squirming they lined up for the code. It is high time that the people began to elect representatives who will really represent them. Lawmakers are supposed to act for the citizens who elect them, but too often this is not the case. With a Socialist council, it would not be necessary to pack the council chamber with the people in order to secure the passage of any measure in the interest of the working class. Socialist representatives are controlled by the organization which nominates and elects them. That's where the Socialist plan is different.

PLAIN TALK FROM CLEMMER.

Dr. J. W. Clemmer, health officer, addressed the West Side Board of Trade last week. "Unrealized Possibilities of Public Health Administration" was the subject. He reviewed the difficulties of the work with insufficient financial support, and advocated the establishment of a city hospital, a city abattoir or more meat inspectors, and the passage of the tenement code.

"Public health needs protection from commercial interests of all kinds, from milk dealers to patent medicine concerns," he said. "Public opinion is necessary to enforce all laws, and especially those relating to public health, and so the enforcement varies considerably with communities and generations.

"Every year Columbus citizens consume 1000 animals unfit for food," he continued, advocating better inspection. "Columbus is getting milk from herds that are not tested for tuberculosis. Ten to 15 per cent. of these animals are tubercular. In a generation or so, perhaps sooner, Columbus will awake to the danger and demand this inspection.

"The old Central Market is disgracefully unfit and inadequate for its purpose," he continued, "and it should give way to a modern sanitary building."

It is practically impossible to isolate and quarantine contagious cases among the poor, according to Dr. Clemmer, advancing this as an argument for a city detention hospital.

"Other cities maintain these hospitals, spending thousands a year to support them," he said, "but Columbus spends a meager pittance of $400 for each of its 11 district physicians, and in this niggardly way professes to care for its sick poor."

Such statements from a public official are simply added proof of the rotten condition of our political system under capitalism.

INCENTIVE UNDER SOCIALISM.

There will be plenty of incentive under Socialism. In the first place, there will be the spur of personal gain. Every worker will receive his share of the product, measured by the proportionate value of the labor he has rendered. The vast multitude of the people will have the incentive of a larger income for their labor.

At the same time the nobler motives will have a far wider opportunity. The incentive to excel in achievement will have full play. The recognition of the inventor will be immediate and his reward will be direct. He will not be forced longer to beg for crumbs at the rich man's gate. Some of our greatest inventors have died neglected and in want.

You will have an incentive to follow art or music, or science or philosophy, because you will have both the leisure and the equipment for such pursuit. There will be every inducement for you to live a kindly and a moral life, because there will be no rewards offered to meanness and immorality.

Incentive for greed will be gone. Incentive for murder will be gone. Incentive for exploitation will be gone. But every inducement will be here to live neighborly and joyous lives. That surely is incentive enough!

Frederick Guy Strickland.

THE MEXICAN PLOT THICKENS.

The most extensive movement of troops and war vessels ever executed in this country in time of peace is now under way, by order of the president, as commander-in-chief of the army and navy, the objective being the country north of the Mexican boundary and the waters of the two oceans at either end of it.

Twenty thousand soldiers—more than one-fourth of the army of the United States—of all arms of the service, are moving toward the Mexican border; four armored cruisers, comprising the fifth division of the Atlantic fleet, have been ordered from Northern waters to the naval station at Guantanamo, Cuba, and most of the Pacific fleet is, or shortly will be, on its way to assemble at San Pedro and San Diego, Cal., and 2000 marines are preparing to make the Guantanamo station their temporary headquarters.

The excuse given at the White House for this activity is the desire to give the army training under service conditions. The real reason can be found in the damnable plans of the Rockefeller-Morgan interests to perpetuate the infamous Diaz regime in Mexico. President Taft, working as the Man Friday of the Wall Street crowd, is using the army and navy of the United States to force back, if possible, the mighty torrent of revolt against the despotism of the so-called republic on our southern border. The insurrectos are battling for human liberty, and are winning steadily. Mexico is seething with revolution, and now the power of the United States, at the behest of the kings of finance, is to be exerted to crush the aspirations of a people who only want freedom. The master hand of Morgan can be seen directing every move of the servile tools who pose at Washington as the "administration."

CATS AND OTHER SACRED THINGS.

People of all people Socialists are the greatest humanists. In the eyes of some they carry the idea to excess. They do not like to see animals tortured. They do not like to see animals hunted even in the name of so-called sport. They even go to the length of fighting against the torturing of human beings for profit. In this respect they stand practically alone. Other good persons may feel sorry for human suffering. But they would not relieve human suffering by seeking to end that exploitation which is the cause of most of it.

But when it comes to cats and dogs and horses there are people in plenty who will fight, in court and out of court, to prevent any one torturing the animals. There are plenty of cases where men have been hauled up for overworking horses. Can you offset it by cases where men have been hauled up for overworking children? Not to any great extent.

Many warm-hearted persons who stand aghast at seeing a galled horse driven, or who are aroused to fight on seeing a horse whipped, do not feel the slightest thrill on seeing little children driven. They are perfectly placid, perfectly happy as they watch the harried and worried little cash and bundle girls in the department stores, utterly unmoved when they hear of the way the children are sacrificed in mills. Some of them even profit by this cruelty to children, or cruelty to adults, so protesting might mean decrease in profits, and consequently no protest is made. They can, however, be as indignant as they choose over cruelty to mere animals, for their indignation does not cost them anything, and it brings a grateful glow of self-satisfaction.

Of late there has been rather an epidemic of kindness—to animals. Anti-vivisectionists have been especially active. Some of their contentions may possibly be founded in fact. It is probably true that mere curiosity has led some so-called scientists to inflict excruciating torture on a poor beast. But that has been exceptional. Experiments on animals have been carried on carefully and have been so guarded that as little pain as possible has been inflicted. That, on the other hand, is not the way human beings are exploited, as the hundreds of thousands of the mutilated can testify.

The latest manifestation of extreme feeling for and sympathy with animals comes from Natick, Mass., whose chief of police threatens to arrest all the teachers in Wellesley College because of a rumor that they have been buying cats for dissection in the zoological course. The kind, noble heart of the good chief almost stops beating at the thought that cats are dissected. It is a thing that makes him shudder and that arouses him to use his power to the utmost.

It has not been shown that there was any cruelty. It has not been shown that the instructors and students in the college were in any way depraved and vicious. Yet there was a rumor about the dissections, and it has caused a storm of protest.

Natick is an industrial town. There are many men, women and children there who work hard during long hours for comparatively low wages. The police have not been aroused to any indignation over it. There have been no protests against it. As the workers are not sacred, there is no reason why good people should be especially concerned. Cats are another matter. They are sacred.

MR. MARSHALL, COLUMBUS AND GAS.

Advocating municipal ownership of all public utilities, Mayor Marshall addressed the Brotherhood of the Indianola Presbyterian Church, on the question of the natural gas rate in Columbus, and by this means he would stop Socialism. Why is Mr. Marshall scared at Socialism? Why? Kind readers, excuse me just one minute, while I laugh. Stop Socialism by public ownership. If that don't take the cake! Say, what have the Socialists been preaching all these years? Does not Socialism teach us that it—Socialism—can not be perfect without municipal and common ownership of all big concerns and trusts, who, by their outrageous high prices and low wages, make life one miserable existence? I wonder where Mr. Marshall got his idea. Now, if Mr. Marshall would be in earnest about this municipal ownership of public utilities, why I myself would vote for him once more. But municipal elections are coming again soon, and we must prepare for them. No more promises go with us. We have, since 1896, been waiting for Mr. William McKinley's ray of light, which was supposed to be cast forth from heaven. What I mean by that is that big word—Prosperity. Where is our prosperity? Is it coming now with the gas? Just think, a Republican mayor promising or advocating municipal ownership of public utilities! Look out, Mr. Workingman; look this thing through; don't dream on this subject. Look straight at it. And, Mr. Workingman, if you don't pay just the exact amount the gas company wants for their gas, as Mr. Marshall says, they will just disconnect their pipe line and you can freeze to death—your wife and your baby can freeze to death—for all the gas company cares. Life and labor is cheap! But would we stand for them to turn our gas off? Mr. Workingman, would we stand for it? Now answer, would we? I would not!

But they are not going to turn our gas off. Oh no! They will get their price, don't you forget it. Money talks every time.

Now I have a few things to say to our esteemed mayor—our workingman's friend (?)—our public servant, who so nobly stood with the street car strikers, who talked to me face to face, whose eyes flashed fire, whose face turned red and white by turns, when he promised to stand by the laboring man, who would work wonders by a few changes in the city of Columbus by doing away with bad tenement houses, which would make a beautiful city of the same. That's just what he said, in a speech in Sam Weaver's Hall, corner High and Hosack streets, right before the election; and, like a fool, I went right to the polls and threw my vote away on him and his promises. But never again for me! From now on a straight Socialist ticket will be my answer, and I will vote for a true promise of municipal and common ownership, which the Socialist party stands for. All their threats of empty dinner pail or turn your gas off, or no more prosperity, will not change me now. Mr. Workingman, they won't turn your gas off, because they don't dare. One more thing. A church is a nice place to talk over questions, as Mr. Marshall has been doing. Why don't he try and introduce a bill in the legislature instead of preaching gas problems in our churches. Now if Mr. Marshall wants to go over all these things in a debate, why we will rent or hire a place and get a good Socialist speaker, who understands Socialism. He will soon show the public who is right or wrong. Will Mr. Marshall accept this challenge. Here is a good chance to down Socialism.

GOLDSTEIN APPEARS IN PHILADELPHIA

Anti-Socialist Has Uncomfortable Session in a Catholic Hall.

(By J. A. Fischer.)

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 18.—David Goldstein, father of "A Nation of Fatherless Children," spoke last night before an audience which numbered fully two hundred at St. Peter's Hall, Fifth street below Girard avenue. His subject was "The Tactics of Socialism."

The chairman of the meeting stated that the audience should listen to him because Roosevelt, "our ex-President," had recommended him. He stated that Socialism was "tearing down our" society and building up a new one.

Goldstein said: "It will require a higher degree of citizenship than we have today to combat Socialism. Catholics are a prey to Socialism because they are weak and easily fall into the snares of Socialism."

Then Goldstein tried to imitate an orator. Said he: "The Socialists would sooner get one Catholic than a dozen others."

Goldstein was plainly angry with himself for his previous remarks. He thought it was time to pose as an intelligent man, for he shouted: "Socialists want you to believe in economic determinism!"

This sentiment was greeted with applause, in which the priests themselves joined, much to the disgust of the speaker.

"Steam and electricity produces a class struggle—" began Goldstein, and again the audience yelled hurraha.

He quoted from an authority in the shape of T. Roosevelt, saying:

"Roosevelt said the Socialists are so vile and immoral"—

At this point a young woman cried, "That's not true—my father is a Socialist," whereupon there was laughter and applause, though evidently half the audience didn't know what they were applauding about.

"Hail the day when the poet of Socialism shall be driven into the sea!" cried Goldstein. Here some one yelled, "who wrote your speech? I heard that in Boston."

Continuing, he said:

"Because Socialism enters every department of human society the subject is vast. In a single address one may hope to deal only with one phase of it, so I propose to take up here that of tactics, for I trust that a study of the tactics of Socialism will go a long way toward revealing the character of the movement.

"There are no shrewder tacticians in the country; Socialist propagandists know how to make the most of poverty, the discontent and the ignorance of the masses. The inhumanity and lack of charity of today they denounce as if they held Christian views of life, all the while insisting that the notion of free-will is out of date, and that society is wholly responsible for individual shortcomings, that poverty is caused by robbery, and that ignorance is fostered by the church, while discontent with everything and everybody is their long suit, and there is no hope this side of Socialism triumphant.

"These tacticians know how to trim their sails to catch every wind that blows hot air; how to hammer on the weak spots of a man's faith and break him down; how to ring the changes on a half truth till the other half is forgotten."

Finally, he announced: "I will answer all questions,' and he got them in plenty. But he failed to answer them by a long sight. He stuck one question in his pocket, and tried to lead off into another. Your correspondent called his attention to the unanswered question but Goldstein stood dumb and blushed till the audience howled.

This question pertained to capitalist morality, but Goldstein could not answer it, because it was taken from Senate Document No. 196.

Here a priest came to his rescue and announced there would be no more questions.

Catholic Daily Papers.

(By Allen Cook, Canton, Ohio.)

According to the Catholic Universe, of Cleveland, and other Catholic papers and magazines, plans are on foot to establish Catholic dailies all over the United States. It might be well to inquire the object and the purpose of religious daily papers. If Catholic dailies are established, then we may expect to hear of Protestant daily papers being established. What can be the object of the establishment of religious dailies? The Catholic Universe and other Catholic papers and journals object to the news from Spain and Portugal, and other European countries, showing that the Catholic population are against the clerical party and are fighting the established church. The great common people of Spain and Portugal and Italy have been held down in abject poverty for centuries past. Millions of Catholic working people in Spain, Italy and Portugal have toiled like slaves during their entire lives for the support of a few thousand blue-blooded aristocrats, who have held their offices by reason of their birth and who are sustained and upheld by the church. The government of these countries has taxed and oppressed its Catholic working class to the last limit, and most of these governments maintain the church by these taxes it has extracted from the people. The church is compelled to uphold the government in its oppression of the working class or the government will cease to support the church. For this reason the authorities of the Catholic Church in Spain and Russia and Portugal have upheld the governments that oppress the members of its own church. The same can be said of any government that has an established church, whether Catholic, Protestant or pagan. The Catholic working class of Spain and Russia are revolting against this oppression. For this reason the Catholics of Portugal have overthrown a monarchy and established a republic, and will soon divorce church and state. They claim that the church is compromising with wrong and is not serving the purpose for which it was created and that it is un-Christian when it aids the government in oppressing the poor. Rome is a city of six hundred thousand population. It is admitted that more than 95 per cent. of its population are Catholics. But in Rome, under the shadows of the Vatican and right under the nose of the Pope, the Catholic population of that great city elected a Socialist Jew for mayor. Only the blue-blooded aristocracy and the great land-holding and office-holding class, and their hangers-on, supported the church and the clerical party. There must be some good cause for such a revolt in the ranks of the church. In Russia, often a number of women are hitched to a plow and made to plow and cultivate the soil, like beasts, and are driven by men. In Italy women are hitched up with beasts to pull loads to market and to till the soil. Conditions are no better in Spain, and yet the church upholds the government that has reduced the working class to miserable, unbearable conditions. Is it any wonder the people revolt? If the people did not revolt against such condition, their intelligence would not be above that of the dumb brute. Wherever church and state are united, there the church upholds the government, right or wrong, for the support it received from the government in its maintenance. When some noble souls step forth to uphold and defend human rights as against the vested interests of the church, whether Catholic or Protestant, the authorities of the church denounce such noble citizens as infidels and atheists. The church has mistaken its mission when it aids the government in the oppression of the poor and upholds the tyranny of the ruling class. The people in Spain, in Italy, in Germany, in England, in Russia and other countries who are denounced by the church as disbelievers, infidels and atheists, because they will not aid the church in its support of the government in oppressing the poor, are the best citizens those countries contain. They may be violently anti-church and yet deeply and devoutly religious in principle. They do not believe men are under obligations to uphold and sustain a church that compromises with wrong and aids the government to oppress the poor. Tyrannies have always been upheld and sustained by churches that have been organized for such special purposes. The great question with the tyrants and oppressors of the world is not a religious question. It is an economic question, a materialistic question. The purpose of the oppressive government is to hold in subjection the working class, who are robbed of the wealth they produce. In Catholic countries the rulers of the government are Catholics. They organize a Catholic militia to shoot down Catholic workingmen when they resent the oppressions of Catholic capitalists and Catholic government. In Germany the government is Lutheran and they organize a Lutheran militia to shoot down Lutheran workingmen when they resent the oppressions of Lutheran capitalists and a Lutheran government. In France the government is atheistic, and they organize an atheistic army to shoot down atheistic workingmen when they resent the oppressions of the atheistic capitalists and atheistic government. So the question is not one of religion, but one of economic and material interests. Workingmen of all religions should get their eyes open and let the light of truth pierce their brain, and henceforth reason for themselves on questions of politics, morals and religion. They should not act like young robins, who gulp down everything that is put in their mouth, whether it be worms or ten-penny nails. A man's religion is, to a great extent, the result of his environment. A Protestant child may be brought up a Catholic, if it be placed in a Catholic family and surrounded by Catholic environments. A Catholic child may be brought up a Protestant, if it be placed in a Protestant family and surrounded by Protestant influences. A Catholic child and a Protestant child may be put in the family of a Jew and surrounded by Jewish influences and environments and grow up to be Jews in their faith. A Catholic, Protestant and Jewish child may be taken to the South Sea Islands, and placed in the care of a cannibal family, and they will grow up to be cannibals.

The human race has been endowed with many faculties not possessed by the lower animals. Man has been endowed with reason, with the power of speech, and has at his command the progress and history of thousands of years in the past. By the light of science he can predict the changes of the moon, the eclipse of the sun and calculate to the minute the movements of the planets in their orbits. Yet with all these faculties and reasoning powers and scientific knowledge he allows himself to be robbed of the fruits of his toil, enslaved by his employers, and clings like a madman to the superstitions and fanaticisms that blight and wither his soul. Men should be free to think and reason for themselves. An independent, free man will always be the most moral and the best citizen. If that statement be not true, then slavery would be the ideal condition of the human race. Socialism would give to all men the full product of their toil. Hence all able-bodied men would be compelled to render some useful service to society or go hungry. Aristocracy could not grow in Socialist soil and superstition would vanish from the earth. Socialism believes in the absolute separation of church and state. Hence the idle aristocracy are against Socialism because it would set them to work and the churches in monarchical governments are against Socialism because a Socialist government would refuse to maintain them by taxation of the working class. Let us hope that the day is fast approaching when the great working class will use to its own advantage the faculties and powers with which they have been endowed and refuse longer to be enslaved by the mythologies and the superstitions of the past, and the petty dissensions within their own ranks.

Religious daily papers would only tend to keep the working class divided—fighting each other on matters of dogma and creed, instead of uniting to fight their common enemy, the capitalist class, for their own emancipation from the bondages of wage-slavery. The doom of capitalism is sealed. The co-operative commonwealth will rise from its ruins to bless the human race. The capitalists never quarrel over religions. They unite as one man—Catholic, Protestant and Jew—to defend the interests of their class. When the working class awake they will unite as one man—Catholic, Protestant and Jew—to defend their interests. Religious dailies would only prove a curse to the working class by creating religious hatreds and dissensions within their ranks. It is a capitalist scheme to play upon the religious faiths and beliefs and prejudices of the working people and divide their ranks. In union their is strength. Don't allow yourselves to be betrayed.

A number of high-browed gentlemen constituting the senate investigation committee, after much examination, meditation and consideration, have arrived at the significant conclusion that the high cost of living is due entirely to the increased cost of commodities. None but our astute senators would ever have guessed it.

News From The World Wide Movement Of The Workers.

NEWS FROM THE NATIONAL SOCIALIST HEADQUARTERS

The sub-committee (Investigating Committee) of the National Committee held an adjourned session on February 25, and submitted a report of its findings to the National Committee, under date of February 28. The report has been circulated in leaflet form, through the usual channels of party information.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE MOTION TO BE SUBMITTED WHEN SUPPORTED BY THE REQUISITE NUMBER OF NAMES.

Cincinnati, Ohio, March 3, 1911.
Motion:
"That the report of the Investigating Committee be approved."
Comment:
"I make this motion because I was secretary of the Committee, and desire the report to follow the usual parliamentary procedure.
"Yours for the R-Evolution,
"(Signed) WALTER J MILLARD,
"National Committeeman for Ohio."

The corporations of New Castle, Pa., have revived the court proceedings against the comrades identified with the publication of the New Castle Free Press. In this long drawn out case one point after another was won by the defendants, and mainly due to the fact that the merits of the case were widely published. The prosecution then seemed to think it advisable to rest a while, but are now ready to press the charge of seditious libel. The trial is to be held on March 20. The Socialist and labor press should at once present the facts of the case to their readers. The information can be obtained from the columns of the New Castle Free Press.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES.—On February 28 and March 1 individual membership ballots for the election of the Woman's National Committee and for Referendum "A," 1911, were shipped in equal numbers in bulk to the State Secretaries for distribution. The number sent to each State Secretary was one-third in excess of the number of members in the state, as based upon the apportionment published in the January Bulletin. If the ballots are not received with in a reasonable length of time, or an additional number is needed, advise the National Office at once.

At the same time as above, ballots were also sent to locals in unorganized states and to members at large.

It is reported from Tooele City, Utah, that the International Smelting and Refining Company, a branch of Standard Oil, has given orders to fire every Socialist employe. As this is the only employment open at this time of the year in that locality, it makes matters extremely hard for the comrades.

H. C. Tuck, editor of The World, of Oakland, Cal., has been sentenced to three months in jail on account of publishing a cartoon which represented Police Captain Peterson, of that city, and the brutal methods of the police department responsible for the death of a woman prisoner. Contributions for a defense fund are requested by Local Oakland. All contributions should be sent to William Serb, 938 Twelfth street, Oakland, Cal.

NATIONAL ORGANIZERS.

The above are the only speakers working under the direction of the National Office.

OHIO SOCIALIST NEWS.

Comrade Walter E. Hilton is certainly entitled to some consideration for the special effort that he is making in organizing the locals on the Ohio side of the state line, between here and Wheeling. Comrade Hilton is editor of the Wheeling Majority.

East Palestine is going into the next election with a vim, and the comrades of that place are seeking any information possible to conform as near as possible with the new laws governing municipalities for the next fall election.

Sandusky is again in the most healthy and prosperous condition that can be imagined and bids fair to restore Erie county back again to the "good side of the ledger," instead of the debit side, when the votes are counted again after the next election.

Comrade W. W. Mason, of Zanesville, writes to the state office as follows: "Well, I see Fred Warren does not go to jail. Protest meetings meetings should now be held all over the country and demands made upon the President to annul the $100 fine and payment of the $2000 costs attached. We should by all means keep this before the people."

Empire, Ohio can again afford a local after having completely died out. There are now just a few feet left along the eastern boundary line of the state upon which other locals might be placed.

The mining camps throughout the state are simply permeated with Socialism, and from every "hole in the ground" the echo of the co-operative commonwealth is heard.

Comrade B. F. Primmer, of Local Hamilton, writes that they wanted a half dozen or more of applications for charter blanks to use in organizing Butler county. This can be watched with perfect satisfaction, as there will be results. Those comrades do things down there, and if you read the papers you will see.

Comrade V. W. Merritt, of Marysville, writes as follows: "Since last report was sent in it was my good fortune to visit both Chicago and Milwaukee. I also stopped in the national office and saw the plant of the Chicago Daily Socialist and the intellectual "ammunition" in the process of manufacture. It certainly is soul-stirring and inspiring. I did not get an opportunity to speak to Mayor Seidel, as he was very busy at the time, and my time was limited and I had to leave. I also visited the plant of the Social-Democratic Herald. I realized the heart-throbs of its energy while in operation. It is my hope that there may soon be some Ohio town of large proportions to boast of a Socialist mayor."

Medina county coming into the fold has caused us to place another "tack" on the Ohio map to designate that this town now is supporting the state and national political party of the working classes.

Ludlow Falls had a meeting for Comrade Fred Strickland, and from all reports it was a decided success. The comrades in that vicinity have started the campaign in a way that will naturally result in good for the party.

It will no doubt be pleasing to the comrades of the state to learn that Local Cincinnati is progressing and doing exceptionally fine just now in the matter of concerted action.

Utica, Licking county, has affixed itself to the Socialist party of Ohio by enrolling a charter list of thirty-two glass workers, which shows the spirit of that organized movement in behalf of the working class from a political standpoint.

New Richmond is a new addition to the party in Ohio, and adds another "tack" upon the office map in the almost barren territory of Clermont county.

Comrade Thos. White, of Uhrichsville, writes the following lines to the state office: "Comrade Claude Ferguson spoke here and proved to be a pleasing and convincing speaker. He is thoroughly versed in the principles of Socialism, and we hear from all sides that it was one of the clearest arguments they ever heard. Don't be afraid to send him any place."

Local Ashland, by a unanimous vote, endorsed Comrade R. H. Gwinner, and they recommend him to the comrades as an able speaker and worthy to espouse the cause of Socialism. The communication further reads that Comrade Gwinner is an able lawyer and has and is now contributing to the columns of the Appeal to Reason and is the author of the article that appears in that paper entitled "Janitor of the Court House of Steam Corners."

O. A. STORCK,
State Secretary.

J. WESLEY HILL INTERVIEWED.

(By Emanuel Julius.)

Reading so much about J. Wesley Hill, the anti-Socialist preacher, I decided to take a trip up to his church, at Fourteenth street and Ninth avenue, New York City, look the old duffer over and have a chat with him.

It certainly was easy sailing. Not for one moment, while in the enemy's camp, was my life in danger.

Entering his private office I was stopped by a stenographer. I handed her one of my cards, declaring, at the same time, that I desired to interview the Rev. Doctor J. Wesley Hill, notorious anti-Socialist and president of both the League for Social and Individual Justice and The International Forum Association.

I did not wait very long before I heard a loud voice say: "Show'm in."

A few seconds later, hat in hand, I stood before his august majesty. I noticed at a glance that he was a heavy, tall man, of about 50 years of age. Seated at his desk, the first thing that attracted my attention was his bald head—it shone like a star and dazzled me with its brilliancy. I next noticed his fat belly. It failed to reach his knees by about three inches. As I stood there looking at him I could not resist asking myself: "Upon what musk doth this our Hill feed that he hath grown so fat?"

"Did you come to see me?" asked Hill, eyeing me from head to foot.

"Yes," was my answer.

I must have made a good impression on him, for he handed me a genuine Havana as soon as I seated myself. Lighting it, I took a few puffs and right here I would have the whole world know that that cigar was a dandy.

J. Wesley was getting impatient.

"What do you want to see me about?" he asked abruptly.

"I want to know when you intend to begin annihilating the Socialists?" was my query.

"That's a strange question to ask," said Hill, after a moment's hesitation.

"Why?" asked I.

"Don't you know that the league of which I am president is over a year old? Don't you know that we have been attacking Socialism all this time?" Hill asked of me.

"Yes, I know all that," I replied. "But here is what puzzles me: when you organized the capitalists, preachers, editors, labor leaders and politicians into your league to smash Socialism there were only about a half million Socialist voters in this country, and now, after a year of bombarding the Socialist ranks, I find that they have about seven hundred thousand voters. That's funny, isn't it? I'd imagine that your opposition should have weakened them instead of given them added strength and numbers."

Hill stuttered and stammered at my remark, and then mumbled: "I'm sure that I can't be blamed for the increase in the Socialist vote. Were I to have my way about it, there would be no Socialist party in existence today."

I then asked him why he is so strenuously opposed to Socialism. His reply went something like this:

"The Socialists are irreligious—they are brigands, that's what they are. They frankly work for the 'grand act of confiscation'—they plainly say they intend to rob the capitalists of their wealth. The Socialists are atheists and are against the Church of God. They are bent on changing this present form of society and bringing about a system that will enable the loafer to enjoy the sweets of life."

I thought it about time to interrupt. What I said was:

"Don't you think that this system that we are living under enables the loafers to live off the best that labor produces? I believe that your argument smashes away at capitalism more effectively than at Socialism. Any one who has studied the question in the least knows that the Socialists are working for a system that will do away with parasites. They declare that only by one's labor shall a person consume."

Hill settled back in his chair and chuckled loudly. Continuing, I said:

"You say, Mr. Hill, that the Socialists are atheists. Maybe some are, they have a perfect right to be such; but you are wrong when you say that the Socialist movement is anti-religious. The Socialist movement is a political and economic organization and does not tamper with one's religious beliefs. It holds that religion is a private matter. Its convention decided that question thoroughly. You should get the proceedings and read up. A few pamphlets on Socialism would do you no harm."

Hill then replied: "I don't think you stand much chance of converting me to the Socialistic theory. I might add that I don't care to enter into a discussion with you on this question. Good morning."—Milwaukee Herald.

THE DIFFERENCE.

"There goes Bill Jones, the roustabout. That fellow drinks a whole bottle of beer every Saturday night."

"The horrible drunkard."

"And there is old Millionaire Jones. He has three kinds of wine on his table."

"How eccentric!"

PALMER (MASS.) NEWS.

February 27, 1911.—Under the auspices of the Men's League, about 100 intellectuals listened to Tom Hisgen denounce big oil business for a solid hour. The meeting was held in the Congregational Church parlor, and Tom reverently broached the subject by the Bible route. Ahab took Naboth's vineyard away from him, just as with Rockefeller. He has been laying hands on the oil fields.

Brother Hisgen is very indignant at the octopus, and will fight the creature to the utmost. He suggested that confiscation of the oil trust in particular would be a good thing to push, but he did not go into details of how to do it. The modus operandi might smack of Socialism. When he declared that all the rulers of the land, judges and senators had sold out to the trusts it was a signal for the red flag to wave.

For years the workingmen has been up against it. Now the rich man is up against it. And he will have to squirm like the devil to save his carcass.

POOR OLD GROSSCUP.

Despite the White House hint that President Taft would not sign the new Arizona constitution, because it provided for a recall of its judges, the citizens of that new state have endorsed their organic law by a vote of over three to one. The recall was declared to be "an attempt to incorporate lynch law in the constitution of an American state."

And now comes California, whose state legislature is considering a similar measure.

All of which must be discouraging to Grosscup—the discredited—who told us last week that the supreme court was a "switch" that the mob could never control.

This sounds good to the men Grosscup protects, but to one who notes the rising tide of democracy, the ravings of this mis-named federal judge should be discounted.

He has fallen so low that only a yellow journal heeds his bark.—New Castle (Pa.) Free Press.

LOOK OUT FOR COSSACKS!

In a recent issue of Collier's Weekly, John H. Craig warns Ohio unionists of an attempt to establish the Cossack system in this state. Mr. Craig is not a unionist, and in his attempt to arouse organized workers against these uniformed thugs and blacklegs he says it is an open secret that the Pennsylvania constabulary received a rake-off from the Pressed Steel Car Company during the McKees Rocks strike. Craig also shows the Cossacks' system of putting some of their members in the strikers' ranks, and then starting to shoot. This gives the strike-breakers an excuse to murder. The scheme was worked so strongly at McKees Rocks that the strikers notified the Cossacks that, for every worker killed, two Cossacks would bite the dust, and they wouldn't be told when or how it was coming, either. This declaration for guerrilla warfare on the part of the men led to many desertions from the constabulary's ranks.

Mr. Craig insists that Ohio will be the next state afflicted with this scourge, if workers are not alert.

VOTE FOR SOCIALISM NOW.

(By E. T. Guest, Silver Creek, N. Y.)

Do not wait until you are altogether converted to Socialism before you vote the Socialist ticket. Here are reasons:

1. You believe in popular government; that is, the rule of the people instead of boss rule.

2. You believe in the public ownership of public utilities instead of their private ownership, which means the exploitation of the people through the necessaries of life.

3. You believe that the nation ought to secure a job to every man who wants to work, instead of forcing him to sue for the favor of some other man for the chance to earn his bread.

4. You believe that you have a right to your own honest opinion independent of your industrial boss, and you want your vote to count.

Do not let the visions of the dreamers as to what the perfected state of Socialism will be trouble you; you have only to do with the practical present.

Many a man has chosen an architect's plan to follow in building his house. The general ideas were carried out, but when it came to details his wife suggested a change in the dining-room windows; his daughter added a recess to the music-room; the cook changed the position of the pantry door, and he himself preferred that his library shelves be built into the opposite wall. The building of that house was not only a well-defined plan, but an evolution of economic necessity.

So it will be with the Socialist state. Socialists, though they have many and varying ideals, are th last people to say what every detail of the future will be. Holding steadfastly to a few elemental principles which they have found to be in harmony with age-long evolutionary forces, they have no wish to force results; they expect results to adjust themselves gradually to the needs of the people when once the people have become politically and economically free.

The thing for you to do is to study the main plan, and vote the Socialist ticket until the people regain their lost franchise through the initiative, the referendum and the recall. Then, and not till then, can you express yourself by your vote.

Not until political freedom is established according to Socialistic principles will the people's will be done—not the Socialist's will, understand me, but the people's will. The aim of Socialism is not to magnify Socialists, but the people.

If there is something in the Socialist program that the people in general do not want, the establishment of the initiative, the referendum and the recall will give them the power of objection and rejection. The people will not be obliged to have an unwelcome measure thrust upon them.

The people's will must be supreme. Under Socialism the whole country will not be run by a few Socialists, just as now we are run by a few party bosses.

It is the verdict of thoughtful students that we have not now a representative form of government, but an oligarchial form of government, a government of the many by the few. We should represent ourselves.

Do not be afraid to vote for Socialism, whoever you are, or whatever your former party affiliation, unless you are afraid of having your own way, and realizing your own ideals of government.

If you believe in a government of the people, by the people and for the people, vote for Socialism until your vote means something to you. Socialism will make you free to express yourself, politically, economically and socially.

Pray tell me what other party offers to loose the bonds and make you a free citizen—free to work, free from paying toll to the coffers of capitalism, free to express your honest convictions without jeopardising your income, with a free ballot of real power in your hand?

True it is that some factions of both the old parties in some states have recently made concessions (forced upon them by Socialism) to the extent of adopting the initiative, the referendum and the recall. But do not be deceived thereby, you have the Socialist party to thank for getting even that bone for you, and it is only a dry, bare bone in the hands of either of the old parties. It will still be for the interests of the party bosses to see that the will of the people gives way to the will of the privileged interests, whose henchmen they are under the present competitive industrial system.

Mammon will still be king, and not only the politicians, but you and I, will still feel the impress of his iron heel while we compete with our brothers for a living, and pay toll to rich corporations in the shape of profits from our toil.

The trusts have seen th wisdom of abolishing competition in their line of business. They have proven that corporations must combine in order to control the supply of any product.

The next natural step is that the corporation of humanity should control all production, eliminating all competition, graft and political chicanery, which is now necessarily incident to making a competent living.

When we have established the main features of our dwelling—political freedom and industrial freedom—it will then be worth while to decide upon the details best fitted to serve our further needs.

To hesitate to board the Socialist craft for any such squeamish reasons as not being able to accept all its ideals reminds me of two men I heard about: They were standing on the bank of a river watching their homes being consumed by fire on the opposite shore. A boat was waiting to convey them across, but they refused to go aboard until they should agree as to which method was best to follow in putting out the fire—one argued for chemicals, while the other stoutly adhered to water. And their homes were destroyed.

How foolish! The first important thing was to get to the spot where they could do something.

Just so, we must get to the point where the people's voice can count, and where they can give direct battle to oppression and injustice.

Do you want to help right the wrongs of the world? The Socialist ballot will give you this power.

Winter or summer, rain or shine, there are hundreds of thousands of men traveling the railroads, afoot, out of money, hungry and weak; on every railroad section are piles of old ties thrown down in heaps; it would be just as easy for the section men to stack them in the form of a house; it would take no more time than the other way, and they would look good to the unemployed; it would not "bust the union," nor reduce the amount of humanity necessary for a new theology.

You may not lose your job, but some of your kinfolks may get romantic.—Christian Socialist.

How much longer will you vote for and uphold the system that keeps you down and out?

TO THE AMERICAN LORDS.

You can not expect to make hungry beings happy by clothing their wasted physical forms with broadcloth. Neither is it possible to hide shacks and tenements behind tall buildings and lofty church steeples, and expect the victims of these cesspools of civic indifference to become inspired when church bells chime forth the national anthem, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee, Sweet Land of Liberty."

Listen! You may use perfume and disinfectants with good effect today; but what about tomorrow?

You cannot erect an architectural barrier that will prevent diseased centers contaminating the whole community, and yet from these sources expect to recruit an army that will act as a barrier against the invasion of a foreign foe. Did you ever hear of unsanitary military barracks? Then why unsanitary homes? Democracy starts in the home, and disease is born, in the majority of cases, in the cradle. No; we must not expect to rase a race of Spartans in slums and tenements.

"Be practical and not sentimental," cries the representatives of "Have" to representatives of "Have Not." We landlords pay the taxes, therefore we demand more time to consider these things. When a property owner rents his property, he rents it for profit and not for public convenience. Rent is figured thus:

1 .....Taxes
2 .....Repairs
3 .....Idle Periods
4 .....Agent's Fees

Total ..... Rent

The landlord who believes that property is of more value than life is a menace to civilization...If it is lawful to use the "law of eminent domain" to further civilized efforts, why is it not also legal to interpret its meanings against obstructions of civilized progress?.

The confiscation of property may sound harsh to the "House of Have," but answer the question that rises above the clink of your golden dollars: "Who is going to compensate society for the human life confiscated in the filthy slums of 'Have Not'?"

We Socialists are against the profit system. Homes are necessary to give people shelter. Then let the nation own the homes, when shacks and slums will pass to oblivion. This is an age of pure food laws. With Socialism will come social purity in all things. Speed the day with votes for Socialism.

JIM HENDERSON.

The News says: "An additional stenographer was necessitated in the mayor's office Monday by the work resulting from the mayor's canvass and the determination to prepare literature of the Marshall campaign. Who is to pay the new clerk could not be learned."

Mayor Marshall is very busy also telling the people how strongly he favors municipal ownership of public utilities. In the meantime, so it is stated, his personal henchmen are arranging plans to "trade off" the rest of the Republican ticket to secure votes for the ambitious George. The people of Columbus may be fooled sometimes, but the unfilled promises of the present mayor are too much for even a patient people.

Secretary of the Interior Ballinger has resigned from President Taft's cabinet, and his successor has been named in the person of Walter L. Fisher, of Chicago. The national administration has thus cast its Jonah overboard in order to quiet the storm. The act is a relief, no doubt, but it is tough an the whale. Ballinger was "whitewashed" by the congressional probers, as was to be expected, but all the lime in the world could not hide the black record of the Alaskan land deals. Of course, Ballinger's retirement will not lighten the burdens of labor. It is only an incident in the disgraceful history of a decaying system.

It is stated that Magruder, the foul-mouthed local attorney, whose specialty is bearing false witness against Socialists, is now engaged in gathering material for a history of the Democratic party. That organization is really only a matter of history, but its obituary should be written by a worthier hand than Magruder's. If his Jefferson Club speech on "Socialism" showed mything, it was that he probably couldn't tell the truth even about the Democratic party.

STARVATION WAGES.

The Real Betrayer of Working Girls. By Gordon Nye.

Some years ago Lee Meriwether was a special agent of the United States Department of Labor. He made diligent investigation into the conditions of the working classes, both in Europe and in the United States.

From his book, called "The Tramp at Home," we quote (page 18):

"Mollie Smith went and told our boss she could not live on her wages, she was all the time hungry, and in winter all the time cold.

"'You are a pretty girl; why don't you get a young gentleman friend to help you?'

"That made Mollie mad. She flew up and talked back, and got turned off. It was the dead of winter. She took sick, because she had no fire, and—well, I don't know just how it happened, all I know is most every night they say you can see Mollie on the Bowery; she never comes nigh us any more."

Mr. Meriwether made systematic investigation in several of the big cities and came to the conclusion that a large percentage of the fallen women were formerly shopgirls who had tried to live on their pitiful wages and couldn't.

Mr. Meriwether's lady assistant was sent by him to make experiments in person with employes. At some places the manager bluntly said, "You are not good looking enough," and at other places, where a special sale made the need of new hands necessary, she reports she was offered $3 per week.

She remonstrated, "But I can not live on $3—my carfare will be 60 cents; I live four miles from the shop."

"The manager answered, "We can't help that. You must get a friend to help you!"

There you have it! In plain, brutal words. In the words of the capitalistic profit grinding system! "We can't help it; if you can exist on our wages, barter your virtue for bread."

In order that some large department store may amass a fortune for its owner, girls are paid $3 per week. When the girl complains she can not live on that sum, she is told with a frankness that might shock the devil in hell—"Get a gentleman friend!"

All of our large cities are filled with human driftwood, beaten to pieces in just this manner. Most of these human wrecks, at some time or other made an honest effort to make a living. Long hours, starvation wages, a spell of sickness—and then the "easiest way."

Such is the story of nine-tenths of all the thousands of unfortunate women who float with the human tide in every large city. At some time previous girls were hustled out of their homes at daybreak to hasten to their work in the mill at the spinning-wheels, in the box factory, or in a department store. Their young bodies were worn out by a ceaseless grind for a scant livelihood.

In the recent garment strike, one of the sweatshop girls was interviewed. She said: "Yes, conditions are awful. We work ten to twelve hours every day. We ride on cars a long distance, we are forced to get up before daylight, and get very tired—sometimes sick. I get $4 a week—it costs me 60 cents carfare. My father and mother work all day. I have two little sisters and a baby brother, and we live in two rooms."

This working girl states the case for herself and her class. Her body is being stunted and her mind dimmed. She does not live, she barely exists. This girl and thousands like her are the victims of economic conditions. They are as helpless as the dove before the hawk, and are pushed forward into the hands of the cadet by conditions they could not control. STARVATION WAGES leads them through the valley of poverty into the hands of the man "higher up." The fact that thousands of working-class girls are sacrificed in this manner is enough to make every thinking man mad clean down to his shoe tops.

We ask those who stand outside the party this question: Is human flesh not of more value than dollars, hearts and minds of more value than property?

We of the working class are organized politically, we will take possession of the law-making functions of the government, then we will take over collectively, systematically, by legal and orderly process, the means of production and distribution, and will create and distribute in bountiful abundance, for the use of all, the material comforts of life.

Socialists believe that the universe is well planned. That the power which inheres and pervades all things—call it evolution, or name it god, maked for righteousness. We believe that the evils which afflict humanity are incidents in the progress of the race, and will be remedied by the growing intelligence of [redacted].

Greed and ignorance are the causes of poverty. Capitalism forces upon the majority a hideous system which demands the lives of men and the virtue of women for the means to live. The campaign of education now carried on by the Socialist party, combined with the growing intelligence and altruism of man, will remove these evils and they will make the earth a happy home for the human family.

OUR BOOSTERS.

John App, of Rhyolite, Nev., sends for The Socialist.

Comrade Oscar Purcell, of London, sends in two subs for The Socialist, and promises more.

Comrade I. N. Matheny, secretary of Local Sugar Grove, sends in another new subscriber. Sugar Grove is alive, and Matheny is one of the livest of the bunch.

Comrade C. S. Crawford, of Prescott street, has the honor of being the first to renew his subscription. When The Socialist was started he subscribed for three months. This week he came in and planked down a dollar for another year.

THE STRICKLANDS.

At Board of Trade Auditorium, Tuesday Evening, March 14.

The speakers for the fifth number of the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course will be Frederick Strickland and his wife, May Strickland. They will tell about the Socialist party, why it is organized, how it is organized, and why it is organized the way it is. They will also tell what the party hopes to accomplish and how it expects to attain its ends, and finally they will present what the Socialist party does in the places where it is already in power.

THE SOCIALIST PARTY.

By Frederick Guy Strickland.

Frederick Guy Strickland was pastor of the People's Christian Church, in Chicago, for a number of years, but like many another minister he left his pulpit in order to devote his time and talents to the establishment of economic justice.

Eugene V. Debs has this to say in regard to him: "Frederick Strickland is one of the strong men in the Socialist movement.

"As a speaker he stands among the most able and eloquent on the American platform.

"Mr. Strickland is a young man, imbued with the spirit of the movement, and one of its most earnest, enthusiastic and effective exponents."

WOMAN AND SOCIALISM.

May Strickland is a graduate of the Muncie College of Dramatic Art. Scores of organizations recommend her as a reader of unusual ability, and in this Lyceum Course she will be at her best.

Don't forget the Label Show.

The ballots for the election of seven members of the Woman's National Committee have been sent out from the national headquarters. There are nineteen candidates, all well known comrades, and two of whom are kindly remembered by Columbus' Socialists. We refer to Mrs. May M. Strickland, now of Indiana, and Mrs. Ella Reeve Bloor, of Connecticut. The Socialist party has developed some noble women, whose work is hastening the dawn of industrial freedom.

All dates for the lectures of Comrade Fred G. Strickland, under the auspices of The Socialist, will be assigned as soon after March 14 as possible. All acceptances should reach this office by that time.

One of the last acts of Senator Dick, who has for so long misrepresented Ohio at Washington, was to ask the War Department to send the federal troops stationed at Detroit to Columbus during the centennial celebration, next year, and to hold a military tournament. Won't that be nice? It may be, but no show that the War Department could put on would equal the spectacle which Dick presented when, in the gaudy uniform of a major general, he strutted about the State House yard last summer during the presence of the "tin soldiers" here.

Comrade Seaman, one of the hustlers of the Fourth Ward, was agreeably surprised on his birthday by a group of friends and comrades visiting him, last Monday evening.

The City Central Committee, Wednesday night, granted a charter to the newly organized Seventh Ward. Applications were received from twenty new members.

WOMAN'S MEETING.

Comrade Ella Reeve Bloor, national organizer of the Socialist party, will speak at City Headquarters, at 7:30 Saturday evening, March 18. The object of the meeting is to organize a Woman's Auxiliary. Every woman interested in Sopialism is invited to be present.

There is abundant proof that a large part of the world today is not decently housed, fed or clothed. But this is not the worst. Poverty, prostitution, divorce and discontent are increasing. Do you doubt the facts? Then investigate.

SLAYTON'S LECTURE.

John W. Slayton, of Pennsylvania, gave the fourth lecture of the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course at the Board of Trade, last Tuesday evening. It was a clear and pointed discussion of the necessity of the workers organizing on the political field as well as the industrial. The address was roundly applauded.

SOME DEFINITIONS.

A legislator is the only man who can tell whether or not a law ought to be [redacted].

An executive is the only man who can tell whether or not it ought to be enforced.

A judge is the only man who can tell whether or not it has been violated.

A lawyer is the only man who can tell how it may be violated with impunity.

A laymen is one who cannot possible know anything about a law without seeing a lawyer.—Life.

TRADES UNIONS.

All wage workers should be union men. Their progress is limited only by those who hold aloof. Get together.

AGITATE, EDUCATE, ORGANIZE!

Don't wait until tomorrow. Tomorrow never comes.

Don't wait for someone to start. Begin yourself.

Don't harken to the indifferent. Wake them up.

Don't think it impossible. Three million organized workers in the Amerian Federation of Labor prove different.

Don't Weaken. Persistence wins results.

Socialism stands for a purely democratic government. One in which the people rule. A government in which all officers are elected by the people and are subject to recall at any time if they disregard the interests of the people. A government in which all the laws are subject to ratifications or rejection by the people and when so ratified cannot be set aside by a judge of any court.

WAR AND WISDOM.

The Ohio Legislature can afford to appropriate money for education. But the people are against any of their money being wasted in building armories or purchasing guns.

SENATOR TODD, OF FRANKLIN COUNTY, VOTES AGAINST WOMAN'S EIGHT HOUR BILL.

The Ohio Senate embalmed the Woman's Eight Hour Bill. Senator Todd poured vitrol on the carcas, and the legislative stench has been increased by one hour. The bill now reads Woman's Nine Hour Measure. It passes on to the lower house as such and we hope from there to the lower regions. The upper house, by their atrocious acts, have literally wiped their feet on the hair of women workers. Please allow the corpse to pass into oblivion, for fear the representatives of the Master Class will undertake to desecrate the whole feminine being. Send a vote of condolence to your very sick capitalistic brother, President Diaz of Mexico, and then adjourn in ignominy, Messrs. Legislators.

"FATE OR CHANCE."

Under the title of "Fate or Chance," in the "Observation" column of the Dispatch of last Saturday there is told what calamities have befallen the policemen who refused to ride the street cars of the Rail-Light last summer:

How a cruel traction engine burned a hole in the roof of Jack Wegman's house because he did not ride the streetcars. Thieves tried to break into P. A. Altman's chicken coop—not to steal chickens—but because he did not ride the street cars. (No chickens taken.) Residence of Ben Boyer burglarized, because he did not ride th cars. William Patterson died suddenly, because he did not ride the cars, offending the great and powerful E. K. These are the disasters that happened in the lives of 33 so-called mutineers.

Here are some of the disasters that happened to a few of those that did ride the cars—165 men—in seven months:

Thomas Guthrie, secretary to the chief of police, who made out the detail of police to ride the cars under the order of Mayor Marshall, was struck by a streetcar in his automobile with Officer Harry Nichols, who had no compunctions about riding the cars. Guthrie will be a cripple for life, and Nichols was badly injured.

Officer Schooler rode the cars; he was afterward suspended for 90 days for neglect of duty.

Officer Merrick rode the cars; since dismissed for drunkenness.

Officer Speakman rode the cars; since dismissed for drinking on duty.

Officer Pleukharp rode the cars, and has since suffered a stroke of paralysis for life. Strange, isn't it, that this should happen to any one not a mutineer!

Officer Brownlee rode the cars, and has since been suspended by the chief of police and ordered dismissed by the director of public safety, for conduct unbecoming an officer.

Officer Gabriel rode on the cars; since dismissed on charges not fit for publication.

Officer Mack Murray suspended for 90 days for absenting himself without leave the first night the police were put on the cars. Mack did not have enough nerve to ride then, hence the suspension.

This article is written by one who believes in a square deal to all—NOT excepting those 33 men whose only hope is that some day the public will know the truth, and to the author of "Fate or Chance" that he or she will use the talents bestowed by the Maker of us all in a course more useful to humanity.

ONE OF THE "33."

NEWS ITEM.

Cleveland Leader, March 2, 1911: Cleveland manufacturers determined last night to go to Columbus in a body to urge the passage of the workman's compensation bill, now in the legislature. The determination came at the annual meeting and banquet of the Cleveland branch of the National Metal Trades Association, held in the Hollenden, after various speakers had upbraided them for apathy in the fight.

It was Smith of Marion, the assemblyman, and Smith the commissioner, who set the manufacturers to thinking hardest about taking a train for Columbus. They showed how the labor agitators maintained lobbies in fight against the bill, and how the manufacturers were not as actively represented. At the conclusion of the speeches a resolution was unanimously adopted in favor of attending the committee meetings.

NOTE.—This shows you what the manufacturers are doing to force their Bill 282 through.

So get busy at once sending your letters to representatives and senators; also appoint committees to see them when they come home Saturday or Sunday.

OHIO STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—"The great gates of the Panama Canal—costing five millions of dollars—will be constructed and put in place by McClintic & Marshall, of Pittsburg, a firm notoriously unfair to organized labor. Non-union structural iron-workers are now at work on the job, and last week another foreman met his death, due, without question, to the incompetency of the men under him."

This statement, made by the newly elected representative from the Seventh Illinois district, Frank Buchanan, who has just returned from the Isthmus, carries the weight of expert testimony, for Buchanan is a past president of the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers' International Association.

The canal gates are to be the last touch upon the greatest constructive piece of work ever engaged in by the American people, and yet this crowning effort has been given over to workmen so incompetent as to be without organization, all because of the plainly expressed policy of the Taft administration to fight the growth of the American labor movement.

The Jewish Bankers in New York tried to break the Bank Clerks' strike by telling the strikers that they were not common workingmen, because they had the chance to some day be president of the bank. It did not work.

One of the most gigantic strikes in the world's history will take place soon, unless the shipping agents treat their seamen more humane. The sailor on the high seas is the victim of his master's brutal instincts.

The Free Press sedition case has been reopened in Newcastle, Pa. The trade unionist will have to enter the fight, for a conviction would mean the suppression of all labor papers.

Newsboys in Rochester, N. Y., are boycotting Hearst's Journal. The dispute is over the exchange of unsold papers.

Two injunctions were hurled at Boston labor unions. The photo-engravers also drew a fine of $500. The old gag "about conspiracy" came up again.

Many of the Harriman system of railroads are preparing to reduce the wages of their employes, in accordance with threats made before the rate decision.

At Pottsville, Pa., the iron and coal police beat one of the strikers to death and wounded many others who were on picket duty.

THE RED INK BRIGADE.

There is bound to be a weeping and wailing and gnashing of gums down at the Parkview Military Sanatorium. Congress adjourned without appropriating an extra two million dollars for these tinselled grasshoppers to expend in gold braid and looking glasses.

The general public never had a chance to see behind the scenes during the Columbus streetcar strike. The day the union held the big protest meeting at the State House the Ancient Order of Worm Destroyers placed a machine gun facing the west side of the State House. They also placed sentries over the doors and reinforced them with huge timbers—for fear of the mob (?). Oh, dear, no! For fear the state might find out the unnecessary expense of their keep. The difference between capitalism and Socialism — capitalism owes its existence to the fear of bullets and its downfall to the Socialistic ballots, and there is quite a few of these weapons among the real soldiers—the men in the ranks.

OLD AGE PENSIONS, WHY NOT?

(Ella Jane Purcell.)

The Socialist party advocates an arrangement of society which will make private charity unnecessary, but which will make the protection of the old, crippled and helpless a matter of state. Under Socialism there would be comparatively few who would need gratuitous assistance; those who did would receive it in the form of public pensions.

Our present system of government guards the interests of the strong and vigorous but crushes all chance for the weak and destitute. Under modern conditions a child born of poor and illiterate parents has small chance to overcome the obstacles of his environment. The big chances are that by the time he becomes a parent himself his condition will be worse than that of his parents before him. Of course, you promptly think of this or that wealthy man who has risen from the slums. Those who have done so are the rare exceptions, and invariably have had some circumstance or heritage in their favor. The mass of the children who are born in the dollar-a-day homes—homes without education, ideals or culture—are cursed by being born, and doomed to lives of suffering, unhappiness and defeat.

A home where the struggle for a bare and meager existence is the absorbing and controlling element can not foster refinement or progress. A home where sickness and disease are constantly present can not awaken healthy and vigorous ambitions. It is vain to look for high ideals and noble impulses in the offspring of a home where hope is dead and energy exhausted. When we live under a government which produces men who are unable to save enough during their prime to live comfortably in old age, is it not our imperative duty to have old age pensions?

Are not the chances of the children who are shielded and sheltered from the sins and crimes of the world, who are surrounded with the beautiful things of life, who have books and teachers, music and art, a thousand times better than those of the slum children who know only evil and hunger, rags and filth? When we live under a government which makes the conditions of life unequal, how can we refuse old age pensions to those who are unavoidably destitute in old age on account of those conditions?

Is it necessary that the runners in life's race be so unequally matched? God forbid! The workers of the world using the world's natural wealth and its machinery, can produce sufficient for the sustenance and comfort of every one. Socialism would make all people work for what they received, and all would receive exactly what they produced. At present a laborer receives only about one-fifth of what he actually produces; the rest goes to those who do not produce, the parasites—the capitalists.

Under the present organization of society, therefore, there are thousands and thousands of people who eventually become entirely dependent on charity for their existence. Many are dependent because of some physical defect or deformity, such as blindness or loss of limbs. These should be the wards of the government, not the neglected recipients of uncertain charity. The largest number become dependent on account of old age, the latter frequently accompanied by physical defects. When economic conditions are so unreasonable and unfair that men, working and producing as hard and continuously as possible all through life, reach old age, poor and helpless, the state should pension them.

The government should be organized in such a way that the workers would receive the full value of their toil. An honest workman should reach the non-producing age with a comfortable competence to his credit. Today this is impossible. The average annual wage of the American workman is about $437. How much of that can he save for old age? Why should it even be considered commendable for him to save part of that $437 per year? It should most certainly be used for the physical and mental development of the worker. The world's work must be well done; those who do the work should be strong and vigorous. They should not have constantly before them the spectre of old age, alone, starving and neglected. The workers should be permitted to use their incomes for their pleasure and advancement, without worry for the days of the future. Their present value would be vastly increased. In consideration of the work done in their prime, the state should grant workmen pensions in old age.

Germany, England and other nations have seen the logic and fitness of old age pensions. The United States is spending millions annually for pensions arising through wars. It is a shame and a disgrace that those who have given their lives and energies in valuable industry in time of peace should be utterly disregarded.

A WORD TO WORKING WOMEN.

You work hard.
You work long hours.
You do the best you can.

You do not get the comforts of life in return for your work; you scarcely get the necessities. You have no home life. If you have a home you are away from it so much that it is a place of confusion. You can not preserve it in order as you would like to have it.

If you must board you cannot afford to pay a good price, so you can not get a good place. You must be content with a shabby, ill-furnished room and poorly prepared meals.

If you have children you cannot do much for them. You can have small hope that they will fare better in the world than you are faring. Should sickness or accident overtake you they may fare worse.

As you think about this you look about you in the busy city, and everything is astir. Inside the factory, shop or store, wheels whirr, wires tremble, lights gleam. It is a world of wonders.

What does all this mean?

The flying shuttle, the buzzing belt, the whirring wheels, the gleaming light have all come to help mankind.

They have come to make it easier for people to get the comfort of life.

They came from the brain of men and women who work. They were discovered, most of those things were, by workers as they worked.

Yet, so far, the workers are not relieved by them. The lot of many workers in this country today, especially women workers, is harder than it was a hundred and fifty years ago when we had no help from steam or electricity and when we had fewer inventions.

Why is this?

It is not because the workers do not produce enough, for with the aid of these helps they make many times more than was formerly made. It is because the workers do not get the results of their own labor. It is because the corporation that owns the place where you work gives you barely enough for a poor, cheap living, and keeps the rest as profits for the stockholders. The profits build up the billionaire fortunes. Capitalist employers, as individuals, are not to blame for this. Many of them would be glad if it were otherwise—if every one had enough. But the present system of private ownership forces each one to do his best, rather his worst, for profits, and the result is that those who do the work get the least.

The only way to stop this great injustice is for the workers to unite together and own their own machinery and keep the results of their own labor for themselves and their children. This would be no inconvenience to any one except to those who want to live without working. The hours of work would be shortened, compared with what they are now, or were in a tool-using age, in exact proportion to the degree of help that there is in modern machinery and modern organization.

It would mean rest and dignity and a higher life for all who work. There is a political party organized to help do this very thing. It has been organized by the workers themselves; it is to be found in all the countries of the world, and it is called THE SOCIALIST PARTY.

The vote of this party is steadily increasing. It is bound to win, for it stands for progress in all that we have that is good for humanity. It stands for the rights of the workers of the world as against profits for the owners of the world.

The Socialist party always gives to women the same rights and privileges that it gives to a man. Women vote on party matters, work on committees, speak on its platforms, hustle for its success. It is composed of working men and women, united in a comradeship to better the world by making conditions better. They urge you to join them.

AGNES HAPLIN DOWNING.

FRANCES A. KELLOR, PROTECTOR OF IMMIGRANTS.

Last year an army of more than one million immigrants invaded the United States. In this army the largest brigade was of Italians, the second largest was of Poles. Following these were Jews of different nationalities, English, Scotch, Germans and Irish. Naturally a large proportion of these peaceful invaders enter by way of New York, and in that city, therefore, it is necessary for the authorities to be especially active in assisting the new-comers in finding their future homes in various parts of the Union and in guarding them against the many sharps who are eager to take advantage of their ignorance and inexperience. One of the most zealous protectors of the newly arrived immigrant is Miss Frances A. Kellor, chief investigator of the New York State Labor Department, head of the new Bureau of Industries and Immigration, and founder of the North American Civic League for Immigrants. While taking a post-graduate course at the University of Chicago—she is a graduate of Cornell—Miss Kellor devoted much time to investigating employment agencies, the safeguarding of immigrant women, and the protection of immigrant laborers against bogus contracts.

Justice Hughes, then Governor of New York, appointed her a member of the special commission on immigration. There is plenty of work for her to do. On landing, the immigrant is robbed by porters, who overcharge him and hand him short change or counterfeit money. Bogus "philanthropic" societies victimize him. Fraudulent land companies stand ready to sell him worthless or non-existent land. Alleged employment agencies seek to prey upon girls seeking positions. But, besides looking out for the immediate safety of new arrivals, Miss Kellor is active in devising means for the proper distribution, assimilation and education of immigrants, and the much-needed regulation of labor conditions.—Exchange.

TOO QUICK TO JUDGE PEOPLE BY THEIR DRESS.

Are we not just a trifle too quick to judge people by their dress? Our women surpass the rest of the world, not excepting Paris, in the perfection of their toilets. When, therefore, a gentlewoman happens to care little about her costume, provided she is comfortable, her eccentricity is supposed to be a mild form of lunacy.

"Who was your friend?" said a man, peeringly, to a fellow-passenger on the train one day. The second man, before stepping on board, had taken an affectionate leave of a lady on the wayside platform. She was inhabited in a short stuff frock of nondescript color; her coat was much the worse for wear, and an untrimmed sailor hat was tied under her chin by a faded green veil. The reply to the injury was abruptly curt, and the questioner, covered with confusion, stammered, "I beg your pardon." The answer had been in two words, "My mother," and had her name been mentioned it would have been that of a woman distinguished for genius and highly honored on two continents.—Exchange.

AGITATION AMONG WOMEN SOCIALISTS.

The agitation among women Socialists, which has been exceptionally noticeable in the past three years, is due to the fact that the few women drawn to Socialism see that the masses of women must be appealed to directly and specifically. The average woman is difficult to reach, because her mind is taken up with home, family, children, dress and society. She does not care for politics, industry or education. If making her own living, she thinks it only temporary, and is always on the watch for her "ideal beau," who will carry her off to a princely palace. But Socialist women are beginning to realize that their sex may become a force in the Socialist movement that will aid workingmen to conquer the powers of government more peacefully and quickly than otherwise. Therefore, women are agitating to the end that every Socialist local have a woman's committee, whose duty it will be to bring women into the local, organize them and educate them so that they can work with the men.

THE OLD-FASHIONED WOMAN.

I once knew a man who never tired of singing the praises of "the old-fashioned woman," the dear, unsophisticated little thing, who was not "spoiled by cleverness," who took man and herself seriously, who had never heard of Bernard Shaw, who thought Maeterlinck was a new brand of sausage, and fancied that Schopenhauer was an etude or a waltz movement. He met and married one of these adorable women, thereby displaying more consistency than the average man. For the average man usually admires one kind of woman and marries the other kind. Yet never have I seen a more pathetic object than this man, when, after he had just tossed off some neat and flashing epigram, or finished repeating some especially brilliant bit of repartee, his little wife glanced up from her sewing, with a perfectly blank face, to inquire: "Well, is that all?"—Ladies' Home Journal.

A QUESTION FOR WOMEN ABOUT HOME.

When a woman stands on her feet for nine hours a day she injures her health. Nobody knows this better than a woman. No woman needs the assertion of medical authority to tell her that it is an indisputable physiological fact that when a young woman in particular is compelled to stand for long hours she is exposed to a distinct and almost a sure physical injury and later suffering. Nor is this injury confined to the young woman. When such a girl marries, and bears children, the children are enfeebled; the continuous standing of the mother, before she became a mother, robs the children of half their chance to grow up into sound men and women. Now the reformers who have had most to do with inducing merchants to allow their salesgirls to sit behind the counters are united in one opinion: that the proprietors of the stores are perfectly willing that the girls shall sit while waiting upon customers, but that the women before the counter prefer that the women behind the counter shall wait upon them standing. The proprietors of these stores say, naturally, that the wish of the customer becomes the rule of the store. They say that the standing of the salesgirl is not for efficiency, nor by necessity, but purely by custom. Is this true? We hear a good deal about woman's disregard for her sex. But are we to believe that this curious disregard is carried to this fatal extreme? Here is a question, and an ugly one, for women about women.—Ladies' Home Journal.

WOMAN'S WHIRLWIND CAMPAIGN.

In April and October the city of Atlanta, Ga., celebrates "cleaning-up day," an institution for which a clever and charming woman is responsible. Atlanta was dirty. Atlanta was sick and crowded, and the mayor wanted a lot of money to make it clean, sanitary and comfortable.

The outlay was opposed by politicians as "extravagant," and the mayor, finding himself helpless, with a keen insight, appealed to a woman, Mrs. W. Woods White, the president of the City Federation of Woman's Clubs. Atlanta women had been notably indifferent to politics, but in a question involving the health of the children their indifference fell away and the "women's whirlwind campaign" was soon in full swing.

The extraordinary methods of Mrs. White and her workers were accomplished in this way. A coupon appeared in the newspapers signifying a promise on the part of the signer to have his own premises clean on October 26; these coupons were to be sent to the committee, and the ward having the greatest number of responses was to win a prize of $25. It worked. All classes responded to the call with splendid enthusiasm. "Cleaning-up Day" became an institution, and the improvement in sanitary conditions was instantaneous.

There's a place for "Cleaning-up Day" in every city, town and village in the land, and there's no time like the present.—Woman's Home Companion.

SHE WHO IS TO COME.

A woman—in so far as she beholdeth
Her one Beloved's face;
A mother—with a great heart that enfoldeth
The children of the race;
A body, free and strong, with that mighty beauty
That comes of perfect use, is built thereof;
A mind where Reason ruleth over Duty,
And Justice reigns with Love;
A self-poised, royal soul, brave, wise and tender,
No longer blind and dumb;
A Human Being of as unknown splendor,
Is she who is to come!

—Charlotte Perkins Gilman.

A Scotch farmer once took his wife to see the wonders of the microscope. The animalculae in a drop of water seemed to poor Janet alarming rather than amusing. She sat patiently, however, till the water tigers, magnified to the size of twelve feet, appeared on the sheet, fighting with their usual ferocity. Janet now rose in great trepidation, and cried, "Come awa, John." "Sit still, woman, and see the show," said John. "See the show, man. What wud come o' us if they awful like things should brak out o' the water?"—Exchange.

THE MUD-PIE HABIT.

It never does any good to expostulate with Harold and Janet. Being the youngest of the family, Harold ought not to complain at having to get up at 5 o'clock and go with Harriet, who is 13, over to the pasture, across the creek, to get a certain kind of dew to make the freckles come off her face. She is the oldest of us, and she knows poison ivy when she sees it, so there is really no danger. Anyway, when mother mentioned it to father last evening, he said: "Oh, well, they didn't see any snakes, did they?" Father knew very well that if he could make Harriet believe there were snakes in that pasture she'd never go near there again, because she's afraid of snakes, and I can't educate her out of it.

However, as I remarked before, Harold and Janet are very set in their ways for ones so young, Harold being merely 4 and Janet 7. Although I am only 10, which is not very far along when you consider Methuselah, I'm sure that I am very much older than Janet. But then she's a girl, and Harold really is young, so it is not any great wonder that they will insist upon making mud-pies in the middle of the road, letting all the carriages and wagons turn out. Harriet always tells mother, after warning them that she's going to, because she plays square and won't tell on any one unless he knows it. Then mother always makes them come in and be cleaned up, which is the best thing she could do, for they detest being cleaned up more than I do, and that's putting it strong. There's really no use in our hating it the way we do; it has to be gone through so often that we might as well get used to it.

Father says Harold and Janet will be captains of industry some day, whatever that means, because they make common people give them the middle of the road. So you see it doesn't matter so much, after all, if we are to have captains and things in the family, though I prefer railroad presidents myself, if you can't have bakers or express drivers.

This bad habit of Harold and Janet's helped me out the other day, so I have resolved to uphold them forever and ever after this. Harriet and I were going to play basket-ball in the barn loft that afternoon and any one who wanted to see the game had to pay one cent, because we needed the money. Harriet's team isn't very strong, so I was going to let Janet play guard on mine to even things up. But she and Harold had a dispute over some apples the night before, and to settle it I had to take the apples away. Janet said, "Ha, villain, you shall rue this day!" And I almost did. She took our basket-ball when she had me off my guard by giving up her piece of pie, and carried it way across town to Jimmy Phelan's house. Jimmy is a good friend of mine, so he sent it back in a wagon that belongs to their farm, and of course the driver forgot. Grown folks never do seem to realize the importance of some things.

It was time for the game to begin; the girls and boys were all there, but Harriet and I couldn't find the ball. We were going to lose a lot of money if the game didn't start soon. Both teams were hunting like mad for that ball, but it was nowhere to be found. Just then we discovered Harold and Janet, seated calmly in the middle of the road, making mud-pies! I don't wonder that mother sometimes finds that pair exasperating.

Well, along came this wagon, and had to turn out, as usual. It jolted into the ditch and out came our basket-ball, tumbling. The driver didn't pay any attention to us or the ball, but just started to swear at Harold and Janet, till he saw mother coming. Then he stopped. I don't see why, because mother says we don't need to say wicked things just because other people do, and that driver didn't need to think that he could teach my mother to swear. Anyway, Harold and Janet are not allowed to play outside of the fence any more, which is just as well, though I don't see why father should have said that dust-baths were created expressly for birds and that what we children needed was a bit of the old hickory.

SOME MISFITS.

Cork legs are not made of cork, and they didn't come from Cork. The willow tree usually furnishes material for them. Cleopatra's Needle, that wonderful obelisk of Egypt, was made 1000 years before Cleopatra was born, and really has nothing to do with her. Irish stew an English dish, and turtle soup seldom has any real turtle in it. Prussian blue, the beautiful color, is not a special product of Prussia, but of England. And so you see we frequently find that our language has names for things that are "misfits."

A PACKET OF LETTERS.

(By Oliver Herford.)

I.

From Mr. Rufus Fox to Miss Blanche [illegible].

The Fernweods, Friday.

Dear Miss Goose!
Accept apologies profuse
For the abrupt and hasty way
In which I left you yesterday.
I quite forgot myself, it's true,
And Mrs. Fox's message, too.
She said, "Be sure, if you should see
Miss Goose, to bring her home to tea;"
And when I came home, minus you,
She made a terrible to-do!
I don't know how I came to be
So very rude, but then, you see,
I was just offering my arm
When striped Rover, from the farm,
Appeared so suddenly, and so—
Well, two is company, you know,
While three—! Besides, 'twas getting late,
So I decided not to wait.
Yet, after all, another day
Will do as well. What do you say?
Can you, tomorrow—say, at three—
Dine with dear Mrs. Fox and me?
Pray do, said by the hollyhocks
Meet yours, sincerely,
Rufus Fox.

II.

From Miss Blanche Goose to Mr. Fox.
The Farmyard, Friday Afternoon.

Dear Mr. Fox, it seems so soon,
You almost take my breath away!
Tomorrow? Three—? What shall I say?
Nothing could charm me more—but, no—
Alas! I fear I can not go.
Don't think that I resent, I pray,
Your hastiness of yesterday.
It is not that. But, if I went,
Without my dear mamma's consent,
And she should somehow chance to hear,
She would be dreadfully severe;
And so, oh, dear! It is no use!
Believe me,
Sadly yours, Blanche Goose.
P. S.—On second thoughts, dear Fox,
I'll meet you by the hollyhocks,
For if mamma but knew how kind
You are, I'm sure she would not mind.
Tomorrow, then—we'll meet at three;
Don't fail to be there. Yours, B. G.

III.

From Mr. Rufus Fox to His Cousin Reynard.

Friday.

Dear Cousin: Just a line
To ask if you will come to dine
(Informally, you know) with me
Tomorrow afternoon at three?
Now don't refuse, whate'er you do,
I have a treat in store for you:
A charming goose (and geese, you know,
Do not on all the bushes grow!)
A dream of tenderness in white,
A case of "hunger at first sight."
I know, old boy, you'll not be deaf
To this inducement.
Yours, R. F.
P. S.—Miss Goose agrees to be
Beside the hollyhocks at three!

IV.

(Extract from the Diary of Rover, the Dog.)

Saturday Night.

Well, I must say, I quite renewed my youth today!
How lucky that I chanced to go,
Just when I did, beside that row
Of hollyhocks beyond the gate!
Lucky for her, at any rate;
For suddenly I heard Miss Goose
Struggling and crying, "Let me loose!"
And, from behind the hollyhocks,
Who should jump out but Mr. Fox!
(The very same one, by the way,
I almost caught the other day.)
Soon as I nabbed him, in his fright,
He dropped Miss Goose and took to flight.
Then after him like mad I flew,
But—what could poor old Rover do?
I am not what I used to be,
So I let go, and ran to see
At once how poor Miss Goose had fared,
And found her much less hurt than [illegible]
From having come so near the [illegible]—
A sadder and a wiser goose.

V.

(Note from Mr. Rufus Fox to His Cousin Reynard.)

Dear Cousin: This is just to say
Why dinner was postponed today—
The goose had failed us, that was all;
Excuse, I beg, this hurried scrawl.
Will write tomorrow to explain—
Just now my paw is in such pain
That when I try to write it shocks
My nerves.
Yours truly, Rufus Fox.
P. S.—I'd thank you if you sent
A bottle of that liniment
You spoke of several days ago—
The kind for "dog-bite," don't you know!

THE FOURTH ESTATE

Novelized by FREDERICK R. TOOMBS

COPYRIGHT, 1909, BY JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON AND HARRIET FORD.

caught Brand's expression and whirled about. Then he, too, saw the owner of the Advance and his wife draw near. The triumphant air with which the wife and mother sailed along by his side boded no good to Brand and his story.

Nolan paused in front of the form without looking at the contents at first.

"Wheeler," he said kindly, "I've been notified about this story, and I think

"He thinks he's a great reformer and knows it all."

it best that I read it carefully myself, analyze it and learn all the circumstances under which it was procured before I allow it to go to press. That is a task which cannot be done in the short time that remains before press time, so we had best let it go over until tomorrow—delay it one day. That won't hurt the story any."

Mrs. Nolan clutched at the ex-miner's arm and cried shrilly:

"Now, now, Michael, that's not your usual way to explain things to one of your employees. Order him to destroy all this miserable stuff about the judge at once. Don't hesitate like this. Think what it means to me, to the children, to us," she pleaded.

"There, there, mother; you keep out of this," said Nolan kindly, yet firmly. "I'm trying to do the best I can for you. It's because of you that I'm here now. But you see"—

Ed Dupuy burst excitedly in upon them, and as the typesetters were beginning to become distracted from their work owing to the unusual situation Brand began to fear that this new intruder would prove the final demoralizer of the entire night shift.

"Mr. Nolan," cried Dupuy, "we haven't a minute to lose! They are almost ready to go to press." He looked intently at the newspaper owner.

"Yes, quite right. We do go to press very soon," cried Brand confidently, "and I know Michael Nolan is the man who will order it done."

"Michael," cried Mrs. Nolan at the top of her voice, which rose sharply over the din of the typesetting machines, "are you going to stand for this? Mr. Brand acts as if he owned the Advance and treats you as if you were the office boy. He thinks he's a great reformer and knows it all. We other people have a right to our opinions, too, and I don't see why you and your family should be made to suffer on account of him as we have had to ever since you took him up."

Judith Barteimy heard the stormy scene, lived a part of it herself huddled in the managing editor's office. She felt that Nolan would not let the story be used from what she had heard, and she could not suppress a pang of pain that pierced her heart at what she believed to be the fanatical vindictiveness of Wheeler Brand against her father. Yet she was a true woman, and she could not, in spite of her loyalty to her parent, avoid feeling a touch of pride at his strength of character, his determination, at the sacrifices he had made, to accomplish what he believed, even if foolishly, to be his duty.

"They don't need me," she finally muttered, and, gathering up her costly skirts, she tripped daintily across the paper strewn floor, out into the hall and down to her carriage.

Nolan dropped his head in thought when his wife had finished her tirade.

He paced up and down nervously. He looked at the clock, then at the form with its accusing contents, then at Brand, then at his wife.

"I'll go and telephone Judge Barteimy," put in Dupuy. "He'll be anxious."

The lawyer took himself off.

Brand saw the danger of delay. He doubted if any man would be able to successfully withstand the pressure that Barteimy and Nolan's family would be able to bring to bear on the owner in another twenty-four hours.

"No, no!" he exclaimed to Nolan. "You would fail me again. I have tried to prove this judge's guilt to the people, but I fear I have only succeeded in proving it to his daughter. A day's delay would be fatal, I know. At least Barteimy could get another judge to issue an injunction against us even if he would not dare to do it himself. And there are other steps he might take."

His voice rose higher, and he worked himself into a frenzy of earnestness.

He stood before the little group gathered around the ink black form and continued his impassioned words:

"You know I thought we were going to be absolutely unmuzzled here. You were a free man. Poverty couldn't frighten you, and you had seen both sides of life. You promised to back me up, no matter what it cost, so long as we printed the truth, but at the first big test you fail me."

Mrs. Nolan was on the point of becoming hysterical in her agitation.

"Michael, Michael!"— she began.

"There, mother, you go home with Sylvester. He's waiting outside for you. After all, this is a man's job we've got here. I am the head of the family, and I will settle this matter in my own way," he said sternly. "You must not attempt further to interfere."

He led her out of the room.

Brand spoke to McHenry.

"Did you hear, Mac?" he asked. "He won't decide to run it."

"It's tough, old man—it's tough!"

"This is such a live thing I don't see how I can kill it," the managing editor said, rubbing his hand over the face of the form.

"That's the best first page ever made up in America," said McHenry, with justifiable professional pride.

Brand was inconsolable.

"I've been working ten years for just this thing," he said, "something so plain that even children would see what the big thieves are doing."

"You go home!" Brand suddenly ordered McHenry.

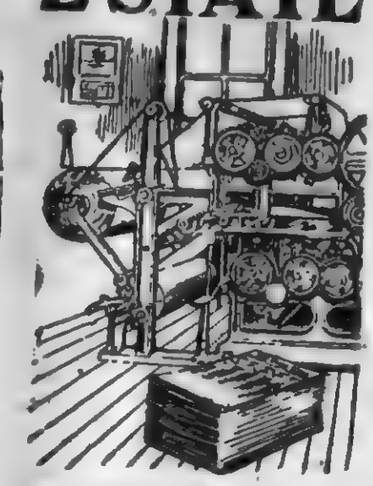
"What?" was the surprised exclamation.

"I said go home!"

Brand's face was beginning to twitch nervously. He stood in the middle of the composing room, under the flooding white glare from a sixty-four candle power electric light, and clinched and unclinched his hands, not daring to look McHenry squarely in the face. The night editor began to guess what was passing through Brand's mind.

"Yes, but," he began to protest—"but"—

Brand cut him short, saying agitatedly:



"I am still managing editor."

McHenry now realized plainly that the intensely earnest Brand had decided to run the story that very night regardless of Nolan's attitude. It would be an easy matter, as Nolan, of course, would not remain at the office much longer. And McHenry well knew that such an act would not only bring about Brand's discharge from the Advance, but that it would as well injure his reputation in other newspaper offices, where obedience to one's superior, as in any well regulated organization, is a man's first duty under all circumstances.

"Why, man," he exclaimed questioningly, "you're surely not going to run this story?"

Before Brand could give an answer to this last question, even if he had intended to do so, Nolan broke in on the pair.

"Mr. Nolan," began Brand, "you have heard the whole story of this miserable affair, both sides of it—Barteimy's and my own, from our own lips. Whatever defense or explanation Barteimy gave you I don't know. But, so far as I am concerned, I told you the facts and the truth. You must know that by this time. You must believe it. Therefore why do you or how in heaven's name can you hesitate?"

Michael Nolan's face shone with the light of determination.

"Wheeler, my boy," he said, "I have learned much from you. I have needed contact with such a man as you. I have led a rough life for most of my career. When I rose to be chairman of the Street Railway Workers' union I did so simply through my ruggedness of character, my ability to master men. Then I was driven out into the world, an outcast, and became a day laborer in the mines. When the day came that I owned my own mine it was again a case of fight, fight, FIGHT, for the lawless claim jumpers threatened me above ground, and the lawless floods assailed me below ground. So in the life I led I did not get the opportunity to study or even become familiar with the important questions and the problems that confront the men that guide the policy of newspapers."

Nolan drew close to Brand and placed his hand affectionately on the young editor's shoulder.

"But you, Wheeler—you have taught me much about those big issues that I did not know, and you have shown to me the high ideals that should guide the newspaper writer, the newspaper editor and the newspaper owner as well. You are right in this case." His voice rose to majestic heights. "Wheeler Brand, I have learned from you that the Advance is more than a newspaper: it is a great, throbbing, potent force. It is the strong arm of the Right standing against the evil arm of the Wrong. So we must not falter. We must not delay. Show the big thieves up, Wheeler. Let the story go to press."

Nolan turned quickly away and hastened out and down into the street.

A warm glow of enthusiasm spread over the face of Wheeler Brand as he picked up a bundle of proofs.

"We'll show them up!" he cried exultantly. "We'll show them up, and we'll put them down!"

CHAPTER XIV.

BRAND and McHenry began eagerly to inspect the final proofs of the Barteimy story. Two figures suddenly stood in the doorway of the composing room. Ed Dupuy's telephone call was beginning to show results. Judge Barteimy and Judith, ready for a last effort to prevent the publication of the condemnatory article, quite unobserved, glanced to where Brand and his associate editor were at work. "Don't come in yet. Wait a few moments," whispered the judge. The girl slipped down the hall into the managing editor's little office, the coign of vantage from which she had previously been able to hear all that took place in the composing room. Barteimy proceeded directly to the form before which the two editors were working, and Brand saw that he must undergo another unpleasant encounter before the presses began to whirl off his story. He glanced impatiently at the clock and raised his brows questioningly to the judge.

"Mr. Brand, has Mr. Nolan been here tonight?" asked Barteimy.

"Yes."

"Have you received instructions about this story?"

"Yes."

"What were those instructions? Is the story to be printed?"

"I am not at liberty to discuss with any outside person the communications I receive from the owner, but I will add for your information that the story will be on the press in a very few minutes."

At this latest declaration of Brand's Judith could restrain herself no longer. She rushed through the doorway, across the grimy floor, regardless of the flowing train of her silk gown.

Brand rubbed the back of his hand across his eyes as though they were deceiving him.

"Good God, it is Judith!" he exclaimed. Then he turned to his assistant. "Here, Mac, hurry—take this form away."

The girl's face and eyes were aglow with the effects of the nervous strain under which she labored on that epoch making and epoch breaking night before the startled night shift of the Advance.

"Wheeler, you're not going to use that picture?" she pleaded.

"Take the form away," again ordered Brand, his voice almost failing him.

"No, no; don't send it! Wait, wait!" She threw herself over the inky form, her arms outstretched.

Brand tried to draw her away. "Judith, please!" he protested. "They can't have"— She was hysterical.

GERMAN RALLY.

A large attendance, especially of the lady comrades, marked the meeting of the German Branch, Friday evening, March 3, at Kull's Hall, East Mound street. Comrades G. Wendell and Charles F. Weichold made addresses, and, judging by the applause given them, they must have struck the nail on the head. The Socialist Glee Club Forward sang several of their songs and received great applause. Several new members were taken in.

SOCIALIST RALLY.

The Socialists of the Eighth Ward will hold a propaganda meeting Monday evening, March 13, at Hertenstein's Hall, 782 West Mound street. Addresses will be made by Comrades H. Anna Quinby and E. B. Lewis Everybody invited. Admission free.

Fairfield County Notes.

Sunday, March 5, will be a red letter day in the Socialist calendar of Lancaster. On that day we started to clean-up with the plutes in earnest, having on the firing line Comrade J. L. Bachman, of Columbus. Despite other attractions in the city we drew a crowd of some 200 men and women, who listened attentively and gave every indication of being well pleased with Comrade Bachman's eloquent and convincing lecture. Hope sprang anew in our hearts as we saw the horny-handed sons of toil gather to hear truths, and they certainly got it; and, what is more, they can have as much as they choose, as we intend to do more work of this kind. If you are inclined to think that 200 is a small crowd, a better knowledge of conditions in this county will convince you otherwise.

Suffice to say that we are now imbued with more enthusiasm in the work and our work will begin to tell.

A pleasing feature was the appearance of Comrade Griffith, a dyed-in-the-wool Socialist from "Old Virginny," who has promised to aid us with the work by street speeches any time.

Comrade Secretary Haus was laid up with an ingrown toenail and was unable to attend. Claims plute shoes are to blame. Moral? We noticed in the assembly our comrades from Sugar Grove, via., Sheets, Matheny, Johnson and Marshall, who seemed to enjoy themselves immensely. Bremen must have been having some "doins" over their way, for we saw none of them, though there may have been some comrades from that burg present.

We notice in the daily press that Austria and Italy are about to have serious complications as a result of an insult offered by one plute to another. As usual the plutes will remain at home and let the workers spill their blood to wipe out the disgrace, probably occasioned by a wordy slap on the wrist. Of all the most disgusting things this appears to be the limit and of all the amazing things the fact that the producers will hold still for the halter of disgrace; that is, the privilege to be shot at, is the climax. They don't seem to grasp the fact that the expense of the wars must be borne by themselves, and for what? Nothing, only to gratify the whims of a prostitute king. There are many Socialists in and around Lancaster, and with a little effort we can get in touch with them by shedding light. They don't know they are Socialists, so it's our duty to let in the light. We don't know of any better illuminating material than the Columbus Socialist. Get busy.

We expect to receive Socialist items from all the locals in the county for our corner in The Socialist, and respectfully request all comrades to mail their items to us, as outlined by previous arrangement. Now, comrades, put your shoulder to the wheel and don't expect one man to do it all for the whole country.

We hear our comrade, Dr. Renshaw, of Sugar Grove, is on the sick list. Does the comrade take his own medicine?

LANCASTER LOCAL.

AN IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT!

The Socialist is no longer an experiment, the result of which is uncertain. The steady growth in circulation and the kind approval of the paper given by the comrades of the city and state are the best evidence that The Socialist has struck the right chord.

This is a Socialist paper, but it is different, and our readers seem to like it.

When The Socialist was first published its publishers did not propose to urge the comrades of this city to invest in something which might prove a failure. Large sums of money have been lost in Socialist publishing enterprises, promoted by enthusiastic workers in the cause. It was the intention to place the paper upon a safe basis and then ask for the co-operation of party members in devising larger things. That time has come. There is no longer any doubt as to The Socialist being a success. As indicated, our subscription list is increasing—not by leaps and bounds, but steadily.

The Postoffice Department has admitted the paper to the second-class mailing privilege, thereby reducing a heavy financial drain.

One of the necessities in the near future is a printing plant of our own—a Socialist plant to supply the enormous demand for propaganda and other printed matter. We must have it.

To do this The Socialist Publishing Company now offers its stock for sale at the par value of $10 per share, payable in cash, or $1 down and $1 per month until the amount subscribed for is paid.

The Socialist Publishing Company was incorporated for $10,000, and of this amount $1000 has been sold. There remains $9000 which will be sold to Socialist party members on the terms stated.

Of course, The Socialist will be published anyhow, but the time is at hand when greater and better plans should be carried out. To do this requires money. NOW IS THE TIME FOR ACTION.

SUBSCRIPTION FOR STOCK.

I, the undersigned, do hereby subscribe for.....shares of stock in The Socialist Publishing Company, of Columbus, Ohio, at the par value of $10 per share, payable in cash upon delivery of the stock, or One Dollar in cash and One Dollar per month until the amount subscribed is paid.

NEAR ESCAPE AT WORKHOUSE.

Last Sunday it was found that there was a wholesale escape imminent at the workhouse. Bricks had been removed from the outer wall of the new cell block and only a thin barrier kept those seeking liberty from attaining it.

THE "HARPOON" OUTRAGE.

The railroad mail clerks have a grievance against their master—the government.

They formed an organization, and appointed one of the members to prepare a brief so that the government (the people) could pass judgment on their case.

The brief-maker called his statement the "Harpoon." His means of distribution was the mails (supposed to be owned by the people). For so doing he was arrested and thrown into jail. Yet every day congressmen commit the same offense, because the law (people) allow it.

The editor of the "Harpoon" is raising his voice against the reign of plutocracy in the people's mail service. Congressmen and senators and administration nabobs lounge and loaf at the people's expense, while railroad mail clerks are compelled daily to ride in unsafe mail-cars, while over their heads hang the coercive "Merit" and "Demerit" system of punishment. These words were once barred from the mails, when written on a postal card. "Office-holding of all sorts, from the President down to the constable, will in a few years more be ranked in the public mind as positively disreputable." Nevertheless, the facts as stated will be true, if we Socialists do not change the system.

EX-PRESIDENT JOHN MITCHELL AND THE CIVIC FEDERATION.

The action of the Mine Workers in severing connection with the Civic Federation appears to have been misconstrued. To be brief, the miners have declared that no man is greater than the principle involved. They have declared that, while they think none the less of Ceasar, they nevertheless love Rome more. When John Mitchell was just a plain dues-paying member the Civic Federation had no use for his services; but when the miners, by their votes, gave Mr. Mitchell the title of president at once he became important as a representative of a large body. Nothing being greater than the things that create it, even as President Mitchell was at all times subservient to the will of the majority. In the due course of time Mr. Mitchell resigned from the position of president of the miners and sought employment from other masters. Because of his prestige as a labor leader he was hired has an "agreement maker," at a salary of $6000 per year. Those who had helped create Mitchell's prestige in the labor world concluded that his employers were not the friends of labor, but most violently their enemies. Then the same force that created him began to berate—not John Mitchell, because of religious or political belief—but because they believed him to be an honest man, surrounded by those whose ulterior motives might at some time blacken Mr. Mitchell's reputation. To be plain, we are not going to allow roaring lions to attract their prey with the whine of a lamb.

You must not think that turkeys first came from Turkey, for they are natives of America. And the Turkish bath originated in Russia. Nor must you think camel's-hair brushes are made from the hair of the humpbacked quadruped. They are mostly of the bushy hair from squirrels' tails. German silver not only is not silver at all, but it was invented in China centuries ago, and is an alloy of some of the inferior metals. Porpoise hide is not made from porpoises at all. People get it from the white whale. Jerusalem artichokes are not natives of Jerusalem, but are a kind of sunflower. The French call them girasole ("flower turned to the sun"), and girasole became corrupted into Jerusalem.

Long hours of labor mean short hours of life. Closed windows are open avenues of consumption. Dark airless, overcrowded tenements are the charnel houses of the working class.

The most important reason why women should have the right to vote is because they need the ballot for their own protection from crime, disease, starvation, ignorance and manifold other dangers.—Mrs. Catherine Waught McCulloch.

TAFT'S MOVE.

An Associated Press dispatch says that President Taft gives as his reason for the mobilization of 20,000 men on the Mexican border that he seeks to preserve neutrality between this country and Mexico. This is a statement that no one will believe. It comes at a time when the insurgents have some possibility of success. Hitherto the state governments have had ample facilities for seeing that arms and ammunition were not sent across the line. They still have the same facilities. But the men on the other side of the line have increased prospects of winning out in their fight. So this move is not meant for the purpose of preserving neutrality. It is really a brazen threat of invasion.

As Mexico is a foreign country, and as there have been no attacks upon Americans and no infringement of American rights, the action of President Taft is utterly without justification in any way. How does he know that the majority of the people in this country wish the revolt in Mexico suppressed? How does he know that the majority of the people in this country sympathize with and uphold the Diaz government? He does not know and he does not care.

Certain American financiers have invested heavily in Mexico, or certain American financiers have been granted huge concessions in Mexico by that government. These same financiers, in order to protect their loot, have ordered President Taft to make this present demonstration, and he has obediently done it. He has no intention of being impartial, because he can not be. He is of the capitalist class. He is the President of the capitalist class. And when influential members of that class wish anything done, even to the extent of violating the rights of the people of a foreign nation, President Taft is willing to do it.

Even if the United States soldiers do not set a foot on Mexican soil this mobilization is going to cost this country several millions of dollars. Transportation of the troops will be costly. Enormous quantities of supplies will have to be sent to Texas. Equipment will be speedily worn out. And the bill will be settled by the United States. Yet it will be deemed worth the money if it succeeds in crushing out a revolt that is just, if ever there was a just revolt. It will be deemed worth the money if it permits the financiers, either American or Mexican—for they both operate to the same end—to get a firmer grip on the throats of the American workers.

The sympathies of most of the working men and women of the United States have been outspokenly with the insurgents. So were the sympathies of many not in the working class. This was forcibly shown by the publication in magazines and newspapers of many striking articles depicting conditions in Mexico. It is significant that at about the time open revolt against these conditions commenced, the articles which revealed them to the people of this nation ceased. Advocacy of the cause of oppression, as shown in American publications, was ruthlessly stamped out. Now revolt in Mexico itself is to be just as ruthlessly stamped out.

It is a disgraceful condition of affairs. It is a shame to the United States. Where is the sense of fair play? Where is that sympathy with a weaker people honestly and courageously struggling against great odds to better their condition? That spirit and that sympathy have no place in capitalist ethics. The thing capitalism now seeks to do is maintain the government of Diaz, or if he is senile, some government that will work as advantageously to capital and as oppressively to the working class. And William H. Taft, President of the United States, has turned over to these financiers the army of the United States for the purpose of accomplishing that object.

POSTAL EMPLOYES ARE AWAKE.

"The matter of Sunday closing of postoffices," said First Assistant Postmaster General Grandfield, "is one which the citizens themselves can control. As a matter of fact, the postal regulations have always placed this matter in the discretion of the local postmaster. Postoffices are being closed on Sunday at the rate of 15 or 20 a week now.

"Approximately 1,500 offices still have the Sunday delivery. But all the mail that it is really necessary to deliver could go out through the general delivery windows. As a matter of fact, there is practically no demand for Sunday mail service from the business men in the cities. Young boys and girls are the ones who can't wait until Monday for their mail, as a rule."

It is stated that recently Postmaster Krumm, of this city, called the local force of clerks together and informed them that if the postoffice was closed on Sunday they would have to work full time that day. Despite this statement, 60 out of 63 clerks voted for Sunday closing. Postal employes who, as a rule are above the average in intelligence, are becoming more and more class conscious. It is going to be difficult to gag them. They are thinking along the right lines and are lining up to vote right.

WHY A PARTY?

There is only one way for the workers to secure the government, and that is by the victory of a political party of our own. The only way to secure our own political party is to organize it ourselves, from the bottom up.

If there were an easier or more pleasant way, we would certainly take it. But there is no road but the straight road. Hence the Socialist party.

We are the wealth-producers, and those in complete sympathy with the working-class movement, who have organized politically on our own behalf.

We are not angry with any one. We are simply working for ourselves in the one field where we have (or could have) considerable social power.

Our combined votes will capture the state. Then the central organization of society will be in our hands. The state itself will be changed from a police-power, protecting mere things, to an administration of industry, for the protection of human life.

Our first victories will come in the industrial cities, where capitalism is ripest and where, also, it commits its greatest failures.

As we gain even partial power, we will use it to assist the workers right now to the extent of our ability. As the workers gain power and receive a portion of their just share of the product, like Oliver Twist with the gruel, they will call for more. There is no stopping place until we have secured possession of the means of life, given ourselves suitable employment, made our work and our leisure secure, and established equality of opportunity for all mankind.

Frederick Guy Strickland.

SHOULD THE WORKING CLASS TRY TO SAVE MONEY?

Somebody may say it sounds like mighty strange advice to urge the working class not to try to save money.

Perhaps it might not sound so strange to point out the uselessness of trying to do something impossible.

A small percentage of the workers may be able to save a little money, but only, as a rule, to have it gobbled up afterward by the capitalists. It is perhaps conservative to say that two-thirds of the money paid by workers on homes bought on the installment plan has reverted back to a grafter for which the workers received nothing. Building and loan stock has in most cases paid liberally on the investment.

The mortgage foreclosures among small farmers, who failed after paying a handsome piece of money to money lenders, are not a small number.

The installment plan, like the loan shark, takes advantage of the workers' short sight and short pay. It is like a lapsed insurance policy. The graft upon lapsed policies is not a small item. Experience has attracted capital to these institutions, which take advantage of gobbling up the workers' savings, knowing that a certain large percentage at all time fail to meet the full terms of their contract and all the money paid in, as well as the original property, belongs then to the grafter.

By saving money and cheating your family you save for the benefit of the grafters. So what is the use?

You think perhaps you can save and go into business. Suppose you try; how long will it take for you to have a real capital? It isn't safe unless your capital is large enough to protect itself alongside of real capital today.

During the panic of 1897, 15,008 firms in the United States were driven into legal bankruptcy. Of these 89 per cent. were firms doing business with less than $5,000 capital. Last week 228 firms failed in the United States. At this rate (228x52-11,856) for one year the number of failures would amount to 11,856 firms. And it is said that we are still in the midst of prosperity.

Where does the capital of the failing little firms go to? Well, it does not go to the working class.

So long as there was a possibility of holding what you saved it was practical to save. But with big factory systems, which hatch all kinds of little petty grafters to prey upon your lack of existence, it is no longer practical to nibble at this bait.

Over a million of your brother workers are today among the forced idle class; YOUR TURN MAY COME TOMORROW.

CLYDE J. WRIGHT.

SERIOUS CHARGES BY THE SPEAKER.

Viciously cruel right and left swings at alleged book trust domination of Ohio schools were dealt last Tuesday night before the senate committee on common schools by Speaker S. J. Vining of the house of representatives, in support of Senator Yount's state uniform textbook bill for townships and villages.

Vining charged that school men who opposed the bill were in the employ of the big book companies. He excoriated them and inferentially accused nearly all of those opposed to the bill with improper motives. Vining himself was a teacher for 15 years, and said he "knew the situation from both ends of the line."

"The best brains are employed to lobby against the bill," he declared. "Fifty per cent. of the superintendents of the schools of the state owe their position to school book companies, and many of them are owned body and soul by the book companies." When his 50 per cent. statement was challenged, Vining said it wasn't high enough.

Citing the fact that in Indiana, under a uniform system, school books were 30 per cent. cheaper than they were in Ohio, he said: "The teachers opposed to this bill find their libraries groaning with books from the school book companies. I don't blame them as much as I blame the people for being such d—n fools as to stand it."

He declared that the resolution adopted by Ohio teachers at Dayton against the uniform book system was prepared for them in a room in the Phillips House by a book agent.

These are serious charges, that are undoubtedly true, for the writer has known Sam Vining long enough to feel sure he would make no wild statements. The corruption of the present political system, which is only the method used by capitalism to protect their rotten work, shows up with increasing hideousness every day.

GELEERD BILL IS DEFEATED.

The big lobby from all parts of the state killed the Geleerd municipal ownership of street railways bill Tuesday, by a vote of 33 yeas and 64 nays.

Lobbyists have swarmed around the capital in the last few days representing streetcar companies in Ohio cities, and working against this bill. They succeeded in getting a great majority of the city vote together with that of the reactionaries from Montgomery and Hamilton counties, the Cox Republicans and Hanley Democrats.

Several members known as labor members voted against the bill, among them Thomas of Wood, Shanley of Portage, Evans of Stark, Cooper of Youngstown and Colter of Lucas. Reynolds of Franklin was not present. Smith of Marion, who is the chief opponent of the labor measures, fought the bill on the floor. Bertsch and Jones of Franklin voted against it. The fact is that the men who compose the general assembly of Ohio, to a large degree, are only the tools of the corporate interests. There is no redress for the people short of replacing these pliant servant of the Master Class with clear-cut, class conscious Socialists, who will be controlled solely by the organization which elected them.

The Wall Street Journal, the leading financial journal of the country, recently published an article under the caption, "The World Worships the Man Who Gets There." Among other things this article said: "A large part of the world reserves its applause for the men who 'get there,' who achieve results, who do things, and it does not much care about the methods employed to achieve these results. A politician who can elect his candidate by buying a state is a great man. Hurrah for him! Make him a cabinet officer. Give him a fat contract. Put him at the head of the party. The way to do things is to do them, and it is not necessary to bother much about the ethics of the game. Is there a franchise to be got? Buy it. Is there a combination to be formed? Form it. Is there a competitor who must be crushed? Crush him. Is there a chance to make a big deal? Make it. Never mind about methods, or laws, or ethics, or justice, or religion. Think about them afterward.

"Now there is nothing more diabolical than such a theory and practice as that. It means anarchy. It spells national ruin. Results are, indeed, what the world is laboring for, but results that are the achievement of graft, of violation of law, of injustice, oppression and deceit—such results are worse than failure. The men who do things without bothering about ethics are sowing seeds, the harvest of which may some day be revolution."

"Insurgency" is a new monthly, published by Arthur Baker, at 708 East Fortieth street, Chicago, Ill., and it is about the hottest stuff that has yet come to our notice. It is 50 cents a year, and is cheap at the price.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

[The following article was written by Mrs. Winship, aged 80 years, and now a student at Ohio State University.]

There are three stages in labor organization. The first stage ended in 1825. Previous to this there was a small number, less than half a dozen, perhaps, of local labor unions. Thurlow Weed became a member of the New York Typographical Society, which was incorporated in 1818. In 1821 another was formed in Albany. In 1822 there was a union of Shipwrights and Caulkers in Boston. However, the movement previous to 1825 was only germinal in comparison with the subsequent history of such organizations. Certain sections united, but as yet no extended action was demanded, for as there were no railroads, each city was a world by itself. Still, political action was even as early as this urged. Boston and New York being the chief cities engaged in the movement. George Henry Evans and his brother, Frederick, came from England in 1820, and published a paper called "The Working Mag's Advocate," which was the first organ of labor unions here.

The second stage dates from 1825; a Working Man's party was organized in 1830, but in politics the Democratic party was regarded as the party of workingmen, though Horace Greeley, a leading Whig, editor and politician, was always a firm friend to the cause of labor. In 1833 a general trade union was formed in New York City, which attempted to unite subordinate unions and was the first of that character of unionizing. A book called "The Working Man's Manual" was published in 1831, showing the general agitation upon the labor question. Education was advocated as a remedy for the evils complained of. At first the reform most urgently demanded was a shorter working day, then an effort was made to increase the wages of factory operatives and also to protect the children in factories.

In 1833 a New England Association of farmers, mechanics and other workingmen was formed, when the working class had such friends as Channings, whose word to them was self-culture, and Horace Mann, who was deeply interested in the protection and education of children.

In 1840 the absorbing topic was the length of the working day, and President Van Buren signed an order limiting labor to ten hours a day on all government work.

The decade preceding the Civil War was remarkable for the number of unions organized on a national basis.

The third stage began in 1860, though during the Civil War, owing to causes incident to that struggle, the labor question was in abeyance. But immediately after, because of the liberation of the slaves, which gave a greater dignity to toil, fluctuations of currency, contrasts of riches and poverty, concentration of the laboring classes in large establishments and great industrial centers, combined with greatly increased immigration, the labor question received great attention and unions became international. In 1864 the Grand International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers was formed.

In 1869 Uriah H. Stevens, a tailor of Philadelphia, organized a society which has become the most popular in the world. It was the beginning of a new phase in the labor movement. This society, the Knights of Labor, embraced all branches of skilled and unskilled labor. The Knights of Labor was organized on what its founders thought to be scientific principles, and tried to solve the problem of distribution. The local assemblies were composed of one trade only or of a variety of trades. At first it was a secret order, but now secrecy is not thought to be so important. There was a vast membership, especially in the South and East. Its aim is to promote industrial and social education among the masses and to aid public and private reforms.

The American Federation is a delegate body. It aims, among other things, to watch legislative action in order to promote the enactment of wise and beneficent laws. It is not so centralized as the Knights of Labor, and, as compared with that order, is more like a confederate government, while the latter is modeled after the constitutional plan. Samuel Gompers, the leader, advocates restricted immigration. He also asserts that if workingmen will devote enough energy to abating the wrongs prevailing in their respective parts of the country they will thus more surely benefit all. The Knights of Labor also favored restricted immigration.

The chief obstacles which labor organizations have had to meet are: First, hostile public sentiment; second, hostility of newspapers; third, active prejudice of many fairly intelligent laboring men; fourth, antagonistic ruling of the courts.

The hostility of public sentiment is largely due to the many unjust strikes. The injury done by them has led to the denunciation of the whole labor movement, on the supposition that labor unions were formed solely to promote strikes.

Although the attitude of the press is more friendly, even now, the reading of one labor organ, at least, is necessary for a good understanding of the movement for organized labor.

Intelligent workingmen have now ceased to oppose the movement, since it has been made clear that organization is in itself an effective educational movement, tending to educate and reform.

Courts have in many instances unjustly held labor unions responsible for the acts of evil-disposed and lawless persons, who have used strikes as the occasion for destruction of property and other deeds of violence.

Prof. Eby, who treats in his admirable work of the benefits to accrue from labor organizations, says: "The labor movement is the strongest force outside the church for the practical recognition of human brotherhood. Organized labor will yet force the governments of the earth to substitute arbitration for war, and compel the people to live peaceably."

It has already brought an elevating influence to bear upon the more ignorant blacks, and is thus helping to solve the race problem.

Labor organizations have largely promoted insurance, thus preventing thousands from becoming objects of charity, thereby relieving the burdens of the taxpayers.

Quoting again from Prof. Eby: "If the public only knew the anarchy and disorder which would follow the suppression of labor organizations, it would thank God for them."

Political economists almost unexceptionally favor them, and their existence now scarcely needs vindication. They are peculiarly fitted to aid those who have had limited time and opportunity for improvement. Educating in morals, they are next to schools and churches in an elevating influence upon the masses. They also educate politically, as the members meet and discuss questions of political science in an intelligent and thoughtful manner, thus learning to think and express the result of thinking, and by being under discipline learn self-control. A strong sentiment is already developed in favor of temperance, many of the leaders being very strongly so. Excellent reading rooms, with fine equipment, are maintained by many unions.

Labor unions are exerting a strong influence in favor of shortened hours of work, and are paving the way for co-operation, which is the ideal business method. They favor justice to woman, and are helping her to get it. Of course, mistakes must be made, as in all human undertakings, but the general trend is forward. Organization gives the laborer a hopeful future—there is justice to be gained, which will benefit not only himself but all mankind.

The great aim of labor organization, we might say, is to persuade employers to arbitrate for settlement of differences to eliminate the occurrence of strikes. The laborer knows by sad experience the untold suffering which strikes entail. The capitalist is free from the fear of starvation for himself and family, therefore he often refuses to listen to complaints or investigate alleged wrongs. The remedy for this difficulty lies in statutory provisions for the settlement of such differences by regularly constituted boards of abitration, whose decisions shall bind both parties.

It may justly be said, however, that while strikes have entailed great suffering, privation and loss, they have not been without good effect in many instances, for, through fear of loss, employers have been induced to accord the justice which would otherwise have been withheld.

The labor problem has come to be more than the question, however important, of the relation of capital and labor. It is the human problem—the relation of man to man. In it lies the determination of the new humanity, and in its wider and fuller sense is moral and religious rather than economic. Another thought which may be emphasized in this connection is that the central principle involved is human brotherhood. True, not many of the membership fully comprehend this broad idea, but many we not hope that these are the beginnings, however obscure, of an evolution as widespread as benevolent and which, in the coming ages, will give "generations of people, happier born, with purer blood and clearer brain, who will see where we but grope, will run and leap where we but totter and fall." Then will dawn, we earnestly hope, the golden day of universal brotherhood, when all shall realize that the welfare of each is the concern of all and that,

"Life touches still this secret,
That none can find his good
Save as one happy unit
In one grand brotherhood."

When a man has performed a special service to his country he is loaded with honors, as were Washington and Lincoln and Grant. Likewise, when a man performs a special service for society, he may expect society to reward him abundantly. But the man who performs no service should not by stealth or guile appropriate what is another's. And the man who has inherited from worthy ancestors ought to prove by distinct services to society his title to such inheritance.—Everybody's Magazine.

The Question Box.

If the Socialist would give the laborer the full product of his work, how would the necessary superintendents and foremen be paid for their services? How could the laborer get the full product of his labor when enough would be taken from him and other workers to pay the superintendents and foremen?

E. A. P.

Zanesville, Ohio.

The superintendents and foremen in a factory are productive workers, the same as the men who work at the bench or forge. Their work is as necessary to the product of the shop as that of the men who work under their direction.

Such being the case, it is the amount and quality of the work they do that will determine their remuneration, the same as the amount and quality done by the bench-workers determine theirs. It is the amount of necessary labor contributed by a worker to the production of a given article that determines his share, or ownership, in it or in its value.

If there is any use for a superintendent in a shop, he will do useful work; and this useful work contributes to the making of whatever is made.

It is, therefore, evident that nothing would be taken from the product of other workers to pay the foremen or other directors in the industry. There would be a proportion of his labor power congealed in each article turned out by the force under his control. If at any time a superintendent, or other executive administrator, should become unnecessary, his work would become useless and consequently possess no value, under which condition the workers would, no doubt, abolish his office; but so long as a personal directing power is needed, the work of men to perform this needed labor will be useful and contributory to the value of the things made.

If I were a tailor in a clothing factory and should finish a coat I would not necessarily be entitled to the whole value of the coat, for the simple reason that others had applied their labor in producing the materials of which the coat was made. The labor of others would be congealed in the cloth, thread, buttons and other materials which I had not produced, but to which I had only added enough of my own effort to give them the form of a coat. More than this, there are others in the industry in which I work who would have contributed indirectly, but essentially, to my own part of the work. The cutter who cuts the parts of the coat from the goods, the boy who carries the materials from the various departments to my bench, even the fireman and engineer, whose efforts produce the machine power used by me; the janitor who sweeps the floors and cleans the windows, are all helpers, and necessary helpers, in the process and are, therefore, entitled to their portion of the product.

Everyone who contributes of his labor power, which includes the superintendent and his assistants, to the production of that coat is justly entitled to a share in its value. Even when the coat leaves my bench, it can not be said to be a finished product, for nothing is wholly produced until it is in the hands of the user. The handling of the coat by packers, draymen, railroad men and local distributors of clothing adds to its value in proportion of the amount of necessary human labor each contributes toward putting it into the hands of the user.

Superintendents are necessary to organized industry, and the necessary labor performed by them must be part of the cost and value of what is made under their direction. You should read the analysis of value in "Vail's Principles of Scientific Socialism," which will make this plainer than is possible in the limits of this column.

Man comes into this world without his consent and leaves it against his will. During his stay on earth his time is spent in a continuous round of contraries and misunderstandings. In his infancy he is an angel; in his boyhood he is a devil; in his manhood he is everything, from a lizard up; in his duties he is a fool; if he raises a family he is a chump; if he doesn't he is a freak; if he raises a small check he is a thief, and the law raises the devil with him; if he is a poor man he is a poor manager and has no sense; if he is rich he is dishonest but considered smart; if he is in politics you can't place him, as he is an undesirable citizen; if he goes to church he is a hypocrite; if he stays away from church he is a sinner, and will go below when he dies; if he donates to charity he does it for show; if he doesn't, he is stingy and a tight wad; when he first comes into the world everybody wants to kiss him; before he goes out they all want to kick him; if he dies young there was a great future before him; if he lives to a ripe old age he is simply in the way and living to save funeral expenses.—Exchange.

Eighteen thousand suicides and ten thousand murders in the United States last year is a record that we should view with pride. Great is capitalism.

THIS IS WHAT THEY THINK OF US.

J. Mahlon Barnes, the National Secretary of the Socialist party, supplies us with the following circular, which was published for exclusive circulation among bankers in Bankers' Magazine, March, 1892. O. G. Severance, of Everson, Wash., had in his possession a copy of this magazine. The article was copied in the Chicago daily press of March 31, 1893, one year preceding the panic of 1893.

Present conditions will show that the plan of "dividing the workers" over the "tariff question," a question "of no importance," has been accomplished.

The circular reads as follows:

"We must proceed with caution and guard well every move made, for the lower orders of the people are already showing signs of restless commotion. Prudence will, therefore, dictate a policy of apparently yielding to the popular will until all our plans are so far consummated that we can declare our designs without fear of any organized resistance.

"The Farmers' Alliance and Knights of Labor organizations in the United States should be carefully watched by our trusted men, and we must take immediate steps to either control these organizations in our interest or disrupt them.

"At the coming Omaha convention, to be held July 4, our men must attend and direct its movements or else there will be set on foot such antagonism to our designs as may require force to overcome.

"This at the present time would be premature. We are not yet ready for such a crisis. Capital must protect itself in every possible manner through combination and legislation.

"The courts must be called to our aid, debts must be collected, bonds and mortgages foreclosed as rapidly as possible.

"When, through a process of law the common people have lost their homes, they will be more tractable and easily governed through the influence of the strong arm of government applied by a central power of imperial wealth under the control of leading financiers. A people without homes will not quarrel with their rulers.

"History repeats itself in regular cycles; this truth is well known among our principal men now engaged in forming an imperialism in govern the world. While they are doing this the people must be kept in a condition of political antagonism.

"The question of tariff reform must be urged through the organization known as the Democratic party, and the question of protection with reciprocity must be forced to view through the Republican party.

"By thus dividing the voters we can get them to expend their energies in fighting over questions of no importance to use except as fethers to lead the common herd. Thus by discreet action we can secure all that has been so generously planned and thus far successfully accomplished."

Speak not evil of one another, comrades. He that speaketh evil of his comrade, and judgeth his comrade, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law. But if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge.

SOCIALISTS IN ACTION.

News From The World Wide Movement Of The Workers.

WISCONSIN NOTES.

"Has the Russian government forfeited its right to be considered a civilized nation?" was the question debated in the Wisconsin senate last Tuesday.

The Social-Democrats in the legislature hold that Russia cannot be reckoned among the civilized powers. They have introduced a memorial in the Wisconsin legislature asking Congress to take away from the Russian government the right of extraditing its subjects from American soil.

Senator Gaylord (Socialist) warmly supported this proposition. He pointed out that Russia had attempted several times to extradite political offenders, under the plea that they were common criminals. He cited the Rudowitz case, when only a storm of popular indignation saved a Russian revolutionist from being delivered up to the torture chambers of the Czar. As long as we have any extradition treaty with Russia, no Russian political offender is really safe within our borders.

Unfortunately, the capitalist politicians would not take this view. One "reform" Republican insisted that conditions in Russia were steadily "improving"—a statement, by the way, which has been made continually for the last twenty years. Here we have another proof, if any more were needed, that the so-called "reformers" have no genuine sympathy with any real movement toward either political or economic freedom. Only Socialists can be relied upon in every great struggle of humanity.

The proposed memorial was, therefore, killed.

One of the most important measures now before the city of Milwaukee is the question of whether the city shall be allowed to do its own street work directly, or continue to employ contractors. The superintendent of street construction has presented figures which are very convincing, showing how much the city could gain from doing its own work.

This idea makes the contractors shiver, and they are raising a desperate howl through the capitalist press.

In fact, it is easy to trace the profit motive under every one of the savage attacks now being made on the Social-Democratic administration in Milwaukee. The real estate men are howling against the administration's plan for model workingmen's cottages. The persons who make money out of private hospitals charge the administration with extravagance because it wishes to provide a comfortable place for the nativity of the children of the poor. The contractors are aghast at the idea that the city can cut out their profits. All these find a voice in the capitalist papers, and thus prove that, to get the real facts before the people, the Socialists must have their own press.

The Milwaukee Social-Democrats have accordingly gone seriously to work to start a Socialist daily paper in Milwaukee. The task is gigantic. But the Milwaukee Social-Democrats have undertaken a good many gigantic tasks, and carried them through.

An amusing situation has been created by the new non-partisan election law. This law was framed up in great haste and rushed through the legislature, with the openly avowed purpose of knocking out the Social-Democrats in the judicial and school board election next month.

But it is already proving a boomerang. The judges who backed it up are all in a puzzle over it. They do not know how to secure signatures for their nomination papers under this law, and are still rushing about to get signers.

Meantime, the Social-Democrats have their papers all ready to file, having gotten the necessary number of signatures without any trouble.

Again the legislatures have tried their hand killing the Social-Democrats with a bill, and again they have bungled the job!

State Secretary.

IOWA SOCIALISTS ELECT TWO ALDERMEN.

VICTORY FOLLOWS LOCKOUT OF BUTTON-MAKERS IN MUSCATINE.

MUSCATINE, Iowa.—This city has taken the first steps toward becoming a second Milwaukee. Columbus, Minneapolis, Los Angeles and other cities that are striving for the honor will have to hustle some to catch up with Muscatine. At yesterday's election two aldermen were elected to the city council on the Socialist ticket, and the tremendous gain made in the party's vote is the sensation of the day.

O. C. Wilson, who was elected as alderman from the Third Ward with a plurality of 378, is one of the pioneer Socialists in Iowa, and at the same time one of the best posted.

William Montgomery, alderman-elect from the Fourth Ward, is also a strong Socialist worker. He received a plurality of 207 votes.

The fight was won after one of the most bitter struggles ever fought in this city on the political field.

The Muscatine Journal makes the following comments and report of the Socialist victories.

"Far overshadowing all other features of yesterday's city election, the most sensational and closely contested in the city's history, was the wonderful strides made throughout the city by the Socialist party, and the election of the Socialist candidates for aldermen in the Third and Fourth wards, by overwhelming majorities.

SAYS FAIR PLAY IS BEST.

CATHOLIC JOURNAL NAILS LIES ABOUT SOCIALISM.

Fair play should always characterize the attacks of Catholic writers and apologists upon the evils of the present social order. To exaggerate these evils, to lay the blame for them at the door of those who are not responsible for them and are even trying their best to remove them, to belittle the well-meaning attempts of men and associations that are striving for social amelioration according to the lights which God has given them (though their methods do not always recommend themselves when viewed from the standpoint of Catholic teaching), will not help our cause, but will only irritate the adversary—those whom we should try to enlighten by means of a saner campaign and perhaps in a more Christian spirit.

Reflections of this kind were forced upon us when reading the excellent (English) Catholic Book Notes, a review of six lectures on Socialism.

The reviewer in Catholic Book Notes finds that the author's treatment of his subject "is neither calm nor fair," and is only very slightly constructive. Sneers at 'a man who makes 25,000 pounds a year by amusing the public' are simply revolting to any who knows the devoted character of the brilliant Fabian referred to. Suggestions that Socialism of necessity implies free-love or logically leads to atheism, though easily supportable by quotations from many former Socialist writers, are hopelessly off the points as regards the modern leaders of the movement. As for statements like 'the Clarion, the official organ of the Socialists,' or that Mr. Bernard Shaw 'was not sane' when he wrote his introduction to the Fabian Essays, or that 'the Socialist says that nobody has any right to make money or to own money except the Socialist state,' they are simply not true, and only show that [the writer] has no clear understanding of his subject. It is most necessary that Socialism (and its far more imminent and dangerous cousin, organised Capitalism) should be studied and combated by Catholics. But the attack should not be conducted in the temper of these lectures, for such intemperance simply leads to incoherence."—Catholic Fortnightly Review.

THE CORRUPTION OF THE COUNTRY JUSTICE.

The Justices' Court Reform Bill, introduced in the present term of the Ohio Legislature, received but scant consideration and was defeated by an overwhelming majority. May Heaven pity the poor in the clutches of leeches. Our representatives certainly do not.

Under our present system of dispensing justice the collection of accounts is almost entirely in the hands of justices of the peace, as the latter have jurisdiction of any claim involving not over $300. Their territorial jurisdiction is co-extensive with the county in cases of attachment and ejectment.

It is in cases of attachment in particular that the present system works the greatest injustice. A debtor may owe $5 and live in township B, but the creditor to unduly harass the debtor may cause an attachment to be issued in township X. The debtor is then compelled to spend time and money in defending the case filed in X or permit a judgment to be taken against him, which will probably include a cost bill larger than the original claim. The Ohio statutes provide that not over $4 shall be assessed as costs in attachment cases. But cases are of frequent occurrence in which $6, or more are attached for costs, in some cases the costs being double the original bill.

A debtor is attached in a country township far from his home. He is then compelled to hire a lawyer and fight the case, which may cost him anywhere from $5 to $35, or pay the claim, which may be an unfair one, and excessive costs.

Many of the country justices literally run collecting agencies. They work hand in hand with a corrupt and dishonest organization in a nearby city. They agree to bring all suits necessary for the collection of claims, serve papers and give judgments for a per cent. of the profits. The costs are, of course, a big item in figuring profits. Yet in many cases money is attached, judgment given and case settled without the defendant ever receiving a legal notice of any sort or kind whatever, and perhaps the "docket" (?) of the justice will not show that a case has been filed. What are the costs for, any way?

Yet what can a poor man do? If he gets a lawyer and fights, he may, in many cases, beat the justice, but he generally decides it is cheaper to acknowledge himself beaten and trust to luck to keep out of debt in the future. Unjust and false claims are often paid by an alleged debtor simply to avoid an expensive attachment and a possible loss of his job.

There are some people in the world who live by cheating others; for these I have no sympathy. They are, however, entitled to justice. On the other hand, there is a class of men who are honestly in debt through ill health and misfortune, through low wages and lack of work. I have known honest and upright men who have become heavily involved on account of illness or hard times and who have been hounded almost to distraction by country justices, and finally forced to move from their home towns to escape persecution. When a man is unfortunate enough to owe many debts an attachment case is hardly settled before another is filed. The debtor has no chance whatever to make a fresh start. It is impossible for him to be honest under such conditions. I know of one man who had two cases pending before a certain notorious country justice at the same time on the same claim!

Our statutes provide for itemized cost bills. My attention has been called to instances where an attached debtor has been frightened into paying exorbitant amounts for the settlement of cases, when not even a summons had been issued, the defendant in such cases learning for the first time of the filing of the case when he attempted to draw his wages and found them attached.

The administration of justice through city justices' courts is ordinarily on a fair and square basis, as the city justices receive a definite salary. The country justices are on the fee system—they make much or little according to the number of cases filed and judgments collected. In this particular the system is grossly defective and disgustingly corrupt.

There is no part of our governmental system more in need of reformation and purification than this system of inferior courts. The corruption of the country justices is so apparent that we have almost come to look upon it as one of the necessary evils of existence. Our representatives in the general assembly think the matter too insignificant to consider seriously, much less attempt to remedy the wrong.

If the initiative were a part of our governmental system the decent people of the state would no doubt promptly remove this blot from our judiciary. A law should be passed giving all justices an adequate salary and abolishing the fee system, making the jurisdiction of justices extend merely throughout the township electing them, and further requiring them to be lawyers or at least to have some legal training. At present there are a class of men who consider a position as justice a most lucrative and attractive one—no work and good pay. I remember hearing one strong young man plead for a re-election to a country justiceship because there was no other work he could get to do. It is an amazing state of affairs when we leave justice in the hands of men so economically worthless that they can fill no other paying position but that of country squire.

A STRIKE AT THE BALLOT-BOX IS THE ONLY STRIKE LEFT.

A new gun, the Mennet-Mercier, whose use in the United States army will mean the revolutionising of even the most modern methods of war on land, and which for lightness, power and general effectiveness is said to be the most terribly destructive weapon ever invented, is now being secretly manufactured in the Springfield armory for Uncle Sam's (read Capitalist's) use.

This gun, weighing less than twenty pounds, and manipulated after the fashion of the ordinary fowling-piece, pours out a stream of bullets, when in action, at the rate of FOUR HUNDRED SHOTS A MINUTE.

Through the efforts of Socialist councilman Charles A. McKeever, the hours of the street laborers in Newcastle, Pa., have been reduced from nine to eight hours per day, with no reduction in pay, and the city stenographer given an increase in salary of ten dollars per month. Does that answer the oft-repeated query, "What can one man do?"

It is better to move together than to stand together. The workers stand too much already.—Appeal.

MACHINISTS STIRRED BY CIVIC FEDERATION

ANOTHER UNION PREPARES TO FOLLOW IN FOOTSTEPS OF MINE WORKERS.

WASHINGTON.—That the National Civic Federation has become an issue that is spreading rapidly from one international union to another and threatening to force itself before the next convention of the American Federation of Labor for final settlement, is the openly expressed opinion of many union officials now in Washington. As proof of this they point to the resignation from this hybrid organization of John Mitchell, former head of the United Mine Workers of America, and lately chairman of the trade agreement department of the National Civic Federation.

Mitchell's resignation followed the resolution adopted at the last convention of the United Mine Workers of America in which it was declared that no member of the union could also be a member of the National Civic Federation.

Following in the footsteps of the United Mine Workers, the International Association of Machinists has practically placed the same issue before its members for a decision in the coming election for president—James O'Connell, the present head of the association, and a member of the National Civic Federation, being opposed for the office by William H. Johnston, who believes that no union man should be a member of a civic organization that is controlled by such persons as Carnegie, Belmont and Judge Gary, of the steel trust.

President O'Connell declares that he has not been an "active" member of the National Civic Federation for many months, but as similar declarations have lately been given out by a number of international officials, it is the opinion of the anti-civic federation men that he has spoken too late.

PUNGENT POINTS.

The Battle of Armageddon boiled down means the class struggle.

Blessed be the workingman; he hath given and Morgan hath taken.

The Boy Scout movement, three thousand strong, will teach the young ideas how to shoot the old strikers.

Disarmament is an accomplished fact for the despised laborer. He must not carry concealed weapons.

Prevention of war is prevention of robbery. Pirates have a deep-rooted belief that stealing valuables is much cheaper than the formality of buying or producing.

Lese majeste means accusing the English king of bigamy. The first violates etiquette and the latter violates decorum. What would Henry XIII. rise to say? Oh, fudge! Violation of etiquette and violation of decorum keeps the social pot boiling.

Children of wrath means those who are mad about square deals, plumbs and levels.

Sociology offers a rich field to the philosophical genus homo, but it is hazardous digging in the land of the Mikado.

Sociology sets the pace for all other ologies, by golly.

Socialism is so contrary to capitalism that most people think it must be contrary to human nature.

Capitalists love to declare dividends-ego, they should learn to love Socialism.

DEATHS AND DIVIDENDS.

When the painter Millias first exhibited his famous picture entitled "Bubbles" crowds of people could be seen daily struggling to obtain a view—of what? A boy sitting on a box watching the last bubble he had blown ascend. The picture was so real that the crowd appeared to wait for the bubble to burst. This was impossible, because it was only the thoughts of a gifted man painted on canvas. There is a painting in the South of Patrick Henry delivering his famous speech before the legislature of Virginia. Patriots view the scene and become inspired with historical memories, while others consider the man and not the principle involved.

Some of us have been watching stationary bubbles too long. Let us begin to draw inspirations from sources that stand to save the race from the greed of capitalism. For instance, there are 12,000 railway mail clerks who had to pass a physical and mental examination to obtain their positions. Every day these servants of the people ride in cars built by the railroad corporations for a few hundred dollars, and rented to the government (the people) for thousands of dollars per year. These mail cars are mere flimsy egg-shell death-traps. When a collision occurs the result means that the occupants of the mail car will be crushed and mangled to death.

When the government builds a battleship she sends inspectors to see that the work is done right. These are used to destroy life. Considering the recorded horrible experiences of the past is it not time for the government to build mail cars that will protect life?

When some of these public servants lose their life it means starvation for their families, for the railroads own the courts. Between the low, atrocious acts of claim agents, and the interpretations of the Fellow Servants Act, by corporation-owned judges, why talk of justice? Listen to what President Taft once said of the courts:

"The one thing which disgraces our civilization today is the delays of civil and criminal justice, and these delays always work in favor of the man with the longest purse."—President Taft, in an address before the Rochester Chamber of Commerce, March 18, 1910.

The railroads own and control the industrial destinies of this republic. They dared Congress to interfere with the rate legislation. Congress heard the rumblings of the people, and Congress disobeyed its masters. What are they doing today in retaliation? Decreasing the working force. This means a decreased spending power. Increasing the division points, increasing the hauling capacity, buying iron and steel and discarding flesh and blood. They are sending orders to the subordinate officials, "Reduce your running expenses." "The dilapidated condition of the motive power will not stand it." Comes the reply, "Your resignation has been accepted and your successor will arrive on the next train."

Decreased force naturally means decreased attention to motive power, and the majority of corporation murders occur because employes have to take risks for fear of losing their jobs.

Listen to this statement from a leading writer:

"In twenty-one years the percentage of employes killed or injured on the railroads of the United States has nearly doubled. At the rate the railroads were killing and maiming employes in 1888, it would have taken thirty-two years to have killed or injured all the men on their rolls at that time. At the present rate it would take only seventeen years to kill or injure all the employes now on the rolls. If the number of railroad employes remains constant for fifteen years, 1,300,000 men, at the present mortality rate, will be killed or injured. But the number, of course, will greatly increase. It is, therefore, probably no exaggeration to say that, unless the railroads radically improve their present methods of safeguarding their employes' lives, they will either kill or injure, within the next fifteen years, not far from 2,000,000 men."

You can "white lead" your engines and put them away in silence. But can you silence the cravings and ravings of the hungry industrial mobs that you are daily creating, Mr. Railroad King? Remember that while we are only working half time we have to eat full time. The finger of guilt points at your door. To make dividends to appease parasitical foreign investors you are daily allowing the travelling public to risk LIFE and LIMB on the rail. But what do you care for deaths? Dividends, dividends, that is your only thought, Mr. Capitalist. Let us quit this "bubble" business. Let the people own the railroads, and then they will be owned for use and not for profit.

JIM HENDERSON.

THE MEXICAN SITUATION.

PROCLAMATION!

Withdraw The Troops!

On the 7th day of March the startling news was flashed from one end of the country to the other that President Taft had ordered 20,000 troops, one-fourth of the regular army of the country, to be mobilized and hurried to the Mexican border. At the same time several America warships were ordered to proceed at full speed to ports on both coasts of Mexico.

The order was issued immediately after the adjournment of Congress. It was sudden and unexpected, and caused deep apprehension among the masses of the American people.

What is the object of this formidable military display? What is the meaning of this hurried movement of troops toward a friendly neighboring country?

The earlier explanation that the extraordinary measure was intended as a mere war game was so clumsy and palpably insincere that it was speedily abandoned, and the semi-official explanation now vouchsafed to the people is that our army and navy are to prevent the smuggling of arms to the Mexican insurrectionists and, in case of emergency, to protect the endangered American interests. The explanation is such as to cause every peace and liberty loving American to hang his head with shame.

The people of our sister state of Mexico are in open and active revolt against their government. During his uninterrupted rule of thirty-six years Porfirio Diaz, the nominal president of Mexico, has been the evil genius of his country. He has reduced the republic to a despotism more barbarous than Russia, and has constituted himself the absolute autocrat of his people. He has ruthlessly destroyed the freedom of suffrage, speech, press and assembly, and has exiled, imprisoned and assassinated all patriots who strove to restore the liberties of the people. He has ravaged the country, plundered its resources and enslaved millions of its inhabitants. Since 1875, when Diaz became military dictator of Mexico, there has not been a single free and honest election in the country.

Porfirio Diaz has been able to maintain his infamous rule over fifteen million outraged subjects by aid of his soldiery, police and camarilla, and largely also through the powerful support of the American capitalist interests. Mexico, with its vast deposits of precious metals and other natural wealth, Mexico with its large supply of cheap and uncomplaining slave labor, Mexico with the arbitrary and lawless reign of the Dollar, has become the paradise of the American capitalist. It has been invaded by our Smelter Trust and Oil Trust, our Sugar Trust, Rubber Trust and Cordage Trust. The Wells-Fargo Express Company has acquired a monopoly of the Mexican express business, and the railroads, land and mines of the country are largely in the hands of American capitalists. The Rockefellers, Guggenheims and J. Pierpont Morgan have vast holdings in Mexico; Henry W. Taft, brother of the President of the United States, is general counsel for the National Railways of Mexico, and hundreds of other American trust magnates are heavily interested in Mexican enterprises. The total amount of "American" holdings in Mexico is variously in Mexico is variously estimated at between a billion and a billon and a half dollars.

These American "investors" have always been the staunchest allies of Porfirio Diaz, his partners in pillage and crime, his confederates in the enslavement of the Mexican people.

A reign of iniquity and violence such as was matained by Diaz and his Wall Street partners no nation, and be it ever so patient and meek, could endure for any length of time. The people of Mexico have for years been in a state of smothered and smouldering revolt. Their limit of patience was reached after the last presidential election, when Francisco I. Madero, the man who had the courage to oppose his candidacy to that of Diaz, was cast into jail for "insulting the President," the citizens were prevented from voting by violence, and the "election" of Diaz for the eighth term was brazenly proclaimed by his henchmen. Then the people of Mexico rebelled. In all parts of the country the citizens rose in arms, determined to reconquer their liberty or to die, even as our forefathers had done over a century ago under slighter provocation. The insurrection grew in strength and extension day by day; the Mexican people were solidly with the rebels, the Mexican army was wavering in its allegiance to the despot in the presidential chair; even the censored press dispatches reported repeated victories of the rebel forces—the throne of Diaz was tottering, freedom beckoned the people of Mexico after a generation of servitude. Then the President of the United States dispatched a large force of troops to the Mexican border.

The mission of the American army at the Mexican border and the American warships at the Mexican coasts is to save the reign of Diaz and to quell the rising of the Mexican people.

Against this unspeakable outrage the Socialist party of the United States, representing over six hundred thousand American citizens and voters, lodges its public and emphatic protest.

In the name of America's revolutionary past and her best traditions of the present we protest against the attempt to degrade our country by reducing it to the position of a Cossack of a foreign tyrant.

In the name of liberty and progress we protest against the use of the army of our republic to suppress and enslave the people of a sister republic, fighting for their freedom and manhood.

In the name of the workers of the United States we protest against the use of the men and money of this country for the protection of the so-called "American" interests in Mexico. We assert that neither the government nor the people of the United States have any property interests in Mexico; that the speculative Mexican ventures of a ring of American industrial free-booters gives us no warrant to interfere with the political destinies of the country, which they have invaded upon their individual responsibility.

AND WE CALL UPON ALL LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS OF THE SOCIALIST PARTY, AND ALL LABOR UNIONS AND OTHER BODIES OF PROGRESSIVE CITIZENS, TO HOLD PUBLIC MEETINGS AND DEMONSTRATIONS OF PROTEST AGAINST THE LATEST EXECUTIVE CRIME. LET THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE RESOUND FROM ONE END OF THE COUNTRY TO THE OTHER IN LOUD AND UNMISTAKABLE TONE: "WITHDRAW THE TROOPS FROM THE MEXICAN BORDER."

SOME DEFINITIONS

A legislator is the only man who can tell whether or not a law ought to be passed.

An executive is the only man who can tell whether or not it ought to be enforced.

A judge is the only man who can tell whether or not it has been violated.

A lawyer is the only man who can tell how it may be violated with impunity.

A laymen is one who cannot possible know anything about a law without seeing a lawyer.

A criminal is one who would rather take chances than see a lawyer.—Life.

Something New in Good Clothes

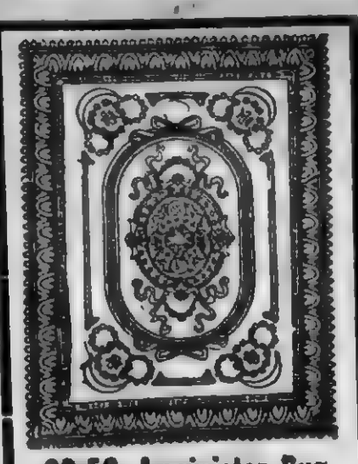
The term "good clothes" is hardly descriptive of our Spring lines—they're really the best clothes made.

Season after season their superiorities have been proven.

You have but to see our stock to understand why this is so.

The way Union Coats fit around the neck, the shapeliness of every detail—all testify to the care and skill of the makers.

And Adler-Rochester cloth experts command the "new" in every material. There is the choice of the most fashionable patterns and shades.



So it is in Adler-Rochesters you get what is unusual in clothes—individuality.

Columbus Federation of Labor.

Vice President H. Peck in the chair, Secretary H. Mers at the desk. Communications were received from the Ohio Federation of Labor, United Mine Workers and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen relating to the endorsement of the minority report of the Employers' Liability Commission.

The majority report is known as House Bill No. 282, introduced by Mr. Black of Ashland county. This bill, No. 282, takes away all your rights under the Metzger and Norris laws to sue for damages and gives you in their place a cheap compensation law, which insures employers against all liability for accidents causing injuries or death. This bill makes it possible for the employer to refuse to comply with all the safety laws passed for your benefit and kill and maim all the workmen he pleases provided he pays his insurance premium into the state fund.

The minority report presented by Mr. Winans, the labor member of the commission, is known as House Bill No. 271, introduced by Mr. Thomas, of Wood county, and a member of the Executive Board of the O. F. of L. This bill No. 271, drawn at our request, protects and safeguards your lives and limbs and retains all the privileges you now enjoy under the Metzger and Norris laws, and leaves it to you to elect whether you want to accept the compensation provided or otherwise sue for the larger amount these laws provide for you. This minority bill (H. B. No. 271) has been unanimously recommended for passage by the committee to which it was referred, and is now on the calendar and liable to come up for passage any day.

Mr. Harry Thomas, secretary of the Ohio Federation of Labor was given the floor, and spoke on the question of the past and present standing of the State Federation. From a legislative standpoint, the State Federation is now keeping a record of all those who are unfair to labor legislation. Many of the strongest unions have become members of the state body during the last two months. Brother Thomas urged the delegates to prepare for the Constitutional Convention. The body afterward took action along these lines. Brother Ike Byrum, legislative agent, appealed to the delegates to be present at the legislative public hearings. The Columbus Board of Commerce representatives were given the floor to explain the plans and intentions of the proposed Park and Boulevard Commission. The earnest expressions of the committee won frequent applause for the speakers. The request was placed in the hands of the legislative committee.

A committee of five was elected as a committee to arange for centralized headquarters, as follows: E. F. Gordon, Painters; J. T. Liddy, Iron Trades; Geo. Prehm, Brewery Workers; G. Dimmel, Miscellaneous Section; G. M. Suddick, Building Trades.

The organization committee reported encouraging progress. Senator Todd of Franklin county was reported unfair to labor's interests. Labor should watch the gentleman's future acts. Delegate Hauck reported arrangements made for the Label Show. Body approved the recommendation of the executive committee relative to having section attendance blanks changed.

Delegate C. C. Apple, of the Barbers, reported the placing of shop cards in many non-union shops. Chair requested that the Barbers' Union give organized Labor a list of the fair shops.

Retail Clerks requested demand for their union card. The Iron Trades' section requested the active co-operation of all the allied crafts for the purpose of effecting a complete organization. Meeting adjourned, to meet March 27.

CARPENTERS DISTRICT COUNCIL.

Everything is moving along merrily with the Carpenters and if present indications count for aught we will soon be on a stronger footing than we were wont to picture ourselves in our most sanguine moments. At every meeting of the District Council a full quota of delegates are always present and a lively enthusiasm shown in the work of the organization. Many matters of vital interest come before us and we are gradually getting everything lined up for a successful campaign during the season now opening up.

It is our aim to strengthen our organization by the addition of every eligible carpenter within our jurisdiction, and it behooves every union man to put his shoulder to the wheel and do his mite with all his might.

The By-Laws have been recently overhauled and amended to better meet present requirements, and it is a safe bet that the District Council will enforce them to the letter. On May 1 the initiation fee will be raised to $15, and in anticipation of the raise many carpenters will avail themselves of the present low fee, which is only $5, and the next few weeks prior to that time will see a large umber of applications in the two locals.

That the brothers on the outside are awakening to a better appreciation of their real position and condition is evident by their renewed interest in our (and their) organization. Applications are being received constantly from among their ranks and there is hardly a union man who does not report having met with numbers of our non-union brothers who have either signified their intention of making application to one of the locals or have shown an interest that adds to the bright outlook before us.

It is certainly high time they were suffering an awakening, for who can depict a more deplorable condition than these same non-union brothers find themselves in? They are at the mercy of a coterie of cheap contractors, whose only aim is to get out of them all there is in them for a wage, in some cases, far below our union standard, with no reciprocal favors in return. In short, they are up against it good and plenty and that they have not shown a disposition to get into their organization—where they belong—long ere this speaks volumes for their stupidity.

H. A. BROOKE.

CARPENTERS WILL MEET.

Local Unions 61 and 494 have held one joint meeting to discuss betterment of conditions, and another one is scheduled to be held at 494's hall, 71½ East State street, next Friday evening. All members of the organization are invited to be present. Trade is as good as could be expected at this season and the prospects are bright.

AN INTERESTING DEBATE.

Two teams representing the Universities of Illinois and Ohio, on March 10, debated the question: "Resolved, That each state of the Union should enact laws providing for compulsory arbitration of labor disputes."

The arguments were well balanced. The much vexed question of what is meant by a "just wage" became an important issue in the discussion. With many of the audience it was more than interesting because they realized that when a court is called upon to decide a point of equity a portion of the disputed thing must go to pay the adjuster for his services. Some of the craft unions establish the minimum wage scale by the cost of subsistence, allowing the maximum to accrue to personal enterprise and ability. Let it be known that we, the workers, have little if any faith at all in the judiciary. Not that we do not believe in law, but because of misinterpretations of the law.

One noticeable feature with the audience was the eagerness of the mind to b relieved of a thinking strain. This occurred when one of the debaters used the words "screen doors." It proved the fact that even in academic circles popular and practical illustrations give the mind something to cling to. We congratulate the faculty and students on their victory. The affirmative side of the question won. Let us hope that some day we shall learn to give unto Caesar the things that are Caesars. By Caesar we mean all the people, and the act of dispensation will be the Golden Rule.

THE STRICKLANDS ARE GIVEN AN OVATION

BOARD OF TRADE IS CROWDED WITH ENTHUSIASTIC AUDIENCE.

The fifth lecture of the Chicago Daily Socialist Lyceum Course was given last Tuesday evening by Fred G. and May M. Strickland, and was a splendid tribute to these able and efficient comrades. The auditorium was crowded and th affair was a combination of a propaganda meeting and a personal ovation. The Stricklands were at their best, and no detailed report would do justice to their addresses. The Ohio State Journal had the following to say:

"We are not very patriotic when we see men asked to join the army that is going down to Mexico to hold up the hands of President Diaz while he robs his people," said Rev. Frederick Guy Strickland, formerly of Anderson, Ind., in an address last night at the Chamber of Commerce on "Socialism."

"We are not very patriotic when our boys are asked to go with the militia to Columbus to uphold the interests that are against the people," he added, but, when it comes to loving our country—that's us."

Strickland is credited with being one of the most powerful Socialist speakers on the platform and occupies the unique position of having given up the ministry to carry on what he considers a "greater work."

His wife, Mrs. May Strickland, gave a talk to women who were present, telling them of their part of the work in making Socialists of men and reciting poems appropriate to the occasion.

Rev. Mr. Strickland hurled verbal shrapnel into the ministry for continuing to plead in their pulpits against a double standard of morals for men and women and, at the same time, not espousing Socialism. "One standard of morals for men and women," he said, "will never be accepted until woman, through Socialism, has been given political and economic equality with man and is not dependent upon him for her bread and butter."

That Milwaukee was the first and Columbus will be the second large city to vote for a Socialist administration was the observation and prophecy of Rev. Mr. Strickland.

BROWN COUNTY VOTE.

Following the election last November the official report was made that no Socialist votes were cast in Brown county.

A. B. Shinn, state organizer, was sent to Brown county by the state office to make an investigation.

A careful tabulation of the poll-books and tally-sheets from the various voting precincts in Brown county was made and Socialist votes recorded on the tally-sheets were as follows: Huntington, 2; Union, 1; Aberdeen, 8; Jefferson, 2; Jackson, 2; Eagle, 7; Franklin, 1; Lewis, 3; Pleasant, 2; Georgetown, 1; Homersville, 1; Pike, 2; Pardwell, 1; Sterling, 2; Perry, 1.

A. J. Kierskadden, clerk of courts for Brown county, made and attached to the above report the following certificate, under seal of the court, as clerk:

I, A. J. Kierskadden, clerk of courts in and for Brown county, State of Ohio, hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct statement of the Socialist vote in Brown county, Ohio as taken from the poll-books and tally-sheets of the November election, 1910, in said county and state, as taken from said books in presence of A. B. Shinn, of Lancaster, Ohio, and Jessie T. Werrick, of Georgetown, Ohio.

(Signed) A. J. KIERSKADDEN,
Clerk of Courts for Brown County.
Dated March 8, 1910.

In addition to securing a certified report of the vote, Comrade Shinn organs a local at Macon as a protest against the action of counting out votes.

BELIEVING IN OUR LUCK.

We can not hope to make much headway in any work which we may undertake unless we believe in it with our whole heart and soul. We must feel that the cause in which we labor is a just one and therefore worthy of our most earnest endeavors, else true success can never be attained, and besides, the pride we take in demonstrating the correctness of our belief compensates in large measure for any extraordinary hardships we may experience. It is one thing to apply ourselves in an aimless way, content to do that which is actually required of us and let the rest go, and quite another to put out whole being into the task that is set for us, and no matter in whose service we may labor to make that task reflect our own individuality and our own enthusiasm as far as possible.—Exchange.

A WELL-GOWNED WOMAN.

(From Lydia Lipkowska's article, "Nursery Terrors," in The Woman's Journal.)

Individuality should be the keynote in dress, and simplicity is the cornerstone of good taste. But, whatever the case may be, I fail to see what woman's dress has to do with woman's rights. I love pretty things; I love my dresses and my hats, and I find joy in choosing materials and visiting dressmakers; but I do it primarily because it is a source of pleasure to me, and I would no more consider men's desires in the matter than I would think of issuing an ukase as to how men should dress. Still, I am an ardent suffragist, and I hold that, as long as we women are willing to grant the right to vote even to a man who does not know how to carry himself in an evening dress, men should not advance as a reason against woman suffrage their fear of spoiling the feast for their eyes usually provided by a crowd of prettily-dressed women.

In this respect Europe is far more advanced than America. The opponents of equal rights there have long since discarded trivial contentions, and have begun to see that, as women grow in power as an industrial factor, man can hold his supremacy only by sheer force. They no longer argue, for they see that logic is not on their side, and so they rely on the old adage that "possession is nine-tenths of the law."

Women hope also, and, unless mankind ceases to develop as it has hitherto, woman suffrage will become an established fact, for slavery has no place in civilization.

WOMEN AS POLICE.

There are many women who would make admirable police—policewomen one might call them. Rev. Anna Shaw, president of the National League of Suffragists, is presumed to be cracking one of her jokes in saying that she has wanted to be a member of the police force all her life, and that as soon as women vote in New York she will seek an appointment. She was, however, more serious in saying that 1,000 women should be employed in that capacity in a city of New York's size. While it would be absurd to suppose that an entire police force could advantageously dispense with men, it is mere custom or superstition that makes us ordinarily take it for granted that a policewomen is a sheer impossibility. There are special kinds of work, particularly in relation to their own sex, which women guardians of the peace could do to advantage. Nor is it incredible that much of the "law and ordering" now left to men could be quite as well performed by uniformed women, armed with badges investing them with the authority of the state. At least three-quarters of the fear inspired by the police among potential disturbers of the peace is due to the popular realization that the whole power of the state is behind them. Even to resist arrest is a crime. A policewoman on a street crossing could stop traffic by a wave of her baton as quickly as a policeman. In London the police force is not provided with firearms; it is the prestige of a body which has the king's government back of them that keeps London in security. Of course, no one would send women to lug a fighting drunkard or to storm a den of desperate burglars and thugs at midnight. Men would still have their uses. But women on a police force are by no means unthinkable.—Springfield Republican.

THE MOST OFFENSIVE TYPE.

It is a pity that there is not some punishment which can be meted out to one of the most offensive types of women that exist—a type that nearly every neighborhood unfortunately knows—the woman who takes for her life creed the fatal words, "I thought it was my duty to tell you," and spends her days confusing what she covers over by the much burdened word "duty" with what is nothing more or less than the pettiest spite or the most malicious curiosity, and a desire to gossip and meddle in other people's affairs. It is bad enough when this woman inflicts suffering upon older people, but it is, unfortunately, all too often the case that this type of woman picks out little children or young people as marks for her degenerate tongue. Particularly happy is this gossip-loving woman when she can tell some happy child that the woman she thinks is her real mother is only her stepmother, or that she is an adopted child. "I though it was only fair to you to know," she says, and in goes the poison into a contented mind, and the mischief-maker goes on her way serenely.

How wrongly we classify what we call unpardonable sins. Most of them are shining white virtues compared with the contemptible trait that spreads suffering and pain under the creed of "I though it was my duty to tell you," and that really hungers to watch the effect that its disclosures have upon its victims, for God, for some reason best known to himself, did create some women who would not miss giving pain to others for anything.—Ladies' Home Journal.

THE TEACHING OF SEX HYGIENE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Senate Bill No. 125 provides for the teaching of the subject of sex hygiene and of the contagious sexual diseases. This is to be done in the eighth grammar grade and high schools in city schools. It must be done by competent persons, chosen by the local school boards. The sexes are to be taught in separate classes.

Nothing is more sure to come out right than the knowledge of simple truth. Boys and girls want to become healthy men and women. Only healthy men and women are happy, only they can produce healthy children. This bill seeks to give them exact knowledge and sensible advice at the time they are becoming men and women. Parents do not teach this subject, because they do not know its truths, nor its importance, and because theey have a false sense of modesty.

The science of being a healthy man or woman is worth knowing. It can be taught in a half dozen lessons. It is worth the time.

The sons and daughters of workingmen leave the graded school or high school and go to work. Both sexes work together in factories, with no care taken of their morals, and many go wrong. These young people should be given instructions how to care for themselves. They should have early instruction while they are innocent and healthy.

There are two sexual diseases that are of importance: One of them is the third, after tuberculosis and pneumonia, as the direct cause of death. But still worse, it causes insanity and paralysis in its victims, and idiocy, blindness and general bad health in their children. The other disease is even more prevalent. Once well started, it can seldom be cured. Most of the operations on women at hospitals are made necessary by it; and yet most of these victims are innocent. It causes sterility in both men and women. This is plain talk, but it is true.

The bill puts the question of teaching in the hands of competent men and women, chosen by the local school boards. This is fair to both sexes, since both men and women are equal at school elections. This puts the responsibility of correct management of this delicate subject where it belongs—with the common people. The bill should be passed. Then people should know this subject. The young men and women should be taught. This disgrace of ignorance, vice and disease should be wiped out by education.

RUSSIAN GIRLS.

A recent book on the Russian novelist, Turgenef, by J. A. Lloyd, expresses the opinion that Turgenef must have had more esteem for the character of the young women of Russia than of the young men. "These Russian girls in the novels of Turgenef are not waiting for a Prince Charming to win them by some flattering caress. On the contrary, they await a leader who is engaged in the actual struggle with misery and pain. To him, if only he is the right man, they will gladly dedicate their lives, sacrificing all their guarded youthfulness and their protected beauty."—Exchange.

MAUDE ADAMS AN EXAMPLE.

Maude Adams is valuable, not only because of what she does, but because of her influence upon others. Her success, based on absolutely conscientious effort, is an incentive and an inspiration to thousands of other women. Only a few days since, a young actress, beginning her career hopefully, was asked to take the leading part in a play unpleasant in its character, immoral in its teachings. Her very sane reply was, "I have no Maude Adams in my mind. She never played a part that her own mother or father would not have wanted to see her play; she is at the head of her profession, and if I ever get there I am going to get there in the same way."

Maude Adams is one of the actresses who have declared themselves in favor of equal suffrage.—Woman's Journal.

MARY O'REILLY SHOWS MENACE TO BOY SCOUT AGITATION.

Do you believe in the Boy Scout movement?, women of the working class? Do you think the ideals it puts before your boys are good ideals? Do you believe that military training will make them manly? Of course, you don't! There were no women upon the committee which organized the Boy Scouts of Chicago. Moreover, admission was refused to a woman sent by the Chicago Teachers' Federation to investigate the movement. In answer to the question, "Have you any women on your committee—any mothers—any teachers?" the army captain on guard at the door asked, "What have women to do with war?" Since that day women have been busy with the Boy Scout movement. Much publicity has been given to their opposition. Socialist and labor unions also have been active in showing the people the meaning of this latest effort to fix the military idea in the minds of the youth of the nation. It is necessary, however, that this effort be met by something positive. A negative attitude is never convincing. Feeling this, some of our Socialist comrades have advocated the organization of "Socialist Boy Scouts" for active work in the Socialist movement. A study of the Boy Scout movement will show, we believe, that this is a mistake. We ask our comrades to think it over carefully, and, if we are right, to aid us in preventing not only the spread of the movement, but also in preventing the teaching of the military ideal in any way. The labor movement has nothing to gain from borrowing any of the trappings or phraseology of the military state.

"VOTE FOR THE BEST MAN."

The newly enfranchised women of Washington mean to use their votes intelligently, and have called a meeting of the women voters of Tacoma, to organize a local educational society to instruct the women in their new responsibilities. Their idea, as outlined by Mrs. Danforth, is to educate the newly-enfranchised women in civic principles. This is the proper measure, no doubt, but when such instructions as these are given, "Vote for the best man, regardless of party," then the best and most expedient thing for them to do is to first take up a careful and systematic study of the different political parties and see whether or not there can be any "best men" for their cause outside of the Socialist party. The Socialists believe in woman's rights without any restrictions whatsoever, and until that party comes into power women will continue to be relegated to the rear, politically.

THE TRUTH ABOUT TORTOISE SHELL COMBS.

How many women who possess real shell combs know that the shell is obtained from the back of the living turtle, by a process which tortures the animal with excruciating pain? Burning charcoal is applied to the turtle's back, causing the outer shell to curl upward; it is then forced off with a knife. After this barbarous operation the victim is allowed to sink its native element, but is always afterward sickly and languishing.

WOMEN WAR AGAINST THE PRIZE FIGHT LAW.

Olympia, Wash.—The women of Washington, who recently were granted suffrage, scored another victory in politics, and dealt Tommy Burns, former heavyweight champion pugilist of the world, a knockout blow today when they secured the defeat in the Senate by a vote of 22 to 19 of the "Tommy Burns" bill to legalise prize fighting.—Exchange.

EVERY EIGHT MINUTES.

There are 300,000 "fallen" girls and women in houses of shame in our country. They have been got there through the trickery and wiles of those engaged in the traffic in girls, and the environment resulting from the immoral condition of society. Their average life is but five years; thus 60,000 girls are dragged down to this life every year, 5,000 every month, 170 every day; or a young life blasted in our land every eight minutes.—The Light.

PRIZE FIGHTS STOPPED.

A dispatch from Seattle says: "Chief of Police Banick today forbade the holding of two widely-advertised prize fights. All ladies' entrance' signs have been removed from saloon doors, and curtains and boxes from barrooms and restaurants. The work of clearing up the city, following the recent recall election, in which women's votes were a large factor in ousting Mayor Hiram C. Gill, is actively under way."

There seems to be a rivalry between Ohio and New York, each of them claiming to have a chance to be the sixth state to grant the right of suffrage to women. Ohio suffragists are wearing a button with the legend, "Ohio, the Sixth State," and this week in New York the same button is worn.—Exchange.

FRANCES WILLARD ON SOCIALISM.

Look about you: the products of labor are on every hand; you could not maintain for a moment a well-ordered life without them; every object in your rooms has in it, for discerning eyes, the mark of ingenious tools and the pressure of labor's hands. But is it not the cruelest injustice for the wealthy, whose lives are surrounded and embellished by labor's work, to have a superabundance of the money which represents the aggregate of labor in any country, while the laborer himself is kept so steady at work that he has no time to acquire the education and refinements of life that would make him and his family agreeable companions to the rich and cultured? The reason why I am a Socialist comes in just here: I would take, by the slow process of lawful acquisition through better legislation as the outcome of a wiser ballot in the hands of men and women, the entire plant that we call civilization, all that has been achieved on this continent in the four hundred years since Columbus wended his way hither, and make it the common property of all the people, requiring all to work with their hands to give them the finest physical development, but not to become burdensome in any case, and permitting all to share alike the advantages of education and refinement. I believe this to be perfectly practical; indeed, that any other method is simply a relic of barbarism.

I believe that competition is doomed. The trust, whose single object is to abolish competition, has proved that we are better without than with it, and the moment corporations control the supply or anw product they combine. What the Socialist desires is that the corporation of humanity should control all production. Beloved comrades, this is the frictionless way; it is the higher way; it eliminates the motives for a selfish life; it enacts into our every-day living the ethics of Christ's gospel. Nothing else will do it; nothing else can bring the glad day of universal brotherhood!

Oh, that I were young again, and it would have my life. It is God's way out of the wilderness and into the promised land. It is the very marrow of Christ's gospel. It is Christianity applied.

NEW YORK JEERS AT THE HAREM SKIRT.

The harem skirt has met the same fate in the United States as in Paris and Madrid. The young women who attempted to startle New York with the new mode were forced to seek shelter in a taxicab from a jeering crowd, which followed them down Fifth avenue.

Benjamin Hampton says there are just three magazines in this country today not susceptible to Wall Street control. A current issue of his magazine is not being sold because it contains an article distasteful to the Standard Oil, and the Union News Company had orders not to sell it. Was there ever a time more auspicious for the workers of the world to unite?

Socialism is the only bright spot on the horizon of mother love today, and in the triumph of the principles of Socialism the mother will, for the first time in history, be able to rear her little ones without the fears of hunger, separation, crime, disgrace and poverty that always have hung over them. —Progressive Woman.

Christiania.—The Norwegian cabinet has adopted a resolution providing for the admission of women to all state offices, except those having to do with the cabinet and the military, diplomatic and consular services and the church.—Exchange.

Even in Hawaii women seem tohave been advancing out of the old-time lines of work. Mrs. Emma M. Nakuina is a water rights commissioner under the territorial government of Hawaii. She is an American woman, and lives at Kalihi.—Exchange.

IN A SWEATSHOP.

Pent in, and sickening for one wholesome draught
Of all—God's gift that all cities sell so dear,
They stitch and stitch. The dim light falls upon
Bent bodies, hollowed bosoms, and dead eyes.
Their very mirth is horrible to hear.
If 'is no joyless. Every needle-stroke
Knits into dainty fabrics that shall go
Where the fashion flaunts the protest and the pain.
Of ravaged lives, of souls denied their food.
At last the clock-stroke. From the beetling shop
The prisoners file, and up and down the street
Scatter to hutches humorists call home.
To sin, to die, or, if it maybe, clutch
Some pleasure fierce enough to drown the thought
That on the morrow they must meet again.

MOTHER NATURE'S BABES IN THE WOOD.

(By E. M. Harding.)

On the trees, the bushes, and under the ground, at this season are flowers and leaves asleep, and almost ready to awaken. Dame Nature is nurse to them all, and while they slept she has kept them dry and warm.

If you pick a short branch from a tree or shrub, you will see upon it, at regular distances apart, little knobs or humps. These are the buds of leaves and blossoms which will soon awaken and unfold, and fill the earth with perfume and beauty.

If Jack Frost had got at them, or if the cold rains had beaten on them, they would have been blighted. So the buds have been carefully protected all winter from the cold, the damp and the fierce winds.

Each bud is wrapped up in a number of little stiff scales. Often these scales are coated with a sort of varnish, which keeps out the wet.

The buds of the horse-chestnut are "pitched without with pitch," like the floating cradle of the infant Moses. They are quite stick to the touch, and shed water like a rubber coat.

Indeed, we may say that the baby horse-chestnut leaves wear fur-lined waterproof coats, for the scales which are so sticky on the outside are thickly lined with soft, white down.

Many other buds are protected from wet and cold in the same manner.

The tiny locust and sumach leaves are guarded during their winter sleep in yet another way. They are hid so cleverly that Jack Frost can not find them, and it would puzzle us, also, to find them unless we knew just where to look.

Those of the sumach are sunk in the thick bark until they begin to grow, and those of the honey-locust are buried deep in those humps from which the thorns appear to spring. Crocuses, anemones, daffodils, and all the other spring flowers which grow straight up out of the ground have been protected under a covering of soil and dead leaves.

Some leaves and blossoms are already awakening from their winer sleep. The rest will finish their slumbers soon, and once awake they will begin to grow in the most surprising way.

We have all read, in "The Arabian Nights," how a gigantic genie came out of a small pickle-jar. If we look about us this spring, we will see this wonder outdone by any hedgerow.

These lilac buds are no longer than the tip of a woman's little finger; yet some of them contain a spray with several leaves, and from others there will come a great spire of flowers.

The sticky horse-chestnut buds will open to let out into the sun four or five great spreading leaves, surrounding a pyramid of blossoms.

How snugly they are folded away in these little brown buds! No shopman could wrap parcels half so cleverly as Mother Nature does. No French maid ever packed her mistress' finery with half the skill which Nature has shown in the folding of baby blossom or tender leaf.

Girls know that dresses which have been lying for a long time folded away in a drawer or trunk are creased when they are taken out.

So are the leaves, when they come out of the buds where they have been tightly folded for so many months. After a while the breezes will shake out all these little wrinkles, but when the foliage is new and fresh we can see them plainly.

Some leaves have been rolled like music in a portable case, or like a windowshade around its roller. Some have been folded like fans, and some have been doubled lengthwise down the middle as a schoolgirl folds her composition. May-apple leaves come up looking like closed umbrellas, and then open just as umbrellas do. The crinkled spring foliage is very pretty and interesting, too; for the creases show how Mother Nature contrived to get so many leaves into so small a parcel.

And where is the food that has been prepared for these awakening buds? Growing leaves and flowers, like growing children, need plenty of nourishment, and Dame Nature has provided whole storehouses full of food just such as young foliage and baby blossoms need.

The crocus and the daffodil get their food from little storehouses underground.

If we dig up a root early in spring, before the flowers have opened, we shall find it white, firm, round and fat. The flower-stem is able to shoot up so fast because it is nourished by this abundant good fare, just as a boy who is outgrowing all his clothes is doing it by means of unnumbered breakfasts, dinners and suppers. The blossom owes much of its beauty to this stored food; and if the supply were to give out, the colors of the flowers would grow dim.

By the time the blossom dies the little storehouse will be emptied, but then the crocus will have formed long leaves and active roots, and will be able to gather enough nourishment from the soil and the air to satisfy all its wants.

The lilac leaves grow so fast because they are well fed on food which has been saved on purpose for them all winter long. It has been stored away just under the bark, so that the lilac's storehouse is in its branches.

All the boughs which are now beginning to put forth leaves and flowers are full of gum and sap. Those juices have been "saved up" all winter in the wood and bark, and now they feed the swelling buds, the unfolding leaves and the opening flowers.

There is plenty for all, and each is getting just the sort of food it needs, for Nature, like a wise and loving mother, guards the slumbers and provides for the wants of all her children.

A SUPERIOR ANCESTOR.

A Western buyer is inordinately proud of the fact that one of his ancestors affixed his name to the Declaration of Independence. At the time the salesman called, the buyer was signing a number of checks and affixed his signature with many a curve and flourish. The salesman's patience becoming exhausted in waiting for the buyer to recognize him, he finally observed:

"You have a fine signature, Mr. Blank."

"Yes," admitted the buyer, "I should have one. One of my forefathers signed the Declaration of Independence."

"So?" said the caller, with rising inflection. "Well, you aind't got nottings on me. One of my forefathers signed the Ten Commandments."—From Playthings.

MARCH.

(By Katherine Pyle.)

It was raining hard when I went to bed;
The creek was over its bank, they said,

And in the morning far and wide
The meadows were flooded on every side;

There was water over the yard below,
And it looked like a place I did not know:

The wind swept by with a rushing sound,
And the dog-house floated around and round.

When father went out to the barn that day,
I thought he'd surely be swept away.

In long gum-boots he stepped from the door,
And the water was up to his knees and more.

I thought, if the flood should never go down,
We'd build a boat and row to town.

For there we would buy our bread and meat
And pies and all things good to eat.
And living here for all our days
We would almost be like castaways.

QUITE A SINGER.

(By Malcolm Douglas.)

A little man, pressed for a song,
Could not be induced by the throng
"I'm sorry" he said,
With a shake of his head,
"But I've not brought my music along.

"It's a pity it happens just so,
For you'd all like my tenor, I know;
So high it can rise
That I oft close my eyes,
So terribly dizzy I grow.

"The musical scale, as you see,
Has the letters from A up to G;
And, if it were set
Through the whole alphabet,
I believe I could go up to E!"

THE SHAMROCK.

Thou gladsome first-born of the spring,
To thee a humble song I sing—
Let not my ode bemock—
Thy smile my kisses warm beguile,
Sweet leaflet of the Emerald Isle,
Brave-faced little Shamrock!

Thy hue awakens the patriot's fire;
Thy form inspires the poet's lyre
To varied minstrelsy;
Thy healthful greenness cheers the soul;
Thy petals fearlessly unfold,
Presaging liberty.

To exiles from a native land,
As memories' messenger you stand—
Of bog and marsh and mireland,
Acushla to that land we're true,
No lovelier land beneath the blue,
Let's pledge a cup to Ireland.

—Pauline Johnson.

THE FOURTH ESTATE

Novelized by FREDERICK R. TOOMBS

From the Great Play of the Same Name by Joseph Medill Patterson and Harriet Ford.

"Go to lunch, boys," ordered Brand to the typesetters.

"We'll miss the mail," protested McHenry.

"I don't care. Go to lunch."

The compositors ceased work at the linotypes and, wondering and whispering, slowly filed out.

"Judith," Brand besought her, "won't you"—

"Listen to me, Wheeler," she broke in. "I know everything. Father has told me everything about—his—guilt. You understand what it means to me—what he is to me. You must spare him for me!"

"Judith, it's impossible."

"But it is the human thing to do. Oh, forget these ideals. Be just a man—a man who loves a woman and protects her. You do love me, I know, in spite of everything that you've done."

"Yes, I love you!" he cried fervently.

"And Wheeler, dear, I've not changed," she told him fondly. "I can see how right you mean to be in what you are trying to do, but in this you are wrong. Whatever my father may have done, his intentions were honest. He had been involved by others and when he tried to extricate himself it was too late. They, not he, were guilty. It was for their sakes, not his own, that he offered you that money, so you see you are wrong. Why, Wheeler, if you belonged to me and committed a crime I would die to shield you from the penalty."

Brand answered her quickly.

"That is wrong reasoning."

"No, no; it is right. That must always be," she cried. "It is like—like a law of life. Can't you see that too? I belong to you. Yes, I belong to you, and you should shield me. You must feel toward my father as he were your own because he is mine. It's not possible that you would do this thing to your own father. Think of him that way—your own father! You'll not regret it. I'll make it up to you with all my love for all the rest of life! Wheeler, say you will do what I ask." She broke down completely and sobbed brokenly, leaning across the form. "Oh, say you will do what I ask!"

Brand tried to raise her, but she clung to him frenziedly.

"Judith, for God's sake, don't!" he said.

"Yes, yes; you must, you shall!" She was losing all control of herself in her desperation.

"You're dragging her down to your own level."

"Judith, listen to me," he said imploringly. "I'm not the man who loves you or is loved by you. I've no right to think of you or of myself. I'm an instrument to an end in the history of a great God. Can't you see this thing as I do?"

"I can't reason. I can't argue. I can only feel."

The judge had drawn a few steps away from the pair during the scene between them. He viewed with calculating satisfaction the battle that his daughter was waging so valiantly in his behalf, and he had felt that not even the young stoic Brand could resist this powerful and final appeal of the girl he loved. At his daughter's last outcry he drew near to the editor.

"Brand, are you human?" he demanded strongly, pointing to the prostrated girl with his walking stick.

"Human, human, Judge Bartelmy!" he exclaimed. "You are true to yourself to the end. You bring your daughter here so that by torturing me with the sight of her suffering you may escape the penalty of your thievery. I was willing she should think me heartless to spare her the greater pain of knowing you as you are. But now you bring her here in her innocence to repeat to me your lies. You're degrading her, dragging her down to your own level, just as you did her mother before her. If she lets you go on using her it will be with her eyes open."

Judith raised her head amazedly.

"What are you saying?" she asked.

Brand turned to her and then to the judge.

"Why, he's lied to you just as he's lied all his life. He told you he was trying to shield others. He lied. He never shielded any one but himself. Judge Bartelmy, the power of men like you must be destroyed. When justice is corrupted the nation rots. If I keep silent about you and your methods I become your accomplice; I betray my trust just as you have betrayed yours."

Bartelmy raised his hand deprecatingly. Brand, however, drew a deep breath and went resolutely on. He spoke to both the girl and the judge.

"Judith, if at the cost of my life I could spare you this grief I would do it gladly. But even that would do no good. You would always despise me for failing when my test came and always despise yourself for having caused me to fail. Can't you see you and I are nothing in all this? The individual does not exist, only the cause. Judge Bartelmy, that story goes to press," he cried, raising his eyes to meet those of Judith's father.

Bartelmy saw that he had played his last card. It was his highest trump, but it had failed to win. What Judith could not do he surely, under the existing circumstances, could not do. Nolan, the only man who could save him if he would, had gone, he knew not where.

And it was now press time. All was over. Bartelmy took a single step toward his daughter.

"Brand, that story is my obituary," he said in low tones.

"Oh, no," was the response in saddened voice. "Men like you don't finish that way. You'll have about six hours, judge, before that story is read by the public."
